VOLUME L, PART III.

CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.

SIXTY-THIRD CONGRESS, FIRST SESSION.

SENATE.

TUESDAY, June 17, 1913.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. Forrest J. Prettyman, D. D.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read the Journal of the proceedings of the preceding session.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Crawford	O'Gorman	Smith, Mich.
Bacon	Fall	Owen	Smith, S. C.
Bankhead	Fletcher	Page	Smoot
Borah	Gallinger	Perkins	Sterling
Bradley	Gronna	Pittman	Stone
Brady	Hollis	Pomerene	Sutherland
Brandegee	James	Ransdell	Thompson
Bristow	Johnson, Me.	Robinson	Thornton
Bryan	Johnston, Ala.	Root	Tillman
Burton	Jones	Saulsbury	Townsend

Chamberlain	La Follette	Sheppard	Williams
Chilton	Lane	Sherman	Works
Clapp	McLean	Shields
Clark, Wyo.	Martin, Va.	Shively
Colt	Norris	Smith, Ariz.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Sixty-three Senators have answered to the roll call. There is a quorum present. The Secretary will read the Journal of the proceedings of the preceding session.

The Secretary proceeded to read the Journal of the proceedings of Friday last, and was interrupted by Mr. JONES. I understand it is the desire to take up the Indian appropriation bill as soon as the routine business is concluded. Therefore I have no objection to dispensing with the further reading of the Journal.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to dispensing with the further reading of the Journal? The Chair hears none, and, without objection, the Journal will stand approved.

LAND PATENTS IN THE PHILIPPINES (H. DOC. NO. 89).

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States, which was read and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on the Philippines and ordered to be printed:

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

I submit herewith Act No. 2222 of the third Philippine Legislature, entitled:

An act further to amend section 33, chapter 4, of Act No. 926, entitled "The public-land act," as amended, by providing for the granting of free patents to native settlers until January 1, 1923.

I have approved the act and submit it in accordance with provisions of section 13 of the act of Congress, July 1, 1902, entitled:

An act temporarily to provide for the administration of the affairs of civil government in the Philippine Islands, and for other purposes.

I also transmit herewith a letter of the Secretary of War, explaining the act and its purposes.

WOODROW WILSON.

THE WHITE HOUSE, June 13, 1913.

THE BRAZILIAN REPUBLIC.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair lays before the Senate a cablegram from the vice president of the Senate of the Brazilian Republic, which will be read.

The cablegram was read and ordered to lie on the table, as follows:

RIO DE JANEIRO, June 13, 1913.

His excellency the PRESIDENT OF THE AMERICAN SENATE, Washington:

I have the honor to inform your excellency that the Senate of the Brazilian Republic unanimously resolved at its to-day's session to approve the suggestion of Senator Mendes de Almeida to have presented to your excellency an expression of sincere gratitude at the demonstrations of high distinction which the great American Nation has given to the minister of foreign affairs of Brazil, Dr. Lauro Muller.

With respectful greetings,

PINHEIRO MACHADO,
Vice President of the Senate.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

A message from the House of Representatives, by J. C. South, its Chief Clerk, announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the enrolled bill (H. R. 2441) making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1914, and for other purposes, and it was thereupon signed by the Vice President.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. GALLINGER presented petitions of the Audubon Society of Buffalo, N. Y.; the Children's Museum of Brooklyn, N. Y.; and C. Robotham, of Newark, N. J., praying for the adoption of the clause in Schedule N of the pending tariff bill prohibiting the importation of the plumage of certain wild birds, which were referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also presented a resolution adopted by the Board of Trade of Claremont, N. H., favoring an appropriation for suitable homes for American ministers in foreign countries, which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

He also presented petitions of the Quaker City Chocolate & Confectionery Co., of Philadelphia, Pa.; of the Bridge City Candy Co., of Logansport, Ind.; the New England Confectionery Co., of Boston, Mass.; of Henry Heide, of New York; Frank E. Menne, of Louisville, Ky.; the Ohio Confection Co., of Cleveland, Ohio; and of the New England Mutual Life Insurance Co., of Boston, Mass., praying for the exemption of mutual life insurance companies from the operation of the income-tax clause of the pending tariff bill, which were referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. BRISTOW. I have a petition from the Kansas State Live Stock Association, which I should like to have printed in the RECORD.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection?

Mr. JONES. I will have to object to unanimous consent.

Mr. BRISTOW. Do I understand that the Senator from Washington objects?

Mr. JONES. I do.

Mr. BRISTOW. Why does the Senator object to having the petition printed in the RECORD.

Mr. JONES. Because I have objected to other requests of a similar character.

Mr. BRISTOW. What does the Senator say?

Mr. JONES. I have objected to requests of the same character by others. That is my only reason.

Mr. BRISTOW. This is an association of live-stock men and farmers in Kansas who petition Congress in regard to legislation that is now pending. It seems to me when a Senator objects to the people of a State representing a great industry like that having their opinions and their wishes incorporated in the RECORD he is carrying his filibuster to an extreme position. Of course it will impose upon Senators the necessity of reading these petitions into the RECORD in order to give an expression from their constituents upon important legislation that is pending.

The VICE PRESIDENT. On objection, the petition will be referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. STERLING. Mr. President, I present memorials of citizens of Watertown, S. Dak., protesting against certain provisions of section 11 of House bill 3321—the income-tax section—and proposing an amendment thereto. All these communications are in the same form. I should like to have one of them, signed by John H. Hanten, printed in the RECORD. I make that request.

I also present a resolution of the Pierre Commercial Club, of Pierre, S. Dak., relating to residence buildings for representatives of the United States Government in foreign countries. I ask that it be printed in the RECORD.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from South Dakota asks that the memorial and the resolution indicated by him be printed in the RECORD.

Mr. JONES. I have objected to similar requests. I am very sorry, but I will have to object at this time.

The VICE PRESIDENT. There is objection. The memorials will be referred to the Committee on Finance, and the resolution will be referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. POMERENE. I present a preamble and resolutions in the nature of a petition adopted at a joint meeting of the Cincinnati Chamber of Commerce and Merchants' Exchange, June 11, 1913, urging upon the Congress of the United States legislation on the subject of banking and currency at the present session. I ask that it be incorporated in the RECORD without reading.

Mr. JONES. I am very sorry, but I shall have to object.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The petition will be referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

Mr. POMERENE. As it bears so directly upon a matter that is at present engaging the attention of Congress, I will take the time of the Senate to read it myself.

Mr. JONES. I make the point of order that under the rule the Senator can not do that at this time without unanimous consent.

Mr. POMERENE. I shall insist upon my right to read the petition as a part of my remarks on the subject.

Mr. SMOOT. Remarks are out of order at this time.

Mr. POMERENE. Very well; I will abide by the decision of the Chair.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The ruling of the Chair as to the right of the Senator to have the paper read is that it is for the Senate to decide. All who are in favor——

Mr. JONES. I desire to suggest to the Vice President that the precedent holds that upon the presentation of a memorial it can not be read except by unanimous consent. Later on in the proceedings of to-day the Senator can take the time to read it. If I had the precedents before me I could cite them to the Vice President where the holding is that under the order of the presentation of petitions and memorials the reading of a petition or memorial can only be by unanimous consent.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair finds that there is a precedent in the ruling of Vice President Stevenson in 1894 to the effect that—during the call for petitions and memorials under Rule XII, paragraph 4, which prescribes that every petition or memorial shall be signed by the petitioner or memorialist, and have indorsed thereon a brief statement of its contents, and shall be presented and referred without debate, that it was not in order to read the petition at length, either by the Senator presenting it or by the Secretary, unless by unanimous consent.

As the Chair has a high regard for Vice President Stevenson, the same ruling will be made now.

Mr. POMERENE. I submit to the ruling of the Chair.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, I will withdraw my objection to the requests of the Senator from Kansas [Mr. BRISTOW], the Senator from Ohio [Mr. POMERENE], and the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. STERLING] that the petitions or memorials presented by them be printed in the RECORD.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there any further objection to printing them in the RECORD? The Chair hears none, and they will be printed in the RECORD.

Mr. POMERENE. I was quite sure that the Senator from Washington was not really as sorry as he pretended to be in the first instance.

The memorial of the Kansas State Live Stock Association, presented by Mr. BRISTOW, was referred to the Committee on Finance and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

KANSAS LIVE STOCK ASSOCIATION,
Emporia, Kans., May 3, 1913.

At a meeting of the Kansas State Live Stock Association held in Emporia, May 3, 1913, the following resolutions were unanimously adopted:

Whereas owing to the short time until the lower branch of Congress will vote on the pending tariff bill: Therefore be it

Resolved, That the secretary of the Kansas State Live Stock Association be instructed to send the following as a night letter to each of the Kansas Members of Congress:

"The Kansas State Live Stock Association at its meeting here today protests vigorously against making meat free and placing a duty on cattle. Free meat benefits only the packer and makes his monopoly absolute. He will then control both the live and dressed animal. He will dictate the price to the producer and consumer alike. For relief from high beef give us free cattle and a tariff on meat."

Resolved further, That the secretary of the Kansas State Live Stock Association be instructed to forward a copy of the foregoing night letter, statement, and these resolutions to Senators JOSEPH L. BRISTOW and W. H. THOMPSON.

M. M. SHERMAN,
GEORGE PLUMB,
JOHN A. EDWARDS,
Committee.

First. If meat is free the packer can bid us for our cattle any price; should we remonstrate and refuse to accept his bid, he can force us to take his price; he can ship in cargoes of his foreign-killed meat and continue shipping this foreign-produced and duty-free meat, to supply his home trade, until the American cattleman accepts the price and his terms. Under the present conditions we have some little independence in the prices we receive. The packer must buy the home-raised live animals or lose his trade.

Second. It is the presumption and the intention of the new bill that foreign meat producers will ship their products freely to this country whenever meat is admitted without a tariff. Their charge would be true, perhaps, if the foreign packer was not our own American packer. He owns a large per cent of the packing houses abroad, the same as at home.

Third. Should an independent company owning slaughterhouses abroad perchance succeed in shipping dressed beef to this country our packer would prevent the sale of this foreign product. For the reason that the packer is in control or owns or dictates the home distributing points, local refrigerator plants, and little butcher shops, the foreigner would be forced to sell his beef from wagons or at the docks, or by advertising or through sympathy.

Fourth. We also fear free meat from another and even more vital standpoint—cattle carcasses can be shipped by steamers from many foreign ports to New York and along the eastern coast, or to San Francisco and along the Pacific coast, cheaper than by freight from Kansas City to the same points, and in addition these ocean-carrying vessels refrigerate the meat as they sail. They are both a transport and refrigerating plant. The ice and the water which they use is made and distilled from the brine of the sea.

Fifth. Should it be desired by Congress to protect American labor, a free-meat bill should never be passed. Thousands who find employment at the slaughter establishments of this country would soon be looking for other work if beef is killed abroad. Thousands of others now engaged in raising cattle in the United States will embark to Argentine and enter business there.

Sixth. The sentiment of "back to the cow" and of "back to the farm" has been urged, and even by those who are now declaring for free meats the propositions are inconsistent. Free meat will annihilate the effectiveness of these slogans. People will not move back under these conditions; they will move away. The American farmer and cattleman can raise, in the future as well as in the past, not only all the beef this country will require, but plenty for export, provided that he is encouraged. He is rapidly recovering from the previous ill effects of an oversupplied cattle market and the ruinous prices of a few years ago. The farmers not only of Kansas, but of Missouri and Tennessee, and the East and the North and the South, are going into the cow business again. Should the packer now by this concession to him, and to him only, be given free meat this unfair advantage will again dissipate the breeding herds; the American shortage of cattle will continue and increase.

Seventh. Another very serious and far-reaching problem and affecting practically 60 per cent of our population vitally, is that when the number of cattle in the country continues to decrease, then the value of land and farms and ranges is reduced proportionally. Millions of acres of grazing lands and pastures are made valuable, wholly by the number and the worth of the cattle which they grow and graze. With no cattle on these millions of acres the lands would be valueless and would not bring the tax levy. Millions of tons of frost-bitten grain or inferior forage crops are marketed each year with profit by means of cattle. If cattle are not bred and fed and fattened with the products of our pastures and soils, both grazing and agricultural lands will be undesirable.

Eighth. No one gains by the Nation having free meat, except the packer. The consumer does not. The packer only lowers the price of meat when forced. The packer only imports meat. He alone makes the selling price, a price which is "all the traffic will bear and still move." The immediate and practical method to make cheaper meat for the millions of consumers is to encourage and legislate so that all of our farms and ranges will fill with beef-breeding cattle. Free meat will not stock our ranches; it will fill the ranges of South America.

Ninth. No one so far from the seat of war can wage battle against this discrimination and in favor of the packer. If fairness is sought, the 10 per cent should be on the meat and not the cattle. Live cattle are imported by all classes—the cow breeder, the cattle feeder, and the ranchman, as well as the packer.

Tenth. The Government in this meat schedule should strive to benefit all the people, which is itself. Should this course be impossible, it next should consider the consumer. Provided that the consumer is too remote to be reached, then it certainly follows that the 60 per cent of our population engaged in agricultural and live-stock pursuits should be protected in this bill and not the infinitesimal part of 1 per cent engaged in the beef-packing industry. Only a short ways back into the nineties the packers were the lean kine. To-day, through favorable legislation, splendid management, and clever manipulation and concentration and court decisions (righteous beyond criticism), the packers have become the owners or controllers of immense packing establishments, both foreign and American; of great cattle herds and ranches; of powerful banks; of valuable tracts of real estate. They are supposedly strong in large holdings of railroad stocks. They dominate in the selling and refrigeration of butter, eggs, poultry, and other necessities of life. They own millions in public stockyards. Every shipper pays them tithe. Their control in hides, wool, leather, harness, and shoes is beyond comprehension.

The memorials presented by Mr. STERLING were referred to the Committee on Finance, and the memorial signed by John H. Hanten, of Watertown, S. Dak., was referred to the Committee on Finance and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

SUGGESTED AMENDMENT TO THE INCOME-TAX SECTION OF THE TARIFF BILL NOW PENDING IN CONGRESS.

WATERTOWN, S. DAK., May 3, 1913.

To the Hon. THOMAS STERLING,
Washington, D. C.:

I desire to protest against such of the provisions of section 2 of House bill 10, being "A bill to reduce tariff duties and to provide revenues for the Government, and for other purposes," as impose a tax in any form upon mutual life insurance companies, and urge that said bill be amended so as to exempt such companies from the income tax the same as fraternal and beneficial societies are by the bill exempted from the tax. The income-tax law of 1894 contained a provision expressly exempting life insurance companies conducting business on the mutual plan from the tax imposed by that act.

I would therefore respectfully urge that you use your best efforts to secure an amendment to the exemption provisions of the pending bill by incorporating in it the following clause:

"That nothing herein contained shall apply to any insurance company or association which conducts all its business solely upon the mutual plan, and only for the benefit of its policyholders or members, and having no capital stock and no stock or shareholders, and holding all its property for the benefit of and in reserve for its policyholders or members; nor to that part of the business of any insurance company having a capital stock and stock and shareholders which is conducted on the mutual plan, separate from its stock plan of insurance, and solely for the benefit of the policyholders and members insured on said mutual plan, and holding all the property belonging to and derived from said mutual part of its business for the benefit of and in reserve for the benefit of its policyholders and members insured on said mutual plan."

Very truly, yours,

JOHN H. HANTEN.
Policyholder in the Mutual Life Insurance Co. of New York.

The petition presented by Mr. STERLING was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Resolution by members of the Pierre Commercial Club, of Pierre, S. Dak.

At a meeting of the members of the Pierre Commercial Club, of Pierre, S. Dak., held on the 10th day of June, 1913, the following resolution was adopted, to wit:

Be it resolved, That—

Whereas the United States, contrary to the custom of the leading powers, does not own buildings in foreign countries for its representatives, with the result that our commercial interests suffer in competition with other nations for the expansion of our foreign trade; and

Whereas we believe that no representative of our Government abroad should be called upon to make expenditures from his private fortune, or that it should be necessary for him to have one in order to enable him to accept the appointment and to maintain our dignity in foreign countries; and

Whereas we believe that representatives should reside at a permanent home which our Government should supply, to which our citizens could point with pride, and where they may come and go with the same freedom as that existing at the White House at Washington; and believing that it reflects upon our national dignity for one representative to live in a palace and for his successor to live in a flat, and that neglect to provide residences precludes the Nation from obtaining the services of many eminent citizens: Therefore, be it

Resolved, That we are heartily in favor of the United States owning buildings that will reflect credit on the Nation, that will combine the office with the residence, and of such size that representatives may maintain them on their pay: Be it further

Resolved, That a copy of these resolutions be forwarded to our Senators and Representatives in Congress, requesting them to use their best efforts in supporting any bill that may be introduced to carry out the objects of this resolution.

We, J. L. Lockhart, president, and Albert Gunderson, secretary, of the said Pierre Commercial Club, of Pierre, S. Dak., do hereby certify that the foregoing is a true and correct transcript of the minutes of a meeting of the members of the said Pierre Commercial Club held at its rooms in the city of Pierre, S. Dak., on the day first above named.

THE PIERRE COMMERCIAL CLUB,
Pierre, S. Dak.
By J. L. LOCKHART, President.
By ALBERT GUNDERSON, Secretary.

The petition presented by Mr. POMERENE was referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

CINCINNATI CHAMBER OF COMMERCE, AND MERCHANTS' EXCHANGE.

Preamble and resolutions adopted by the board of directors June 11, 1913.

Respecting an improved banking and currency law for this Nation, the Cincinnati Chamber of Commerce believes as follows:

First. That it is of the utmost importance and interest to all classes of our people that a banking and currency law should be promptly enacted, which will be automatically responsive to the tides and volume of the business of this country, and which will furnish for the use of business an abundance of stable credit and more uniform discount rates than is possible under our present laws.

Second. That popular confidence in the absolute and constant stability of our banking and currency system would result in incalculable benefits to all classes of our people.

Third. That great injury always follows undue drawbacks and interference with the business enterprise, genius, and resourcefulness of our people, and that as far as possible it is the solemn duty of Congress to prevent them.

Fourth. That assurance that such legislation is to be consummated before the adjournment of the present session of Congress would quickly stimulate enterprise and remove the existing and, we believe, unwarranted commercial lethargy, which is prejudicial to every citizen and to every industry.

Fifth. That while imperfections are to be anticipated in so complex a subject, these do not justify longer delay in enacting such a law, for the reason that corrections can be made as experience may suggest.

Sixth. That past financial panics were largely due to the neglect of and would be hereafter largely prevented if this important subject were properly settled.

Seventh. That our people generally have exhausted the study of this proposition, are ripe for, expect, and want such legislation.

Eighth. That no other subject before this Nation is so insistent and potential for good or harm.

Ninth. That new fields of trade expansion at home and abroad throughout the world invite and press attention upon American enterprise, and that success in these fields demands facilities at least as good as those enjoyed by our powerful rivals: Therefore be it

Resolved by the Cincinnati Chamber of Commerce, That His Excellency the President of the United States and the Senators and Representatives in Congress be, and they are hereby, petitioned to do all which in their power lies to take up and promote the reform of our banking and currency system at the present extra session of Congress.

Resolved, That the secretary of the Cincinnati Chamber of Commerce is hereby authorized and instructed to invite similar action to this by all commercial bodies of the United States.

[SEAL.] M. C. WILKINS, Executive Secretary.

Mr. CATRON. I have three communications which have reference to matters in connection with the tariff, which I ask may be printed in the RECORD and referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. JONES. In view of the consent I have given with reference to other matters, I shall make no objection to the request of the Senator from New Mexico.

There being no objection, the communications were referred to the Committee on Finance and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

FRANK A. HUBBELL CO.,
Albuquerque, N. Mex., June 9, 1913.

Hon. T. B. CATRON,
United States Senator from New Mexico,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: I wish to respectfully protest against the enactment of that portion of the income-tax bill which taxes the net income of mutual life insurance companies.

I hold a policy in one of these companies and know that this tax must necessarily come out of the funds of policyholders, although I understand that this is not the intention of those who drew the bill. Nevertheless it is true, as there are no other funds in a mutual company from which the tax can be paid.

It seems entirely unfair to reduce the tax on jewelry and other such luxuries and then make up the loss by taxing the small policyholders of the country.

This is evidently a blunder in the bill, and I hope you will use your influence to have it removed.

Very truly, yours, FRANK A. HUBBELL.

TEXAS SHEEP AND GOAT RAISERS' ASSOCIATION,
San Antonio, Tex., April 25, 1913.

Hon. THOMAS B. CATRON,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: As members of the executive committee of the Texas Sheep and Goat Raisers' Association, each of us having had from 20 to 30 years' personal knowledge of the Angora-goat raising business in Texas, and some of us not having owned a goat during the last past several years, and the majority of the members of this committee being of lifelong Democratic political affiliation, and this committee being unanimous in the opinions herein expressed, having only the welfare of our country under consideration, and wishing to encourage the upbuilding of the Angora-goat industry, respectfully wish to make known to you the needs of the Angora-goat raisers and request your influence with your committee and with Congress as a whole in an effort to induce the retention of the present 12 cents per pound import duty on mohair (alpaca and camel's hair) and the separation of mohair into a separate schedule from wool when formulating a new tariff law, for the reasons here below stated:

First. The present 12 cents import duty on mohair should be maintained in order to something near equalize the difference between the cost of labor and grazing privileges in this country (which constitute so largely the cost of producing mohair here) and the cost of labor and grazing privileges in Turkey and South Africa (the only other mohair-growing countries), where the cost of these requisites is but a trifling portion of the cost of same in this country, as is shown by all authoritative information bearing on this subject. Under the 12 cents per pound import duty the goat stock of the United States, nearly all of which are Angoras, increased from 1,870,599 head in 1900 to 2,915,125 head in 1910, being an increase of 55 per cent, as is shown by the census reports. The United States is now producing annually about 6,000,000 pounds of the 13,000,000 pounds of mohair estimated to be annually consumed in the United States, which puts the industry on a highly competitive basis, and from which the Government realizes a large amount of revenue. Reducing the import duty on mohair to a 20 per cent ad valorem rate, as has been proposed in the tariff bills that have passed the House the last two sessions of Congress, would reduce the selling price that the grower of mohair in this country would receive about 7 cents per pound. Any considerable reduction of the present rate of import duty on mohair will, in our opinion, not only stop the increase of the Angora-goat stock of this country, which has developed so rapidly during the last past 15 years, but will force the goat raisers out of business by reason of the business becoming unprofitable, causing the industry to dwindle and cease to exist. And when once allowed to perish it will be very slow reviving the flocks, owing to the laws prohibiting the exportation of the Angora goat from Turkey and South Africa, the only foreign countries possessing Angora goats of desirable quality. In addition to these facts, if we allow the Angora flocks of the United States to decrease, there will be danger of our manufacturers of mohair having to submit to the demands that will be liable to be made by monopolies controlling the mohair clip of the world, of which the people of the United States are rapidly coming to consume a very large proportion.

In addition to these facts, the proper development of the angora flocks will enable the people to utilize the nonirrigable portions of the semiarid districts of our southwestern country, where angoras thrive best, more advantageously than can be done by using it for any other kind of live stock.

Another reason why the present 12 cents per pound import duty on mohair should be maintained comes of the fact that the fabrics made from mohair constitute mainly what are termed luxuries, for the use of the well-to-do and wealthy element, who should be required to contribute most largely to the revenues required by the Government.

In addition to these reasons for maintaining the industry, we call your attention to the fact that the proper development of our angora-goat flocks will not only enable us to avoid having to pay an exorbitant price for mohair eventually—in case our flocks are allowed to go to waste, by reason of the business becoming unprofitable from want of the necessary consideration at the hands of Congress—by reason of the business of producing mohair becoming controlled entirely by South Africa and Turkey, but the goat stock of this country, properly increased, will annually produce tens of thousands of tons of choice meat of the healthiest kind at a less cost to the people than it can be produced from any other source, helping to check the advancing prices of meat.

Now, as to why mohair should be given a separate and distinct schedule from wool when formulating a tariff law, as was argued by the delegate from this association who appeared before the Ways and Means Committee in December, 1908, "Mohair should no more be scheduled with wool, when formulating a tariff law, than silk should be." The fabrics produced from mohair are worn or used by people receiving good salaries and the wealthy element almost exclusively, and are properly considered articles of luxury, and should be taxed as are luxuries. We realize that there must be levied on mohair fabrics a rate of import duty that will compensate the manufacturer of mohair for the amount of duty levied on the hair required to produce similar fabrics, otherwise he must likewise go out of business, and our growers of mohair, so long as they tried to continue in the business, would be compelled to depend on a foreign market for their mohair, which would place them on a flat footing with the mohair growers of Turkey and South Africa, which would quickly destroy the Angora goat industry in this country.

We earnestly desire and hope for your active and vigorous support of the views herein expressed.

Very respectfully submitted.

CHAS. SCHREINER,
President Texas Sheep & Goat Raisers' Association.

TEXAS SHEEP & GOAT RAISERS' ASSOCIATION,
San Antonio, Tex., April 25, 1913.

Hon. THOS. B. CATRON,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: We have read a considerable portion of the arguments made before the Committee on Ways and Means on 27th and 28th of January (hearings on Schedule K, wool and manufactures of wool) in favor of free wool, or in support of a 20 per cent ad valorem rate of import duty on wool. And while we accord to the witnesses entire sincerity in their beliefs in the opinions they expressed and assertions they made to that committee, bearing on the sheep industry relative to the needs of the industry, the cause of the increase and decrease of the sheep stock of the United States during the last past 50 years, it causes us very great regret to know that gentlemen who occupied most time discussing the subject made numerous assertions to the committee that compels us to believe that their knowledge of the business of sheep raising in the trans-Mississippi States is wholly superficial, and that their statements and assertions concerning the business were erroneous, misleading, and valueless to that committee in forming its conclusions as to the recommendations it should make to Congress concerning the woolgrowing industry. Speaking to you as members of the executive committee of the Texas Sheep & Goat Raisers' Association, each of us having had from 25 to 45 years' practical personal knowledge of the business of sheep raising in Texas in no small way, and having a superficial knowledge of the business throughout the United States, and some of us not having owned a sheep in the last past several years, and our committee being composed of Democrats and Republicans of lifelong political affiliation, the majority of this committee being of lifelong Democratic political affiliation, each and all having only a desire for the welfare of our country as a whole, and all concurring in the views herein expressed, we have to advise you that any serious departure by Congress from the conclusions compelled to be drawn from the report of the Tariff Board, as to the rate of import duty that should be levied on wool in order to something near equal the difference between the cost of producing wool in this country and in competing countries, will have a disastrous effect upon the sheep industry in Texas and of the United States as a whole.

Replying to the inquiry as to the cause of the failure of the farmers and ranchmen to maintain the 47,274,000 sheep in the country in 1893, we have to advise you that the recommendation made by President Cleveland in May, 1893, that raw material (which was considered as embracing wool) be put on the free list and that enacting the Wilson tariff law in 1894 admitting wool free of import duty caused the business of woolgrowing to become so unprofitable that the sheep stock was sent to the slaughterhouses and neglected to such an extent that the Democratic Secretary of Agriculture—Mr. Morton—reported the country as possessing only 36,819,000 sheep on January 1, 1897. During the free-wool years 1895-96 the records show that wool sold in the producing markets for about or less than one-half the prices obtained for the same class of wool during several years last preceding the adoption of the free-wool policy. It is unnecessary to recite here the ruinously low prices for which choice flocks of sheep were sold during the free-wool years by reason of the disastrously low prices of wool and the bankrupt condition to which a large percentage of former owners were reduced. The hereabove stated statistical facts, with the natural inferences to be drawn therefrom, supply all necessary evidence as to that feature of the case.

The 23 per cent decrease of the sheep stock during the application of the free-wool policy, as shown by the above statistical statements, which decrease occurred most largely in some of the best breeding districts—Texas, for example, decreasing her stock by more than 38 per cent, as shown by our State comptroller's reports—left the country at the close of the free-wool policy with her numbers of female sheep so depleted that it has been impossible for the farmers and ranchmen to supply the demands of the people of the United States for mutton and make more than temporary increase of the depleted numbers. While the Government reports show an increase of the 36,819,000 at close of the free-wool policy in 1897 to 39,852,967 sheep of shearing age in 1900—the latter number being the census report—the census report of 1910 shows 39,644,046 sheep of shearing age. The decrease that has occurred in recent years comes of the increased slaughter of sheep for domestic consumption, and especially the increased consumption of lambs of 3 to 6 months' age.

Our country possesses all the conditions requisite to enable it to successfully sustain such a number of sheep as would be necessary to supply all the clothing wool required by treble the present population. Texas alone has the capacity to successfully sustain, under the pasture system which she is now adopting, thirty or forty million sheep, and, in our opinion, would, in reasonable length of time, come to possess that number, if assured of an import duty on wool something near equal in amount to the difference between the cost of production in the United States and in competing countries. In addition to producing such necessary supply of clothing wool, a stock of sheep of such numbers would be of inestimable value as a necessary aid to maintaining the fertility of the soil of the farms of our country.

The striking off of the present 1½ cents per pound import duty on fresh meat, admitting mutton from Argentina, New Zealand, and Australia free, would also have a severely detrimental effect on the sheep industry, as it is from the sale of mutton, in addition to the fleece, that the farmer and ranchman are enabled to remain in the business of sheep raising, receiving only small compensation for their labor and money invested in same.

The frequent recurrence of the agitation of a free-wool policy deters tens and tens of thousands of farmers and ranchmen from engaging in growing sheep. The sheep industry is conducted on such a small margin of profit that any serious decrease of the amount of import duty levied on wool that the Tariff Board's report shows should be levied to equal the difference in cost of production here and in competing countries will affect the industry disastrously, particularly the merino flocks of the trans-Mississippi country, and especially the flocks located in the semiarid Southwest, and cause the present rate of decrease of the sheep stock to be rapidly increased, causing a still greater shortage in the necessary meat supply of our country, especially of mutton, which is the healthiest meat and equally as nutritious as beef.

We further wish to call your attention to the exhibit on page 4071, in part No. 20, tariff hearings January 28, entitled "Number of sheep in Australia, 1891 to date," which shows the fact (astounding to the unacquainted) that the sheep stock of Australia, the greatest woolgrowing country of the world, decreased from 106,421,068 in 1891 to 72,040,211 in 1901, and from 72,040,211 in 1901 to 53,668,347 in 1902. While the report does not show that the disastrous decrease was caused almost wholly by death from starvation, caused by drought, nevertheless drought was the cause. The facts shown in that statement, showing the sudden decrease in the sheep stock of Australia, should be sufficient to warn Congress and the people as a whole of the danger of allowing the United States to fail to become self-supplying in her necessary quantity of clothing wool.

We earnestly solicit your influence to defeat any proposition by Congress looking to a serious departure from the convictions herein expressed.

Respectfully submitted.

CHAS. SCHREINER,
President Texas Sheep & Goat Raisers' Association.
ALFRED GILES, Secretary.

Executive committee: B. L. Crouch, C. B. Hudspeth, James M. Symond, Geo. Richardson, J. R. Hamilton, Geo. W. Littlefield, Ike T. Pry, O. J. Woodhull.

Mr. NEWLANDS presented sundry petitions of citizens of Summit, Silverton, Mehama, Hubbard, Creswell, Eagle Point, Glendale, Stayton, and Marquam, in the State of Oregon, and engaged in the industry of goat raising, relative to the duty on mohair, which were referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also presented memorials of sundry citizens of Winnemucca, Lovelock, Lovelock Valley, and Elko, all in the State of Nevada, and of the Hamilton Commercial Club, of Nevada, remonstrating against wool, cattle, and meat being placed on the free list, which were referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. SHERMAN presented a petition of sundry citizens of Alton, Ill., praying for the adoption of an amendment to the Constitution to prohibit polygamy, which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

He also presented a memorial of the Chicago Association of Commerce, of Illinois, remonstrating against the adoption of certain proposed changes in the customs administrative law, which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. JOHNSON of Maine presented a memorial of the State Federation of Labor of Maine, remonstrating against the importation of cigars free of duty from the Philippine Islands, which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also presented a memorial of sundry citizens of Topsfield, Me., remonstrating against a reduction in the duty on print paper and wood pulp, which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also (for Mr. BURLEIGH) presented a memorial of Dirigo Lodge, International Brotherhood of Paper Makers, of Augusta, Me., remonstrating against a reduction in the duty on print paper and wood pulp, which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also (for Mr. BURLEIGH) presented a memorial of the State Federation of Labor of Maine, remonstrating against the importation of cigars free of duty from the Philippine Islands, which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also (for Mr. BURLEIGH) presented resolutions adopted by State Branch No. 18, United National Association of Post Office Clerks, of Bath, Me., favoring the adoption of certain changes in the postal laws relative to the examination of clerks in the postal service, which were referred to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN, from the Committee on Territories, to which was referred the bill (S. 48) to authorize the President of the United States to locate, construct, and operate railroads in the Territory of Alaska, and for other purposes, reported it with an amendment, and submitted a report (No. 65) thereon.

Mr. OWEN. From the Committee on the Library I report back favorably with an amendment in the nature of a substitute the bill (S. 1240) to establish the legislative reference bureau of the Library of Congress. This matter was before the Senate in the preceding Congress. I think there is no objection to it on the part of anyone, and I shall be glad to have present consideration of the bill.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I understood the Senator from Oklahoma to say that this is a substitute for the bill which he introduced.

Mr. OWEN. It is a substitute for the bill which I introduced, No. 1240.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I should like to inquire if it is identical with the bill that was reported favorably from the Committee on the Library at the last session of Congress?

Mr. OWEN. I understand it is identical.

Mr. GALLINGER. So far as its present consideration is concerned, I shall have to object. I want to examine the bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will go to the calendar.

INTRODUCTION OF BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTIONS.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. I desire to introduce a bill by request.

Mr. JONES. I ask that it go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The introduction of the bill will go over, under objection. There are on the Secretary's desk certain bills which have been read the first time. They will be read a second time and referred.

The bills were read the second time by title and referred as indicated:

By Mr. SMOOT:

A bill (S. 2511) to provide for agricultural entries on coal lands in Alaska; to the Committee on Public Lands.

A bill (S. 2512) to amend an act entitled "An act relative to recognizances, stipulations, bonds, and undertakings, and to allow certain corporations to be accepted as surety thereon," approved August 13, 1894; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

A bill (S. 2513) to provide for the erection of a public building at Cedar City, Utah; to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

By Mr. BRADY:

A bill (S. 2514) for the relief of William P. Havenor; to the Committee on Public Lands.

By Mr. LEWIS:

A bill (S. 2515) to amend the interstate-commerce law and to authorize the Interstate Commerce Commission to assume the power of supervising the issuance of stock, the issuance of bonds, the matter of consolidation, amalgamation, or combination of all transportation lines doing an interstate-commerce business and all interstate concerns engaged in any form of interstate commerce, and for such other purposes as shall protect the public against watered stock and excessive bond issues, and consolidations made with the object of effecting monopoly and trust in matters of interstate commerce; to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

By Mr. CUMMINS:

A bill (S. 2516) to direct the Attorney General to take an appeal to the Supreme Court of the United States from a decree entered by the Circuit Court of the United States in and for the Southern District of New York in the suit of the United States against the American Tobacco Co. and others, and extend the time for taking such appeal, and for other purposes; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. NEWLANDS:

A bill (S. 2517) providing for mediation, conciliation, and arbitration in controversies between certain employers and their employees.

Mr. NEWLANDS. I ask that the bill be referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be referred to the committee, as requested by the Senator from Nevada.

By Mr. SHAFROTH:

A bill (S. 2518) granting to the town of Nevadaville, Colo., the right to purchase certain lands for the protection of water supply; to the Committee on Public Lands.

The following bills were read twice by their titles and referred as indicated:

By Mr. SMITH of Michigan:

A bill (S. 2519) granting an increase of pension to Zera F. Etheridge (with accompanying paper);

A bill (S. 2520) granting a pension to Permelia H. McAley (with accompanying paper);

A bill (S. 2521) granting a pension to Harriet A. Frasier (with accompanying papers);

A bill (S. 2522) granting an increase of pension to Margaret W. Goodwin (with accompanying paper);

A bill (S. 2523) granting an increase of pension to William W. Campfield (with accompanying paper);

A bill (S. 2524) granting a pension to Isabell C. Dean; and

A bill (S. 2525) granting a pension to Charlotte Lewis McMahon; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. McLEAN:

A bill (S. 2526) granting an increase of pension to Henrietta Doolittle (with accompanying paper);

A bill (S. 2527) granting an increase of pension to Maria L. Doughty (with accompanying paper); and

A bill (S. 2528) granting an increase of pension to George Kellogg (with accompanying paper); to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. JOHNSON of Maine:

A bill (S. 2529) for the relief of Benjamin R. Brown; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

A bill (S. 2530) granting a pension to Barbara Henderson;

A bill (S. 2531) granting a pension to Raymond R. Hammond;

A bill (S. 2532) granting a pension to Delia Herbert; and

A bill (S. 2533) granting an increase of pension to John A. Sears; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. JOHNSON of Maine (for Mr. BURLEIGH):

A bill (S. 2534) granting an increase of pension to John Graffam; and

A bill (S. 2535) granting an increase of pension to Hiram A. Hustus; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. SHIVELY:

A bill (S. 2536) granting an increase of pension to Daniel Sullivan; and

A bill (S. 2537) granting a pension to William N. Russell; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. TILLMAN:

A bill (S. 2538) to repeal sections 1538 and 1539 of the Revised Statutes (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

By Mr. SHERMAN:

A bill (S. 2539) for the relief of the heirs of Mary B. Lively; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. OVERMAN:

A bill (S. 2540) for the relief of heirs or estate of Joseph D. Hayes, deceased; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. RANSDELL:

A bill (S. 2541) granting an increase of pension to Nannie V. Benton (with accompanying paper); to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. BRANDEGEE:

A bill (S. 2542) to place the names of Elverton E. Fuller and Frank H. Adams on the lineal list of Infantry officers next after that of J. De Camp Hall, Fourth Regiment United States Infantry, to date from January 6, 1900 (with accompanying paper); to the Committee on Military Affairs.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Certain bills and joint resolutions on the Secretary's desk which have been noted for introduction will be read a first time.

The SECRETARY. By Mr. TOWNSEND, a bill (S. 2543) to place Michael James McCormack upon the active list of the Navy; and

A bill (S. 2544) for the relief of John K. Steedman.

By Mr. STERLING, a bill (S. 2545) authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to cancel the allotment of Irene Lydia Simmons.

By Mr. SMOOT, a bill (S. 2546) to authorize the Secretary of the Treasury to use, at his discretion, surplus moneys in the Treasury in the purchase or redemption of the outstanding interest-bearing obligations of the United States.

By Mr. MCCUMBER, a bill (S. 2547) authorizing the reconveyance of certain lands to the United States and authorizing the parties making such conveyance to file entry on other public lands.

By Mr. SMITH of Arizona, a bill (S. 2548) to create an additional land district in the State of Arizona.

By Mr. ASHURST, a bill (S. 2549) to provide for an enlarged homestead entry in Arizona where sufficient water suitable for domestic purposes is not obtainable upon the lands.

By Mr. THOMPSON, a bill (S. 2550) to correct the military record of Jacob Scott.

By Mr. NELSON, a bill (S. 2551) to authorize the adjustment of the accounts of Army officers in certain cases, and for other purposes.

By Mr. LA FOLLETTE, a bill (S. 2552) to further protect trade and commerce against unlawful restraints and monopolies.

By Mr. THORNTON, a bill (S. 2553) to provide for the relief of certain enlisted men in the United States Navy.

By Mr. MYERS, a joint resolution (S. J. Res. 41) authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to sell or lease certain public lands to the Republic Coal Co., a corporation.

By Mr. DILLINGHAM, a joint resolution (S. J. Res. 42) authorizing the Commissioners of the District of Columbia to provide a public recreation center in square No. 534, District of Columbia, and for other purposes.

Mr. JONES. I ask that the second reading of all these bills and joint resolutions may go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bills and joint resolutions will go over for a second reading.

Mr. GALLINGER. I introduce two bills for reference.

The SECRETARY. By Mr. GALLINGER, a bill granting an increase of pension to Caroline M. Wallace.

Mr. JONES. I ask that the introduction of the bills go over for a day.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bills will go over.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry. The bill just read by the Secretary is a private bill. I ask whether a Senator has a right under the rule to object to the bill being introduced? The rule provides that a Senator may present such a bill to the Secretary at the desk, and that it shall be referred without reading.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, I desire to say that I have already stated that I have no objection to the introduction of private bills in the method provided by the rule by handing them to the Secretary. When bills are sent up in the regular way, however, I suppose they are to be considered as being introduced in the regular way.

Mr. NORRIS. This bill has been submitted to the Secretary. In fact, the Secretary has it in his possession and has read the title.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair rules that the Secretary gets everything, but that this bill was presented on the floor of the Senate. It will lie over until to-morrow.

Mr. DILLINGHAM. Mr. President, I offer a joint resolution which I send to the desk.

Mr. JONES. I ask that the resolution may go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. It will go over.

Mr. BRISTOW. I desire to present certain bills.

Mr. JONES. I ask that their introduction may go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bills will go over.

Mr. TOWNSEND. I desire to present a bill for reading and reference.

Mr. JONES. I ask that the introduction of the bill may go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. It will go over.

Mr. FALL. I present a joint resolution and ask that it may be read and lie on the table.

Mr. JONES. I ask that the introduction of the joint resolution go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. It will be so ordered.

Mr. GORE. I offer a joint resolution and ask its proper reference.

Mr. JONES. I ask that its introduction may go over under the rule.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The joint resolution will go over.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I offer a bill for reference to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. JONES. I ask that the introduction of the bill may go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. It will go over.

GRADUATED TAX ON CORPORATIONS.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President, I offer an amendment to the so-called tariff bill and ask that it be printed. In doing so I desire to say that I do it in part because the Finance Committee has rejected the amendment which I offered, proposing to tax the Tobacco Trust; and I offer this amendment in the hope that the Committee on Finance may still have time to consider it before agreeing upon a report.

I shall not ask to have read the amendment which I offer, but in substance it is an amendment to the income-tax section of the tariff bill. It proposes to levy an additional graduated tax on all corporations having $100,000,000 capital or more, provided they control more than 25 per cent of the product of any article in the United States.

I have provided for the levy of a 5 per cent tax on all corporations having $100,000,000 of capital that control 25 per cent of the product of any article in this country. When one of these corporations reaches such size that it controls a third of the product of any article in this country the tax rises to 15 per cent, and when the corporation reaches such size that it controls one-half of the product of any article in this country the tax which I propose to levy amounts to 25 per cent on its net annual profits.

Mr. President, I desire to commend this amendment to the members of the Finance Committee as worthy of consideration. The Democratic Party has denounced monopoly as odious. The Democratic Party has pledged itself to limit and control and destroy monopolies. The other day I offered an amendment which had for its object the limitation and the destruction of monopoly in tobacco. I think it was a legitimate amendment to the pending tariff bill. I still propose, in the Democratic caucus, and, if necessary, upon the floor of the Senate when the tariff bill comes here, to stand for that amendment and to make a fight for it. But I want to commend to the Finance Committee the new idea which I have incorporated here providing for a graduated tax on those great corporations that have attained the proportions of monopolies in the United States.

My first proposal regarding the graduated tobacco tax has been denounced by New York papers as socialistic. I am not ashamed of the appellation or the epithet. I am willing to accept it. I am willing to accept anything that is socialistic, provided it will do the work. When this country is face to face with great law-defying corporations I do not think we should be too squeamish as to the methods that we employ within the law and within the Constitution to limit and regulate them.

I hope the Finance Committee, overworked though it may be, will have some time to give to this proposal of a graduated tax on corporations which have attained $100,000,000 of capital and control already from 25 to 60 per cent of the product of the country—practical monopolies, existing and operating in defiance of law, in defiance of the steady course of legislation of Congress for 25 years, in defiance of public opinion in this country, and in defiance also of the spirit of the decrees of courts which have been entered against them.

Mr. STONE. Mr. President, is morning business concluded?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Not yet. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Nebraska? The Chair hears none.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, what was the request?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The request of the Senator from Nebraska was to have the amendment offered by him printed and referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. JONES. That is all right.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be printed and referred to the Committee on Finance.

PRICE OF OIL IN OKLAHOMA.

Mr. OWEN. Mr. President, I offer a Senate resolution, asking that the Secretary of Commerce be directed to make investigation as to the price of oil in Oklahoma and report to the Senate whether or not the price is artificially fixed below the general market level of the United States, quality and transportation considered; and if so, by whom such prices are fixed, and the methods by which it is done. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the resolution.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection?

Mr. JONES. I will have to ask that the resolution go over.

Mr. OWEN. I ask that the resolution lie on the table.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The resolution will lie on the table.

BANKING AND CURRENCY LEGISLATION, ETC.

Mr. NEWLANDS. I offer a resolution which I ask to have read.

Mr. JONES. Does it require unanimous consent to have the resolution read? If it does, I object.

Mr. NEWLANDS. I do not understand that it requires unanimous consent to have a resolution read.

Mr. STONE. I will ask unanimous consent, if necessary, to have the resolution read. It will take less time to read it than to discuss the question raised.

Mr. NEWLANDS. I asked that myself.

Mr. JONES. I will withdraw my objection, Mr. President, because I am very anxious that we shall reach the consideration of the Indian appropriation bill.

Mr. STONE. I just want to say to the Senator from Nevada, if he pleases, that at the last meeting of the Senate he occupied two hours or more, and prevented me from getting up the Indian appropriation bill. I hope he will not take much time to-day.

Mr. NEWLANDS. The Senator is mistaken as to the time. I took three-quarters of an hour on the former occasion.

Mr. STONE. Is it the intention of the Senator to speak to the resolution?

Mr. NEWLANDS. My intention is to make a brief statement in connection with it. It will not take more than five minutes.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read the resolution for the information of the Senate.

The resolution (S. Res. 110) was read, as follows:

Resolved, That it is the sense of the Senate—

1. That in all legislation affecting the regulation of commerce regard should be had to our dual system of government which gives to the respective States control of commerce within the States and to the United States control of commerce between the States; and that all contemplated legislation should have in view not the absorption of the functions of the States by the National Government, but the full exercise of the powers of the Nation and the States under a system of cooperation authorized by law which, without impairing any of the functions of the respective sovereigns, will bring them into harmony regarding the relation of State to interstate commerce.

2. That with a view to regulating interstate exchange and preventing its interruption by bank panics the national and State banks within the boundaries of each State should be brought into union under national law in reserve associations analogous to existing clearing-house associations, the membership of the State banks in such reserve associations to be made dependent upon their complying with the requirements of the national banking act regarding capital and reserves and upon their submitting to such examination as the national banks are subjected to.

3. That such reserve associations of the respective States should be federated under national law by the organization of a national reserve board composed of nine members to be selected by the various State reserve associations, one member thereof from each judicial circuit, and of nine other members to be selected by the President of the United States from the department chiefs or otherwise; such reserve board to have such powers in bringing the various State reserve associations into cooperation for the purpose of protecting their reserves and preventing the interruption of interstate exchange as Congress may determine, and to be advisory to Congress and to the executive department.

4. That the comptroller's office, with all its officials, funds, powers, and duties should be merged in a nonpartisan national banking commission, to be appointed by the President, of which commission the Secretary of the Treasury shall be the chairman and the Comptroller of the Currency the secretary; such commission to have powers of investigation, correction, and publicity over banks engaged in interstate exchange analogous, so far as practicable, to those now exercised by the Interstate Commerce Commission over carriers engaged in interstate transportation.

5. That there should be legislation which shall bring such national banking commission into cooperation with similar commissions organized by the respective States.

6. That legislation should be enacted which will gradually diminish the percentage of the reserves of the country banks permitted to be deposited in reserve city and central reserve city banks, to be used there for purposes of speculation instead of exchange.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Mr. President, I wish to make a brief statement in connection with the resolution.

I believe immediate action should be had regarding banking laws. I think, however, that instead of organizing 15 regional reserve associations, composed of both national and State banks within certain banking zones, it would be better to organize a reserve association in each State composed of the banks, both national and State, within such State, thus accommodating our economic to our political divisions. Provision can be made for some of the smaller States by allowing the banks in such States to join the associations of adjoining larger States until they reach a certain population.

It is, of course, desirable that the reserve associations should include both the State and the national banks. One-half of the banks of the country are State banks, and one-half of the deposits of the country are in State banks. Any system intended to establish security in our banking system must include both halves and not simply one half.

It would not, in my judgment, do to put in one association the banks of half a dozen different States, with all their differences in banking laws and regulations. It is inconvenient enough to have in one association banks created and regulated by two different sovereigns without multiplying the number of sovereigns. It would be much easier to bring the national sovereignty into harmony with a single State sovereignty in a reserve association than with three or four State sovereignties.

If this were a Nation without State lines the economic zone might be the best, but as long as we have a Nation of sovereign States the economical lines should conform to the State lines. This is so now with reference to both transportation and banking. We have our national railroad commission and our State railroad commissions. We have our national comptroller's office and we have our State banking commissions. We will doubtless have trade commissions organized under both national and State laws, and in all this legislation the economic lines conform to the State lines.

I believe that the future of our Government depends upon the exercise, not the disuse, of State functions. There may be some inconvenience, but unless the State functions are exercised concurrently with the national functions the former will gradually sink into disuse, and we will have some day a centralized Government at Washington over three or four hundred millions of people—a Government that will be absolutely unwieldy and subversive of everything like home rule.

Mr. President, I ask that the resolution may lie on the table for the present. I wish to give notice that at the next session of the Senate I will speak upon it.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The resolution will lie on the table and be printed.

PRICE OF OIL IN OKLAHOMA.

Mr. OWEN. I submit a resolution, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The resolution (S. Res. 109) was read, as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of Commerce is directed to make a thorough investigation into the price of oil in Oklahoma and report to the Senate whether or not the price is artificially fixed below the general market level in the United States, quality and transportation considered; and if so, by whom such prices are fixed and the method by which it is done.

Mr. OWEN. I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the resolution.

Mr. JONES. I ask that it may go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Objection being made, the resolution will go over.

Mr. OWEN. I ask that it lie on the table.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The resolution will lie on the table and be printed.

ESTATE OF EDWARD B. BELL.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 112), which was read and referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Senate be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay out of the contingent fund of the Senate to the executor, administrator, or legal heirs of Edward B. Bell, late a member of the Capitol police force, a sum equal to six months' salary at the rate he was receiving by law at the time of his death, said sum to be considered as including funeral expenses and all other allowances.

UNITED STATES AGAINST THE CHANDLER DUNBAR WATER POWER CO.

Mr. BURTON. I desire to introduce a resolution to provide for printing additional copies of a Senate document and ask that it be read and referred to the Committee on Printing.

The resolution (S. Res. 111) was read and referred to the Committee on Printing, as follows:

Resolved, That there be printed 10,000 additional copies of Senate Document No. 51, Sixty-third Congress, first session.

AMENDMENT OF THE RULES.

Mr. OWEN. I have a resolution which I should like to offer.

The resolution (S. Res. 113) was read, as follows:

Resolved, That Rule XIX of the standing rules of the Senate be amended by adding the following:

"SEC. 6. That the Senate may at any time, upon motion of a Senator, fix a day and hour for a final vote upon any matter pending in the Senate: Provided, however, That this rule shall not be invoked to prevent debate by any Senator who requests opportunity to express his views upon such pending matter within a time to be fixed by the Senate.

"The notice to be given by the Senate under this section, except by consent, shall not be less than a week, unless such request be made within the last two weeks of the session.

"For the foregoing stated purpose the following rules, namely, VII, VIII, IX, X, XII, XXII, XXVI, XXVIII, XXXV, and XL, are modified.

"Any Senator may demand of a Senator making a motion if it be made for dilatory or obstructive purposes, and if the Senator making the motion declines or evades an answer or concedes the motion to have been made for such purposes the President of the Senate shall declare such motion out of order."

Mr. OWEN. I ask that the resolution may lie on the table for the present.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair would inquire whether this is the same amendment to the rules that was proposed heretofore by the Senator from Oklahoma?

Mr. OWEN. It is a modification of the amendment proposed heretofore. It is a substitute for it.

Mr. JONES. I desire to ask whether or not that can be done under the rules without previous notice?

The VICE PRESIDENT. This is only notice of the fact.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I desire to record the fact at this point that when the resolution comes up for consideration I shall move its reference to the Committee on Rules.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The resolution will lie over and be printed.

GOOD ROADS.

Mr. SHAFROTH. I have a communication here from the president of the National Good Roads Association containing short extracts from speeches relating to good roads which I was requested to have printed in the RECORD. I therefore ask unanimous consent that it be printed in the RECORD and appropriately referred.

There being no objection, the matter was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

INTERNATIONAL GOOD ROADS CONGRESS, PANAMA-PACIFIC EXPOSITION, FEBRUARY 22–27, 1915.

2. Address by Gov. Joseph M. Brown, of Georgia, on good roads in that State.
3. Address of Bishop Charles Edward Cheney on good roads as relating to church attendance.
4. Paper by C. Gordon Reel, State superintendent of highways, New York.
5. Paper by William Bradburn, consulting engineer, Houston, Tex.
6. Resolutions adopted by Illinois State and interstate good roads convention, February 12, 1912.
7. Address by Maude E. Jones, secretary National Good Roads Association.
8. Address by Miss Alma Rittenberry, chairman Jackson Memorial Highway Commission, Birmingham, Ala.

OFFICIAL CALL FOR THE INTERNATIONAL GOOD ROADS CONGRESS, PANAMA-PACIFIC EXPOSITION, SAN FRANCISCO, FEBRUARY 22–27, 1915.

By invitation of the Panama-Pacific Exposition management and the League of California Municipalities the 1915 International Good Roads Congress will be held under the auspices of the International Good Roads & Automobile Association and the National Good Roads Association at the Panama-Pacific Exposition, San Francisco, during the opening week of the exposition, February 22–27, 1915.

Delegates, both men and women, are invited from every nation, State, and city, and all correspondence should be addressed to the secretary at the Congress Hotel, Chicago, Ill., United States of America.

From September 16 to 21, 1901, there was held in the city of Buffalo the first International Good Roads Congress, the call for which was issued from the headquarters of the National Good Roads Association at Chicago. Participation by delegates from foreign countries was invited, and such invitation was transmitted by the Department of State to the diplomatic officers of the United States throughout the world and through them communicated to the ministers of foreign affairs, with the request that it be given publicity for the information of organizations and individuals who might be interested.

April 27–29, 1903, the second International Good Roads Congress assembled at St. Louis. Hon. John Hay, Secretary of State, invited all civilized Governments to send delegates. Eleven foreign Governments were represented, and on April 29 Theodore Roosevelt, President of the United States; Hon. William Jennings Bryan; Gen. Nelson A. Miles, head of the United States Army; and many other dignitaries addressed the congress.

In 1904 the third International Good Roads Congress was held in St. Louis during the progress of the World's Fair. Many foreign Governments and more than 100 railway companies sent representatives. Hon. James Wilson, Secretary of Agriculture, represented the Government and presided at one session.

On the tenth anniversary of the first congress the fourth International Good Roads Congress was held in Chicago, September 18–October 1, 1911, and, as in the case of each of the three preceding congresses, invitations were transmitted by the Department of State to all foreign Governments, and there were official delegates in attendance from 40 States and countries.

The fifth International Good Roads Congress was held in Chicago February 26–March 2, 1913, and was made memorable by the participation of officials of the General Federation of Women's Clubs and the pledge of the president of this great organization, Mrs. Percy V. Pennybacker, that the 1,000,000 members of the general federation will lend their hearty aid to the cause of good roads both in the Nation and in the several States.

The importance of this great movement for good roads is being recognized as never before, and when the women of all nations add their influence to that of the press, school, and church a victory will have been won greater and more far-reaching in effect than any other within a generation, for it is a matter of tremendous importance that in the United States alone bad roads are directly responsible for the loss of a billion dollars a year. Surely the saving of this stupendous sum constitutes an economic question of vast importance.

When the agricultural production alone of the United States for the past 13 years totals nearly $100,000,000,000—a sum to stagger the imagination—and it costs more to take this product from the farm to the railway station than from such station to the American and European markets, and when the saving in cost of moving this product of agriculture over good roads instead of bad would have built a million miles of good roads, the incalculable waste of bad roads in this country is shown to be of such enormous proportions as to demand immediate reformation and the wisest and best statesmanship.

Great as is the loss to transportation, mercantile, industrial, and farming interests, incomparably greater is the loss to women and children and social life, a matter as important as civilization itself; and the truth of the declaration of Charles Sumner, 50 years ago, that "the two greatest forces for the advancement of civilization are the schoolmaster and good roads," is emphasized by the experience of the intervening years, and points to the wisdom of a union of the religious, educational, commercial, transportation, and industrial interests of all nations in aggressive action for permanent roads and streets.

GOOD ROADS IN GEORGIA.

(By Joseph M. Brown, governor.)

More road improvement work has been done in Georgia during the past five years, I believe, than in any other single State. More will be accomplished during the next five years, and if the present pace continues—and every indication is that it will be increased—in 15 or 20 years we will have public roads that will compare favorably with the boasted ones of Europe.

Approximately 5,000 adult male convicts are now at work building roads throughout the State. More than a million dollars a year is being spent in their maintenance, the employment of skilled labor, and for equipment.

The present system of road building was inaugurated five years ago. Since that time farm-land values have increased from 25 to 100 per cent, largely due to the betterment of rural conditions by the development of good roads. More substantial road work was done during that period than during the previous half century.

It has been found that every dollar put in road work comes back manyfold in added values. Therefore the public is in hearty sympathy with the movement.

Address of Bishop Charles Edward Cheney, at the concluding session of the fifth International Good Roads Congress, Chicago, March 2, 1913.

It is a generally acknowledged fact that the country churches all over the United States are suffering because of several causes, such as, for example, the steady drift of population to the cities and the lack of that sort of association on the part of the young people which has proved so great an influence for good in the churches of our great towns. That the construction of such roads as one sees in England and on the Continent of Europe would have a beneficial effect in this regard can not be doubted.

Taking into consideration that Robinson Crusoe on his desert island was hardly more isolated from all human fellowship than is the individual or the family in an Illinois farmhouse, when a bog of the black mud of the prairie is the only pathway to the next neighbor's home, it is easy to see that a regular and prompt attendance upon public worship becomes almost an impossibility during a large part of the year. I am firmly convinced that the prosperity and usefulness of the scattered churches in our own State would be vastly increased if access to the place of worship were rendered not only easy, but attractive, by the comfort afforded by really good highways. In England small country churches are filled with worshipers even when the weather is far from agreeable. The reason lies in the fact that people of means can drive—whether in a motor car or a horse-drawn carriage—over a road like the best pavements of our American cities; and the people who possess but little of this world's goods can indulge the Englishman's love of walking without so much as muddying their footgear.

I am also persuaded that when we ask the question why such marvelous success attended the propagation of the Christian religion in the first three centuries, one factor is generally overlooked. Let us remember that it took but 300 years to send the religion of Jesus Christ into almost every nook and corner of the vast Empire of Rome.

We account for this in various ways. Some tell us that it was owing to miraculous powers exercised by the early disciples. Others, that the first preachers were enabled to speak in the dialects of the lands to which they carried the message, without having acquired these tongues by study. Still others regard it as proven that the higher spiritual character of those who professed the new religion commended it in an irresistible way to the heathen population of the empire.

The question which I would like to suggest is whether we have not left out of the reckoning a preparation for the spread of Christianity, which the emperors themselves had been making before Christ was born. God used the ruling powers and the politicians of Rome, without their knowing it, to carry out Divine plans and purposes. They "builded better than they knew." Just as our Government built the first Pacific railway as a political necessity, in order to bind the Pacific and the Atlantic coasts together, so for purely political and military ends did Rome bind by her wonderful roads and remote religions of the empire to the imperial city. But what they did from merely human and selfish considerations was overruled so to advance the cause of Christ's religion that in 300 years it had overspread all the lands of the wide domain of the Cæsars, and a professing Christian put on the purple and ascended the imperial throne. We congratulate ourselves when the pavement of our cities outlasts the wear of a dozen years. But there are highways in the open country of Europe, which Roman engineers constructed nearly or quite 2,000 years ago, which are in constant use to-day. In his Decline and Fall of the Roman Empire Gibbon tells us that "mountains were perforated and bold arches flung over the broadest and most rapid rivers." From the imperial city as a center, perfectly built roads extended like the spokes of a wheel to the most distant parts of the empire.

Address before fifth International Good Roads Congress, Chicago, February 26, 1913, by C. Gordon Reel, State superintendent of highways of New York.

In bare figures, at the close of business on December 31, 1912, we had in New York 3,578 miles of highways completed and 1,627 under contract, which will give the State 5,205 miles assured. There is now $2,423,000 unobligated of the original $50,000,000 bond issue, which, at an average of $10,000 per mile, will procure 242 miles, or give, with the total obligation of the money devoted to highways to date, 5,450 miles.

Good-roads work was begun in New York State in 1898 and was carried on by the State engineer with varying success until 1905, when the demand for public improved highways became so great that a referendum act was passed by the legislature, and at the following election the people appropriated $50,000,000, to be raised by the sale of bonds, and the proceeds devoted to the construction of improved highways.

The work was carried on under the State engineer until 1908, when Gov. Hughes established the highway department, under a so-called nonpolitical highway commission made up of three members. In 1911 the department was reorganized by Gov. Dix, who placed the work under a commission also made up of three members, a superintendent of highways, to hold office at the pleasure of the governor (which office I now hold), the State engineer, an elective office, and the superintendent of public works, appointed by the governor. Again this proved unsatisfactory, principally on account of the divided responsibility and also because the two members who were also heads of other large departments could not find time to properly study the immense problems constantly to be confronted. In fact, they found it impossible to even attend the meetings of the commission, an average of four meetings being called to one actually held during the past year. Another drawback to this plan was that no sooner had a superintendent become thoroughly familiar with the work than he was liable to be replaced upon a change of administration, the term of the governor of New York being two years.

Upon Mr. Sulzer becoming governor an immediate change of plan was adopted. The senate has just passed a bill again completely reorganizing the department. Under this all highway work will be under one head, a highway commissioner, who, being appointed by the governor and confirmed by the senate, serves for a term of five years and can only be removed by the governor upon charges proven of inefficiency, neglect of duty, or misconduct in office.

There are 80,000 miles of public roads in New York. About 11,000 of these are designated as being State and county highways, and the remainder town highways. The actual road building is carried on by three deputies, who are experienced highway engineers and practical road builders. The first deputy has charge of actual construction work, the second deputy has charge of maintenance and repair, and the third deputy has charge of the 69,000 miles of town roads not in the State and county system.

When the first bond issue was passed the idea was to divide the mileage equitably amongst the different counties, each county selecting its own particular system and paying part of the cost. It soon developed that this would result in a disjointed and unworkable good-roads plan as regards the State as a whole. Therefore a system of through trunk lines was established between the centers of population, the entire cost of building to be borne by the State.

It has been my endeavor to complete these through routes, and within a year I have placed under contract or now have plans prepared for a letting in March which will give at the end of the construction season of 1913 completed highways from New York City along the eastern line of the State to Albany; from New York City on either bank of the Hudson to Albany and then on to the Canadian border line; from New York through the southern tier of counties to Lake Erie; from Albany to Buffalo; from Albany to Binghamton; etc. These, with the county systems which are now being built, also with a reference to the State routes, will form a completed network very shortly which will not only cover our own State but meet the main traffic routes from the neighboring States and Provinces.

The town highways are being steadily improved, so as to act as feeders; for however perfect the State and county system highways may be, if a farmer has to haul his produce over from 3 to 5 miles of the ordinary country road they are practically of no use to him. Of these roads on December 31 we had 3,500 miles macadamized, 8,500 improved as gravel roads, 50,000 miles shaped, crowned, and standardized as to width, and the remaining 6,000 miles put in safe condition for travel, which is remarkable, considering that the executive cost for the supervisors of this class of work by our bureau of town highways is less than one-fourth of 1 per cent.

We are building the State and county highways 16 feet in width and of a standard thickness of 9 inches. Although there have been 16 different sets of specifications in use, it is my intention to cut these down to 5 standard types of construction, viz:

Plain macadam.
Water-bound macadam with hot-oil treatment.
Asphalt macadam—penetration.
Mixed asphalt macadam and bitulithic.
Concrete and brick.

Ranging from $5,000 to $25,000 per mile. These, of course, to be used as to the traffic requirements.

The maintenance problem is to-day the most difficult that confronts us. With hundreds of miles of roads built to meet conditions that have materially changed with the increased motor traffic many hitherto perfectly satisfactory roads would go to rack and ruin in a very few months did they not receive the most careful attention. Therefore it is my policy to increase the percentage of the permanent elements of construction, such as alignment, grade, heavy bottom course, culverts, etc., so that upon the total expenditure of the funds provided by the bond issues we will have certain perpetual results to show.

As for the actual results obtained by the expenditure of the first bond issue, that is very difficult to reduce to figures or even words. A railroad or steamship line can compute on their receipts, but the earnings of a highway are the thousand and one conveniences that can come no other way to country life. It means everything from the marketing of crops to the merest social pleasures. One thing we have seen in the State of New York, and that is the steady and permanent increase in property value all along the line of improved highways.

Address before the Fifth International Good Roads Congress, Chicago, Ill., February 26 to March 2, 1913.

(By William Bradburn, consulting engineer, Houston, Tex.)

Public roads in Texas: Improper construction.

Need of a State law governing the width of wheel tires and the minimum live load allowable on highway bridges.

The basis of road building:

A competent engineer, not a theorist, but an engineer who has proved his ability by his works, one who is honest and conscientious, having the manhood to acknowledge and learn from his errors of judgment.

I am not advancing any new theory when I say that in any engineering work material of medium, or even poor, quality can by careful manipulation be made to produce better results than first-class material carelessly put together. Nowhere is this principle better illustrated than in the misuse of excellent material which is being made in some of our roads, where tons upon tons of first-class stone are being buried in sand and loam and called good roads.

Earth roads—machinery and implements necessary:

A 10-ton steam or gasoline roller, first-class heavy grader, slip and wheel scrapers.

The Hon. Ed. R. Kone, commissioner of agriculture for the State of Texas, who formerly was county judge of Hays County for nearly 30 years, was the first county judge who had the courage and backbone to break away from the old beaten path of using oxen or mules to the road grader and substitute a steam roller in making earth roads.

He was truly "the man of the hour," fighting against ignorance, prejudice, and the wishes and advice of his best friends, with the result that to-day other counties, not only in Texas, but all over the United States, are following his example and have better constructed and cheaper roads, for when an earth road is constructed it is ready for travel and only costs $1 a mile to reroll the same after travel during a wet spell. Contrast this with the split drag, which from actual experience in our black-waxy-gumbo soil costs $3 per mile, or 300 per cent more than the steam roller, and leaves an unsatisfactory surface.

All public roads should have a width of 40 feet between the ditch lines and have perfect drainage ditches, not only longitudinal, of sufficient depth and perfect draining, but intersected by transversals and laterals not more than half a mile apart, the principle being to take the water away from the roadbed as rapidly as possible.

CROSS SECTION OF ROADS.

First, see that the sod, with all grass, weeds, and vegetable matter, is removed. Earth will never compact as long as it contains vegetable matter. The roadbed must be high and dry, but not modeled after the roof of a house, and have a cross-section that will insure quick drainage, flattened at the top and gradually increasing in slope toward the ditches.

To illustrate: For a 40-foot road, with a fall of 12 inches from crown to bottom of ditch, working from center toward ditches, fall of 1 inch in 5 feet, 3 inches in 10 feet, 6 inches in 15 feet, and 12 inches in 20 feet. They should not be constructed during a rainy season, and a careful inspection should be made to discover springs or spots which by being spongy are unfit for travel and provision made for the drainage of such places by tiling, blind rock drains, or even poles.

A 10-ton steam or gasoline roller should be used continuously until the road is so hard the wheels of wagons will not make an impression.

SHELL, GRAVEL, OR MACADAM ROADS.

Six inches of trap rock, or crystalline limestone, is better than 10 inches of shell or gravel. Inferior rock without any binding qualities may be used in the bottom 4-inch course, but the top course, or wearing surface, of 2 inches in thickness and screenings, should be trap rock or a hard limestone which has cementing qualities. Water should be freely used on all but the first layer of the bottom course. Care should be exercised so that no rock or gravel over 2½ inches in size finds its way into the bottom course, as larger rocks, no matter how well placed, always come to the surface.

Traction engines and automatic dump cars should be substituted for wagons with mules in hauling material, as the following table will show the saving in a 20-foot roadway, using 10 inches of rock, gravel, or shell: First mile, $987; second, $1,758; third, $2,184; fourth, $2,706; fifth, $3,520—the longer the haul the more increase in cost.

Counties should purchase their own road material and deliver free on board cars at the nearest siding.

If the contractor supplies the material none but rich contractors can bid on the work, the average contractor is shut out, and there are generally two bidders—two or three blind bidders—when there should be from 30 to 40 contractors in competition. Again, the county or city pays dear for the erroneous system which retains 20 per cent until completion of work. In such cases contractors usually borrow money at a high rate of interest, and all add to their bids enough to cover this cost.

Wheel-tire law: Roads are cut to pieces with heavy loads on narrow tires, and a law should be enacted governing the width of tire in proportion to the load carried. In the State of Ohio, during the winter of 1905–6, the "20-mule borax team" were prohibited from traveling in several counties on the ground that the wheel tires were not sufficiently wide in proportion to the load carried.

BRIDGES.

As the weight of a load is in proportion to the strength of the weakest bridge, so a standard carrying capacity of all county bridges should be established by law; and please bear in mind the fact that the bridge that was good enough 10 years ago can not be traveled in safety by the vehicles of to-day, for improved roads means heavier loads.

To illustrate: I recently examined three bridges in separate counties having one common point, viz, Galveston, Harris, and Brazoria. The Galveston County Bridge would carry 20 tons, the Harris 16 tons, and the Brazoria County only 6 tons. Assuming these bridges are standards for each of these three counties, a traction engine weighing 20 tons could travel only in Galveston County and a 16-ton engine in Harris County and Galveston County.

There should be a law enacted making all county bridges capable of sustaining a minimum live load of 20 tons, as there is in the State of Ohio.

I am glad to report advancement in the good-roads movement for the State of Texas and extend a handclasp to your president, Arthur C. Jackson, my old-time comrade in arms, who fought by my side in many battles for good roads under the tongue-scarred banner of the National Good Roads Association, whose banner, though "tattered and torn," has been the educator, instructor, and means of building and beautifying good roads from the Atlantic to the Pacific.

In my address before the first Texas good roads congress, at Dallas, Tex., October 26, 1911, I said:

"The good-roads movement will never be complete and a success without the aid of woman. Man projects, invents, and builds, but it takes woman to spur him on and beautify his work.

"Our roads should be lined with shade trees in order to beautify and afford protection and comfort to the traveler.

"We commemorate the birth of Washington, the father of the grandest country on the face of the earth, where all by honest toil may have comfort, freedom, and liberty. Let us commemorate the mothers of our country by the planting of shade trees along our highways and making them beautiful."

This 22d day of February, 1913, has this prophesy been fulfilled in Harris County (see clipping from Houston Post):

"Trees to be planted to-day; official and representative citizens to be present; camphor trees will be used to line driveway between Houston and Galveston, rotary club plan."

And another:

"Every citizen of Houston is urged to plant one or more roses to-day, that in years to come Houston will be known as the rose city as well as 'Magnolia City.'"

I extend an invitation to the International Good Roads Congress to hold their next congress in Houston, Harris County, Tex.

Houston: The most progressive, hospitable, and courteous city in the State, and the only city in the world where the paved streets in the business section are torn up regularly every month to accommodate corporations and keep the business men wide awake.

Harris County: Which has more good roads and smoother roads than any county in the State, and which, on February 20, 1913, voted another million-dollar bond issue for good roads and carried the same by a vote of 7 to 1.

Texas: The largest, best, and only Lone Star State in the Union.

Resolutions unanimously adopted at the Illinois State and Interstate Good Roads Convention, Auditorium Hotel, Lincoln's Birthday, Chicago, February 12, 1912.

Whereas the statutes of Illinois with reference to highway improvement have not been materially changed since 1883, and whereas the demand for highway improvement is imperative because of the growth of many modern inventions, and whereas the citizens of Illinois seem to be unanimously in favor of improvements of this character, but are hampered by laws which prevent a practical, economic, efficient, and systematic improvement of our highways; and

Whereas all the other progressive States of our Union, no greater in wealth and population than Illinois, have adopted modern methods for financing, building, and maintaining adequate systems of hard roads, with an equitable sharing of the expenses thereof by the people of the State and local communities; and

Whereas the date of the holding of this convention is the anniversary day of the birth of the immortal Lincoln, and were he alive he would apply the same constructive thought to this most important public necessity as characterized every move of his life: Be it therefore

Resolved, That this association, in convention assembled, urge the Legislature of the State of Illinois that the subject of good roads be made one of the important subjects for consideration at the next general assembly, and that legislation be enacted eliminating the obsolete and criminally incompetent provisions now on our statute books and substituting therefor legislation whereby an immediate and close cooperation can be had between all of the people of the State for the speedy construction of an adequate system of highways; that an appropriation be made by the State for a substantial portion of the expense thereof, to be expended under the direction of the highway commission of the State; that the powers of the highway commission of the State be amplified, and that they may be given such power as will enable them to build a complete system of modern highways throughout the State of Illinois, and that when by the development of this system of modern highways the road between Chicago and St. Louis, via Springfield, is completed it be officially known as the Lincoln Memorial Highway; be it

Resolved further, That this movement being wholly nonpartisan and nonsectarian and of equal benefit to all the taxpayers of the State, we solicit the assistance and cooperation of the women and the public press of the State of Illinois; be it also

Resolved, That we invoke the financial support of all the citizens of the State of Illinois to assist in the organization of this work and the accomplishment of its purposes; be it further

Resolved, That we recognize the great and patriotic service rendered to this cause by the president of this organization, the Hon. Arthur C. Jackson.

Address by Miss Maude E. Jones, secretary the National Good Roads Association, at the Englewood Woman's Club, Chicago, February 24, 1913.

Madam President and members of the Englewood Woman's Club, I heartily appreciate the honor of having been invited to meet with you and acquaint you with some of the work that has been done by the National Good Roads Association and some of its plans for the future.

The production of permanent public roads and streets is one of the most important problems of the century, affecting the material and social well-being of all classes and conditions of people, and the Fifth International Good Roads Congress is hereby called to meet in Chicago, February 26–March 2, 1913.

Thomas J. Tynan, warden of the Colorado State Penitentiary, will exhibit 2,000 feet of motion picture films and many lantern slides, illustrating convict road camps and actual construction of good roads in Colorado by convicts, which have been taken 100, 200, 300, and more miles away from the penitentiary. Perhaps no man in the country has done more to demonstrate the inhumanity and uselessness of the ordinary treatment of convicts in our penitentiaries. Why should not Illinois profit by the splendid example of Colorado and other States that use large numbers of these men in building roads and rebuilding men without reference to term of sentence?

For 13 years the National Good Roads Association has advocated the use of convict labor for road construction, and one of the six original articles of association, adopted at Chicago in the year 1900, reads as follows:

"To utilize all able-bodied tramps, vagrants, paupers, prisoners, and convicts in preparing materials and building public roads and streets."

At the Fourth International Good Roads Congress held in this city two years ago the governors of four States were present at one session, and the address of Gov. SHAFROTH, of Colorado, who will be a United States Senator from Colorado during the next six years, detailing the Colorado method of using convicts in building roads, made a profound impression. The governor showed how convicts were taken 50, 100, 200, and even 300 miles away from the State penitentiary and voluntarily gave a most devoted service to the State in return for the privilege of being in the open air and away from prison walls; that the men thus engaged worked without armed guards and were not even locked up at night, and that a stranger passing one of these convict camps, or even if he tarried long enough to examine it, could find nothing whatever to suggest that the workers were from a penitentiary. These results would appear to be almost unbelievable had they not been abundantly demonstrated. Such conditions must develop a new hope and a new life and prepare men to become useful citizens.

The secret of all this is twofold: First, a warden who is in love with his work and takes a personal interest in the well-being and the regeneration of the men in his charge, and, second, a State law which gives the convict a third of his time off when working on the roads. Thus a man who is sentenced to a three-year term may, by working on the public highways, serve but two years. Also there is in Colorado, as in some other States, what is called the indeterminate sentence. It is thus explained by Senator SHAFROTH:

"The judge will sentence a man for a term of from 10 to 20 years. The lesser is called the minimum, and the greater the maximum sentence. If the prisoner's conduct is good, he saves time even on his minimum sentence. In a 10 to 20 year sentence, if his conduct is perfect and his road work good, he can get out in four years and three months, when he is placed on parole until the end of his maximum sentence."

"We have had fewer escapes," said the governor, "under this practice than we ever had in the history of the penitentiary of the State of Colorado. There are in the State at this time 750 prisoners in the penitentiary, over 300 of whom are out at work upon the public roads. When we realize that in all States of the United States there must be at least 100,000 prisoners, it is clear that there is a force for work in the building of good roads that is enormous. Take 200 convicts and estimate their work at the rate of $2 a day each. There is $600 a day that goes into the construction of good roads. That is a very large amount. In some of the Eastern States, where the number of prisoners is very large and the territory very small, what great results could be accomplished."

"We have found," continued the governor, "that this inducement, this hope of reward, has a most salutary effect upon the conduct of the men, even after they are discharged from the penitentiary. The very fact that a man earns his liberty by his own work puts into him a spirit of independence, a hope, the knowledge that if one can get reward in a penitentiary he can surely get it in the open field of labor. Consequently there is a new-born hope in him, which is likely to make him a better man and a better citizen. It is for these reasons I feel that every State ought to pass a law giving a commutation of sentence to every prisoner who will work upon the public roads."

We have distributed many thousand copies of the address of Gov. SHAFROTH, and reached with them every State of the Union, as well foreign countries.

Here is something for us to do worth doing—something fully a million miles in advance of pink teas and bridge whist. The women's clubs of Illinois, by a united demand upon the legislature for the Colorado law in this State, can secure it, and it would be an achievement of the greatest practical value, both to the prisoners and to the State.

In this connection let me call your attention to the Lincoln Memorial Highway, planned to connect his home in Springfield with Chicago, St. Louis, and the county seat of every county in the State, and outlined in the official call for the Lincoln Birthday Good Roads Convention of last year. "A great central boulevard between these three cities, which shall surpass in beauty, usefulness, and permanency any equal mileage of highway in the world, and connecting with it from the county seat of every county in the State an equally permanent and serviceable public road, which may serve as a daily reminder of him whose greatest ambition was to serve his fellow men, as well as providing Illinois with a permanent system of roads which will be an almost inconceivable source of wealth to the State."

I think were Lincoln alive his great heart would rejoice at the thought of a work of such usefulness to all of the people, being done by the voluntary labor of those unfortunates who thus expiated in some measure their offenses against society; and I also believe that the thought of aiding in the production of such a monument to the martyred Lincoln would ennoble the work in the mind of many a prisoner engaged in it and make of him a better man.

Why not the club women of Illinois make this a reality by uniting in an aggressive demand for the Lincoln memorial road?

Address of Miss Alma Rittenberry, chairman Jackson Memorial Highway Commission, Birmingham, Ala., before Fifth International Good Roads Congress, Chicago.

I am diligently at work in the interest of the Jackson Highway, which is a Lakes-to-the-Gulf highway—a work planned and launched by the Alabama Daughters of 1812 at the Fourth National Good Roads Congress, held in Birmingham in 1911. I can best express the work in the words of Mrs. Walter W. Watts, who represented the chairman at your meeting in Baltimore last June:

"LADIES AND GENTLEMEN: In behalf of the Jackson highway committee in my own behalf as State president, and in behalf of the North Carolina Daughters of 1812, as well as in behalf of the patriotic citizenship of North Carolina, the birthplace of Andrew Jackson, I file my earnest plea for the great practical and useful monument, in the form of a public highway from the Lakes to the Gulf, which was launched under the auspices of the Alabama Daughters of 1812 in honor of the hero of New Orleans. Andrew Jackson was a man of action and one in whose veins blood ran warm and quick, therefore no monument of unfeeling stone to him, no statues of cold metal, but better yet, a great utility to honor a great utilitarian, a pulsating life-given thoroughfare, devoted to the needs and pleasures of those whose prosperity and happiness were largely made possible by the tenacity of purpose and temerity of patriotism of this great North Carolinian. Call it the Jackson Highway, build it better than Appius Claudius built the Appian Way, and, as near as possible, along the routes of the doughty old warrior's military roads, and a monument will have been built to Gen. Andrew Jackson, patriot, soldier, and statesman, that will survive longer than the Coliseum of ancient Rome, and reflect honor for the pride of posterity."

CHICAGO, ILL., March 1, 1912.

Resolved, That the conservation committee indorses the good-roads movement in the State of Illinois, and the proposed State highway to lead from Chicago to Springfield, and from Springfield to St. Louis, Mo., as an initial step toward the consummation of the national highway from the Atlantic to the Pacific Ocean.

CHICAGO, ILL., March 1, 1912.

Resolved, That in view of the proposition made to the conservation department, Illinois State Federation of Women's Clubs, by Mr. Jackson, president of the Illinois State Good Roads Association—

First. That the members of the department indorse the calling of a woman's good roads convention, to be held April 3 and 4, 1912, at the Auditorium in Chicago.

Second. That we further the proposition by asking every club to cooperate by sending representatives to the convention.

* * * * * * *

Resolved, The Englewood Woman's Club heartily indorses the movement of the National and Illinois State Good Roads Associations—to employ convict labor in the making of good roads.

Resolved, We, the Ravenswood Woman's Club, heartily indorse the movement of the National and Illinois State Good Roads Associations—to employ convict labor in the making of good roads.

Resolved, That the Park Ridge Woman's Club has unanimously decided that the club is every ready to do all in its power to assist in the much-needed work of improving the roads of Illinois, and approves of the plan of showing the respect of our great American, Abraham Lincoln, of naming a great highway which it is hoped will be soon built in honor to so noble a citizen. What more memorable monument could be erected to his memory—one that can not only be looked upon but can be of real service to thousands of people?

Resolved, That we are very desirous of being identified as life members of both the National and Illinois State Good Roads Associations.

Resolved, That the Woman's Club of Austin indorses the use of convict labor in the building of good roads, the proposed Lincoln memorial road connecting Chicago with Springfield and St. Louis and the county seat of every county in the State, and accepts life membership in the good roads association, as per inclosed blank filled out for the club.

Resolved, That the Millard Avenue Woman's Club heartily indorses the movement of the National and Illinois State Good Roads Associations to employ convict labor in the making of good roads.

Resolved, That the Garden Prairie Woman's Club heartily indorses convict labor on the public highways, to better facilitate the marketing of agricultural products; and, second, we are very much in favor of the building of a Lincoln memorial road.

Resolved, The Woman's Club of Henry indorses the use of convict labor in building good roads and the proposed Lincoln memorial road connecting Springfield with the county seat of every county in the State and also accepts life membership in the National and Illinois State Good Roads Associations.

Signed by 40 woman's clubs from different cities of Illinois.

TARIFF DUTY ON SUGAR AND WOOL.

Mr. NEWLANDS. In my remarks the other day upon the tariff I made reference to certain telegrams, extracts from speeches, platforms tentative and otherwise, and I thought I had asked leave to have them inserted in the RECORD. I find I did not, and I now make that request.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection?

Mr. JONES. In view of the fact that other matters have been permitted to be printed in the RECORD to-day I shall not object to the request of the Senator from Nevada.

The VICE PRESIDENT. There being no objection, leave is granted to print in the RECORD as requested.

CLOTURE AND DILATORY TACTICS.

Mr. OWEN. I desire to give notice that on Friday next, June 20, following the routine morning business, I shall address the Senate on the subject of cloture and dilatory tactics.

THE TARIFF (S. DOC. NO. 108).

Mr. SMOOT. I have prepared certain data relative to the amount of merchandise imported into this country for consumption from the year 1907 to the year 1912, showing the amount of importations that were free, the amount that were dutiable, the duty collected, the average equivalent ad valorem, and other information. I ask that these data may be printed as a public document.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection?

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, I desire to inquire of the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT]—I am not objecting to his request—when he proposes to have published the matter which he submitted to the Senate probably a week or 10 days ago, to the printing of which I objected at the time, asking for an opportunity to look into it. After examining it I became convinced they were valuable data, but the Senator desired me to return them for some corrections, stating, as I understood, that he would ask to publish the matter later. I should like very much to know when the Senator proposes to have the data published. If he can not publish them, I should like to ask if the Senator will permit me to examine them?

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, in answer to the inquiry of the Senator from North Carolina, I will state that I would have had this information published before this, only there has been objection raised each time I have asked to have it printed as a public document. I have, in connection with that, a separate document which I have prepared and which I desire to print with it; and I expect at the next session of the Senate to ask that that be printed as a part of the document which I have already obtained permission to print. I think by that time that I shall have the other document referred to by the Senator from North Carolina ready for the printer.

Mr. SIMMONS. I will say to the Senator that I shall be glad if he will have it printed this week. I think it is valuable information that the committee ought to have, and has been prepared, as I understand, by an official of the Department of Justice. It is a mere analysis of certain provisions of the bill, showing the connection of one section with another section. After examining it, I think it ought to be printed. I will ask the Senator whether he will not now ask for permission to have it printed?

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, if I had the document here and had the corrections already made, I should gladly ask permission to have it printed. I will repeat to the Senator from North Carolina now that I think I will have it ready by the next session of the Senate.

Mr. SIMMONS. The Senator from Utah can obtain permission now to have it printed and get the matter ready subsequently.

Mr. SMOOT. By the next session of the Senate I shall have it ready. I will say to the Senator that the document I now ask to have printed relates to questions that will arise in the discussion of the tariff I suppose every day during the debate. I have, therefore, asked that this small document be printed as a public document.

Mr. SIMMONS. I am not objecting to that at all; and, if the Senator will permit me, I will ask consent to have printed the other matter, so that we may have the use and benefit of it. As I have stated, it has been prepared by a Government official.

Mr. SMOOT. I do not desire the Senator from North Carolina to ask unanimous consent for that purpose. I will say to the Senator from North Carolina that I will ask unanimous consent for that purpose just as soon as the document is prepared, and I think it will be ready by the next meeting of the Senate.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. I should like to ask the Senator from North Carolina a question before he takes his seat.

Mr. SMOOT. I should like to know, Mr. President, whether there is any objection to printing this matter I have asked permission to have printed?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to printing as a public document the matter referred to by the Senator from Utah? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. I should like to ask the Senator from North Carolina whether he can advise the Senate as to when we may expect the tariff bill from the Committee on Finance?

Mr. SIMMONS. I will say to the Senator from Michigan that we are working under high pressure. On yesterday we held three sessions—morning, afternoon, and at night. Of course the meetings of the Senate interfere somewhat with our work, but after to-day I shall ask permission of the Senate that we may hold our meetings during the sessions of the Senate, if necessary, though I do not suppose that will be necessary. I think I may say to the Senator from Michigan that some time during next week we shall be able to report the bill to the Senate.

THE THREE-YEAR HOMESTEAD LAW.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I understand the Senator from Washington [Mr. JONES] has consented that we may have some memorials printed in the RECORD. In view of that fact, I want to call the attention of the Committee on Public Lands to the fact that during the last session of Congress we passed what is known as the three-year homestead law. The bill as it passed the Senate provided for a residence period of three years and for an absence from the homestead of five months out of each year. After the measure went to the House of Representatives—either in the House or in conference—there was inserted a clause which provided for the cultivation of not less than 10 acres during the second year and of 20 acres during the third year. That clause was inserted by those who were afraid of speculation in public lands, but its only effect is to work a material hardship to those who are not speculators, but who are honestly endeavoring to secure homes, but by reason of their limited means can not do so upon a great deal of the public lands. The result of this law has been to put in peril a number of homesteads throughout the West. Men who have gone upon their homesteads and have cultivated them to a certain extent now find themselves unable to comply with the law, and their homesteads in some instances are held for cancellation. So it is one of those things in regard to which it is necessary that Congress act at once if it is to serve those who are now in peril of forfeiting their homesteads.

I do not know whether the Public Lands Committee will report a bill in reference to this matter at this session, but there has been a bill introduced by myself which is now before the Public Lands Committee providing for an amendment to this law. In order that the Public Lands Committee may be informed as to the great necessity of quick action in regard to the matter, I ask to have printed in the RECORD a letter addressed to Hon. Joseph N. Teal, of Portland, Oreg., a gentleman who has taken a great deal of interest in these matters, by one who has observed, and from experience knows, the effect of this amendment which was inserted as I have stated in the new homestead law. I particularly call the attention of the Public Lands Committee to this letter, hoping that after reading it the committee will conclude to report a measure at this session for the purpose of amending this law.

Mr. SHIVELY. Mr. President, does the Senator from Idaho mean to say that the act passed at the last session of Congress was so worded that it affected the homesteader then on the land and changed his obligations?

Mr. BORAH. Yes; that is the effect of the law as it has been construed.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President——

Mr. BORAH. In other words, if the Senator from Utah will excuse me just a moment, under the old law there was no specific amount of land required to be cultivated, but under the new law it is required that a man cultivate not less than 10 acres the second year and 20 acres for the third year. A man desiring to avail himself of the new law must comply with its terms, of course, and, in addition to that, there has been a construction which would seem to indicate that he must comply with the new law and can not complete his proof under the old law. In any event all new entrymen must comply with the new law. So the title of a number of these homesteaders is in peril, especially in parts of Oregon and northern Idaho and other sections of the country with reference to these cut-over lands. It is just as difficult to clear the cut-over lands as it is to clear lands in the first instance; it costs from $75 to $100 per acre; and a man must have a bank account in order to comply with this provision of the law. In fact, as so clearly and fully shown by this letter, written in a most convincing way, the law, as it now stands, is impossible of compliance by men of limited means—the men who ought to be favored by homestead laws.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator a question to ascertain whether I understood him aright. Does the Senator say that there has been a ruling by the Interior Department that an entryman must prove up under the amended law?

Mr. BORAH. No; I did not say that. I said that the rulings were such as to indicate that the only safe course for the entryman to pursue was to prove up under the new law. There has not been a distinct ruling upon the proposition, but I will say that under the new law the Senator will remember there was a provision that under a given state of circumstances the Secretary of the Interior could reduce the amount of land required to be put under cultivation. The Secretary of the Interior preceding the present Secretary of the Interior ruled in regard to that matter in such a way that it is a dead letter, because the conditions under which the Secretary will reduce the amount of cultivation are conditions which seldom, if ever, arise. The clause had just as well have been eliminated.

Mr. SMOOT. That is not, then, the fault of the law, but is the fault of the ruling made by the Secretary of the Interior, because the law specifically provides that in certain cases and under certain conditions the Secretary of the Interior is authorized to reduce the amount of cultivation.

Mr. BORAH. Of course it is not the fault of the law in a technical sense, but we ought to make it so plain that there can be no possible avoidance of its terms.

Mr. SMOOT. Of course, Mr. President, the entryman has his choice as to which law he will prove up under—whether under the original homestead law under which the entry was made or whether he desires to prove up under the three-year homestead act.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to printing in the RECORD the letter referred to by the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH]? The Chair hears none.

The letter was referred to the Committee on Public Lands and ordered printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Hon. JOSEPH N. TEAL, Portland, Oreg.

DEAR SIR: In compliance with your request I give you my views as to the advisability of amending the three-year homestead law.

During the larger portion of the time between 1901 and 1910 I was engaged in surveying and looking over Government land in the interests of home seekers. While engaged in this work I entered almost every township of land in western Oregon, and became thoroughly familiar with the problems and difficulties which the homesteader has to face in this particular section. On March 14, 1910, I took up a homestead of 160 acres in Lincoln County, Oreg., which I have since occupied and cultivated.

In my entire experience I have not found a single claim of 160 acres in western Oregon upon which the average homesteader could comply with the requirements of cultivation of the three-year law. This law requires that the entryman must cultivate not less than one-sixteenth of the area of his entry, beginning with the second year of the entry, and not less than one-eighth beginning with the third year of the entry.

Under this new law the Secretary of the Interior has the power to reduce the cultivation requirement upon a "satisfactory showing" by the entryman. This phase of the law means practically nothing in the actual operation of the law to the homesteader, because the Secretary may defer action on application for a reduction in cultivation until final proof is made on the entry. During the entire life of the entry the entryman is to live in suspense, and the final result of his efforts and labors is to be a lottery until the statutory period of his entry has elapsed. And if I may judge the future by the past the entryman would find that the Land Department, for some cause or other, would cancel his entry or at least protest the same.

I say that it is impossible to comply with the cultivation requirement of the three-year law in the western part of Oregon and in many places in the eastern part of the State; also in the mountain regions of the other public-land States. The conditions in western Oregon which make this law inoperative are:

First. All the available Government lands are located in the foothills, and but a small percentage of each claim is level enough to permit actual cultivation. There are no valley lands. Actual cultivation and farming can be done only in small areas. The steep hillsides are used for grazing only, and the department has held that grazing can not be accepted as cultivated land.

Second. These lands are far removed from railroad transportation, often a considerable distance from wagon roads, and the homesteader finds that he must first open up his claim by building trails and roads. This road building and the building of a house requires all of the first year of the entry, and but very little can be done in clearing and cultivating. Material for buildings must be hewed out of timber found on the land. If there is no timber, then lumber must be hauled a long distance.

Third. Practically all of the vacant lands are located in what is known as the "burnt-over lands." This land was at one time heavily timbered, but the timber was deadened by fire many years ago.

When the homesteader goes upon this land he finds rich productive soil, but he is confronted with the trunks of the old decayed trees, which are often from 3 to 6 feet in diameter. He also finds the stumps of these monstrous trees, and in many places a very heavy undergrowth of alder, maple, ash, and fern, all of which has no commercial value. The photographs marked "A" and "B" show the condition of the land in the burnt regions.

Fourth. The expense of building trails, roads, and bridges to reach these lands is often large and must be met by one or two homesteaders. There are but few claims to be found in one location.

This work and the building of a house often requires all of the first year, and there is no time for clearing and cultivating land.

Fifth. The average homesteader is a laboring man, and has very small financial resources with which to make a home, even though the land was more accessible and more easily cleared.

Sixth. The average cost of clearing an acre of this land is $125, and sometimes exceeds $200.

The three-year law was passed June 6, 1912, and it provides that proof may be made on unperfected entries either under the old homestead law or under the new law, as the entryman may elect. In every instance the entryman elected to make final proof under the old law. This is positive proof that the three-year law does not reduce the requirements and that it imposes hardships which the old law did not. It shows that the entryman would rather make proof under the old law, although the new law gives him the right to be absent from the claim five months of each year.

The new law has caused a decrease in the number of homestead filings, and I know of numerous instances where the entryman who filed under this act relinquished his rights after learning that he could not comply with the requirements of the act. Land scrip has been filed on this same land.

I suppose Congress really intended that this law should give the homesteader relief, and that it would result in increasing entries under the homestead laws. The actual operation of the law is to the contrary. It works against the homesteader and the Government and works in the interests of the land speculator and the scrip owners and the railroad companies.

The mistaken idea of requiring a large and definite area of cultivation originated with those who sought some scheme to prevent timbered lands from being entered under the homestead laws. In the first place, there are no timberlands subject to entry. Timberlands have passed out of the hands of the Government through the timber and stone act and by scrip selections, and it is now too late to shoulder the responsibilities upon the poor homesteader and make him suffer the sins of poor management upon the part of the Government. In the Portland district, where it would be supposed that many timber and stone entries were being made, we find that during the past year only 20 entries were filed, and these have been in most instances for 40-acre tracts. This is proof that the timberlands are gone.

Should the homesteader have the good fortune to secure a claim which has some merchantable timber, it would certainly be the best thing for the Government and all concerned to have the land entered in this way, because under scrip selections the land passes to the speculator, who gives the Government nothing in return, neither does he help to open up and improve the country.

The old homestead law was a good one. All it needed was an amendment shortening the period of residence, and then a sensible construction of the cultivation requirement.

In lieu of the cultivation requirement of the new three-year law I would suggest that the entryman be required to place upon the land improvements up to a certain value each year of the entry.

The average homesteader has less than $500 in money and personal property when he enters a claim. He finds the lands as I have described. The improvements which he will be able to make the first year will be the building of trails and roads and a house. In addition to this, he will be able to clear a patch of ground, say one-fourth of an acre, and perhaps raise a small garden. At the end of the first year he will have spent $300, and his improvements will be worth at least $400. During the second year he is compelled to work away from home a part of the time, but he will succeed in clearing from 1 to 1½ acres. This he will plant and cultivate during the third year. At the end of the third year he will have improved the land to the extent of $600 to $800. He will now offer final proof. He has done all that he could do. He has made for himself a home. He has done a great deal for his country, State, and county, and there is no good reason why he should not have title to the land, although he has less than 3 acres of land actually cleared and cultivated.

It is a well-known fact that the early settlers throughout the Willamette Valley did not clear and cultivate in excess of 1 acre each year on similar lands.

My own experience in homesteading has proved to me that the three-year law is nothing short of a farce.

About one-third of my claim is creek bottom land and is covered with a heavy growth of alder and maple. The balance of the claim is hillside and has a growth of fir timber. Both the hill land and the creek bottom is rich, productive soil.

When I began my residence on this land I had $2,000, out of which I used $1,800 in improving the land. During the first six months of my residence we lived in tents, and during this time I built trails and roads, and built a house hewed from material which I found on the claim. The house is shown in the photograph marked "C." It is 22 feet by 22 feet and contains four rooms. The next six months was spent in clearing land. Beginning with the second year I had 1½ acres cleared and in actual cultivation. Beginning with the third year I had 3 acres in actual cultivation. The land cleared was on the creek bottom, and cost of clearing $130 per acre. The land cleared is shown in the foreground in the photograph marked "D," and the condition of the land before cleared is shown in the background.

At the end of the third year I had a house, small barn, woodshed, and other outbuildings and a total clearing of 3½ acres, all under fence. The total improvements cost $1,800.

I made proof under the old law. It would not have been possible for me to make proof under the three-year law.

The land which I cleared will grow almost any and all kinds of crops. Less than one-eighth of an acre produced 2 tons of cow turnips, and one-half acre produced 2 tons of timothy hay.

The homesteader with 2 or 3 acres of cleared land, and with the advantage of grazing the hill sides with his stock, will make a more comfortable living for his family than the laboring man in the city on wages of $3 per day. The stock will graze the year round, and about all the crops necessary to grow will be for the use of his family.

Senator BORAH has advocated the changing of the three-year law by inserting in lieu of the cultivation requirement an improvement requirement. He thinks that the entryman should place upon the land each year improvements to the value of $1.50 per acre. This is about what could be expected from the average homesteader, and I think it is a common-sense idea.

I trust that you will succeed in amending this law, and that I may have said something that will assist you in your efforts.

Yours, very truly,

H. A. HOSTETLER.

ROCCA, OREG., June 9, 1913.

INHABITED ALLEYS IN THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair lays before the Senate a resolution coming over from a previous day, which will be read.

The Secretary read Senate resolution 107, submitted by Mr. WORKS on the 10th instant, as follows:

Resolved, That the Commissioners of the District of Columbia be, and they are hereby, directed to furnish to the Senate the names, residences, and occupations of all persons owning and renting houses or rooms within what are known and designated as the "inhabited alleys" of the District of Columbia.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

INDIAN APPROPRIATION BILL.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The morning business is closed.

Mr. STONE. I ask that the unfinished business be laid before the Senate.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Missouri asks unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill 1917—the Indian appropriation bill. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 1917) making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Bureau of Indian Affairs, for fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes, and for other purposes, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1914.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The pending amendment is the amendment of the Committee on Indian Affairs, on page 2, line

9, to strike out "$220,000" and insert "$200,000." The Senator from Oregon [Mr. LANE] is entitled to the floor.

[Mr. LANE addressed the Senate. See Appendix.]

Mr. CLAPP. In connection with the remarks just submitted, I should like to have printed in the RECORD pages 1 and 2 and part of page 3 of the hearing before the subcommittee of the Committee on Indian Affairs of the House of Representatives held December 2, 1912.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Minnesota? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

The matter referred to is as follows:

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
SUBCOMMITTEE OF THE COMMITTEE ON INDIAN AFFAIRS,
Washington, D. C., December 2, 1912.

The subcommittee this day met, Hon. JOHN H. STEPHENS (chairman) presiding.

The CHAIRMAN. The first item in the bill is:

"For the survey, resurvey, classification, appraisement, and allotment of lands in severalty under the provisions of the act of February 8, 1887, entitled 'An act to provide for the allotment of lands in severalty to Indians,' and under any other act or acts providing for the survey and allotment of lands in severalty to Indians; and for the survey and subdivision of Indian reservations and lands to be allotted to Indians under authority of law, $200,000, to be repaid proportionately out of any Indian moneys held in trust or otherwise by the United States and available by law for such reimbursable purpose and to remain available until expended."

The following justification has been furnished your committee for this item:

SURVEYING AND ALLOTTING INDIAN RESERVATIONS (REIMBURSABLE).

JUSTIFICATION.

ESTIMATES FOR 1914.

The estimate of the $250,000 submitted for surveying and allotting Indian reservations, reimbursable, 1914, are required for the following purposes:

Completion of allotment work, surveying of town sites, classification and appraisement of surplus lands, Colville Reservation, Wash. $25,000

It is expected that the allotment work on the Colville Reservation, Wash., will be completed next spring. The act of Mar. 22, 1906 (34 Stat. L., 80), provides that upon the completion of the allotment work the surplus lands shall be classified and appraised and opened to settlement and entry by proclamation of the President and authorizes the reservation of such tracts for town-site purposes as may be required for the future public interests and to survey such tracts into blocks and lots.

Allotment work, Pine Ridge Reservation, S. Dak. 20,000

It is estimated that it will require two allotting crews for two years to complete the allotment of the Pine Ridge Indians; $20,000 will be required to keep two crews in the field during the fiscal year 1914.

Survey work by General Land Office 125,000

The official survey by the General Land Office is the first and most important step in the allotment or other disposition of Indian lands. The reservation of tracts and erection of buildings and improvements thereon, for school or agency purposes, depends upon first procuring a proper description of the lands in terms of public surveys. Official surveys by the General Land Office must first be made before lands available for town-site purposes can be reserved and placed on the market or allotments made to Indians so that they can procure such title thereto as to warrant them in improving and cultivating their lands and establishing their homes thereon.

In this connection attention is invited to the following surveys which should be made at the earliest practicable date: Conditions on the various private land grants confirmed to the Pueblo Indians of New Mexico by the Court of Private Land Claims require that the boundaries of these grants be determined and marked with permanent monuments at the earliest practicable date. Conflicts are constantly arising between these Indians and white settlers, involving valuable timber and water rights, which can only be finally settled and avoided in the future by determining and locating the boundaries of these various pueblos. It is estimated by the General Land Office that it will cost approximately $20,000 to survey the boundaries of these pueblos and establish mile and half-mile monuments with iron posts, brass capped.

The town site of Klaxta, within the Spokane Reservation, Wash., was established on May 19, 1908, under the provisions of the act of June 21, 1906 (34 Stat. L., 377). Conditions in this part of the reservation require that reservations be made as to flowage rights, dam and mill sites pertinent to water power within the town site of Klaxta, and that the town site be surveyed into blocks, lots, streets, and alleys and lots disposed of as provided by the act of May 29, 1908 (35 Stat. L., 459). The cost of this work is estimated at $3,000.

Five thousand dollars will be required to survey 45 Indian allotments on unsurveyed lands in T. 32 N., Rs. 11 and 12 E., and T. 33 N., R. 11 E., within the Washington National Forest, Wash. This work should be done at the earliest practicable date, as there is constant conflict between the allottees and the Forest Service officials, due to the disputed location of the allotments.

Surveys to definitely determine and mark the boundaries of the Fort Spokane Military Reservation, Wash., and parts of the boundaries of the Umatilla Indian Reservation, Oreg., are urgent.

The lands patented to the several bands of Mission Indians in California should be surveyed, so that they may be allotted in severalty and the allottees placed on allotments in order to bring them under cultivation and make permanent homes for themselves at the earliest practicable date.

These surveys and others which will come up during the fiscal year 1914 will require at least $125,000 to perform.

Mineral and power-site examinations, Geological Survey $25,000

There are a large number of cases involving the sale or other disposal of Indian lands pending, awaiting the examination of the lands by the Geological Survey to ascertain their value for mineral or power and reservoir site purposes. It is estimated that it will require $25,000 to make the examinations required during the fiscal year 1914.

Allotments, Shoshone Reservation, Wyo. 10,000

It is estimated that it will require one allotting crew for 10 months to make allotments to the unallotted Indians entitled to allotment on this reservation.

Allotments, Hoopa Valley Reservation, Cal. 10,000

It is estimated that it will require one allotting crew for 10 months to allot the unallotted Indians on this reservation.

Allotments, Duck Valley Reservation, Nev. 15,000

It is estimated that it will require one allotting crew for 12 months to allot the Indians on this reservation.

Allotments, public domain 20,000

It is estimated that it will require $20,000 to provide for two allotment crews making allotments on public domain and for the adjustment of allotments heretofore filed.

Total 250,000

Mr. STONE. Mr. President, I shall not consume the time of the Senate by any reply to the quite interesting address of the Senator from Oregon [Mr. LANE]. It may be that the general administration of the Indian Bureau under the Secretary of the Interior is deserving of criticism. I think it is true that in the long stretch of years the administration of the affairs of that important bureau has been running too much in ruts, and that there ought to be some reformation in the general administration of its affairs. I have been under that impression for some years.

The Committee on Indian Affairs in this bill has reported a provision authorizing the appointment of a body to look into the whole field of the administration of Indian affairs, in the department itself and at the various agencies of the country. It will have full authority, if the provision is agreed to by the Congress, to make every possible investigation; and it will be the duty of this body to make recommendations in its report for the future action of the Congress.

The Senator from Oregon is a member of the Committee on Indian Affairs, and that committee was engaged for several weeks upon hearings. They covered almost every phase of the questions and interests involved in Indian administration. The Senator from Oregon was a member of the committee, as I have said, and was quite a constant attendant upon its deliberations. A great deal of information was called for—in fact, far more than it has been customary for that committee to call for in the consideration of Indian appropriation bills. The department supplied a great fund of information in response to the demands made. This information, in a written report, containing tabulations showing expenditures and all that, was laid before the committee and before the Senator from Oregon.

The Senator has asked for information upon this or that paragraph in the bill. It is not within my power to give any information that has not been already supplied by the department.

Now, Mr. President, I have here a document prepared by the bureau which is entitled "a statement including all claims paid on account of the fiscal year 1912 up to April 1, 1913," covering the last appropriations. I am going to ask at this point that this document, which I send to the Clerk's desk, may be printed as a public document for general information.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it will be printed as a public document (S. Doc. No. 197).

Mr. STONE. Mr. President, I am not going to take up time in discussing the bill in general. I am very anxious to dispose of it. It must be disposed of speedily. There are at least two conclusive reasons why it should be done. At the end of this fiscal year, June 30, if the bill be not passed there will be no available funds for carrying on the business of this great bureau. We are now at the middle of June. The bill must go to the House of Representatives. In the bill there are numerous important amendments. We can not know whether the House will agree to them. Many of them, I think it safe to say, the House will not agree to. That may mean a more or less protracted conference.

In addition to that, as was stated this morning by the chairman of the Finance Committee, it is expected that the tariff bill, so called, will be reported to the Senate next week. I am very anxious, Mr. President, the entire committee—I think even including the Senator from Oregon—are anxious to get this matter out of the way. If I misstate the position of the Senator from Oregon——

Mr. LANE. I do not think so much of the bill that I care what happens. I prefer to starve them down a little that we may arrive at the facts, and then act on the facts.

Mr. STONE. Then the Senator from Oregon places himself alone among the members of the committee——

Mr. LANE. Yes; I think he does.

Mr. STONE. In the expression of an absolute indifference as to whether an appropriation bill of this importance shall be passed by the Congress.

Mr. LANE. Pardon me, Mr. President.

Mr. STONE. It may be that the Senator from Oregon is willing for some tangible reason of his own to hang this bill up and hang the department up and leave it with paralyzed hands and arms to carry on the business committed to it. If so, I am sure that he stands alone in the membership of the committee.

Mr. LANE. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Missouri yield to the Senator from Oregon?

Mr. STONE. Of course I yield.

Mr. LANE. I thank the Senator very much.

Mr. President, I suggested that there is a way by which we could carry on the service. I have seen it done in legislative bodies before. They run up a deficiency now without permission or consent. They could carry on the affairs of this department just as carefully as they do now, with all the expenditures allowed month by month, until this body dug into the entrails of the service and found out the facts. You will never do it otherwise. I prefer that method.

Mr. STONE. In other words, the Senator from Oregon would like to have monthly appropriations.

Mr. LANE. Until such time as we knew the facts governing them.

Mr. STONE. And how are we to know the facts, whatever they may be, that the Senator has in mind except by some sort of a protracted investigation?

Mr. LANE. If the Senator will pardon me, I take it it can be done right here in 90 days, without moving out of the committee room upstairs; and if you did that you would not be under the painful necessity of having a puzzling deficiency, which I do not think you or any of the rest of us knew anything about and which is being sought here on this floor at this time. You would escape that.

Mr. STONE. I confess after three weeks of the time of the Senate committee being absorbed in these very investigations the other members of the committee, as a rule at least, have been unable to find out what the Senator from Oregon has in his mind and what he is trying to do. He seems to have something under his vest or shirt, but nobody else knows what it is.

Mr. LANE. Mr. President, will the Senator allow me to reply kindly to that criticism? The deficiency which is covered up in such a manner that the legislator does not know that he is providing for the payment thereof is an unusual thing. It is a matter which outside of this legislative body is considered a crime, and it ought to be so considered here.

Mr. STONE. Let me answer——

Mr. LANE. Pardon me just a moment further. I will not delay long. If what is considered a crime can be successfully carried through without the knowledge of either the committee or of this body, it does seem to me that that ought to be a slight indication to the Senator from Missouri of what I have in mind when I ask for a statement which would show such things. What in the world do you want to happen?

Mr. STONE. What is the particular item? Will the Senator give me the particular thing that he wants?

Mr. LANE. The deficiency. Your accounts do not balance. You have handed in a report in which you make no statement about the bill before the Senate. There is a deficiency that you do not account for. Your accounts do not balance.

Mr. STONE. I do not know what the Senator means.

Mr. LANE. The Senator does not know how accounts do not balance?

Mr. STONE. I do not know what the Senator is talking about.

Mr. LANE. Then I fail utterly to make myself understood.

Mr. STONE. I should like to ask the Senator what is his objection to this first section in the bill?

Mr. LANE. It is owing to the fact that you are carrying a deficiency there of an unknown quantity that was incurred years ago. You are presenting to this body an appropriation of money to be used next year——

Mr. STONE. I am talking about the first section. Let me read it.

Mr. LANE. I object to this——

Mr. STONE. Let me read it.

For the survey, resurvey, classification, appraisement, and allotment of lands in severalty under the provisions of the act of February 8, 1887, entitled "An act to provide for the allotment of lands in severalty to Indians," and under any other act or acts providing for the survey and allotment of lands in severalty to Indians; and for the survey and subdivision of Indian reservations and lands to be allotted to Indians under authority of law, $200,000, to be repaid proportionately out of any Indian moneys held in trust or otherwise by the United States and available by law for such reimbursable purpose and to remain available until expended.

Now, what is the criticism?

Mr. LANE. If the Senator will pardon me, Mr. President, the criticism is, in the first place, that it should say, in addition to these uses which are stated in the section, money is to be expended if it carries a deficiency of a sum unknown to the committee or to the Senate, and the second objection is that it is new legislation and subject to a point of order for the reason that you have cut out one entire section of the United States from its provisions.

Mr. STONE. To show how little the Senator knows about the thing he is talking about, I will call his attention to the fact that the report shows there is an unexpended balance of $24,000 and over in that fund. The Senator has not looked into it. He is just firing off without knowing for the most part what he is talking about.

If the Senator wants the information on this subject, I have here a communication from the Indian Bureau showing how every dollar of this appropriation is to be expended. It is just as available to the Senator from Oregon as it is to me and other members of the committee or any other Senator, and for his information I am going to ask that it be inserted in the RECORD as a part of my remarks. I hope he will take occasion to read it to-morrow morning.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Missouri? The Chair hears none.

The matter referred to is as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR.
OFFICE ASSISTANT COMMISSIONER OF INDIAN AFFAIRS,
Washington, June 14, 1913.

Hon. WILLIAM J. STONE,
Chairman Senate Committee on Indian Affairs,
United States Senate.

SIR: Referring to my telephone conversation this morning with your clerk, Mr. Hollister, I have the honor to advise you that if the appropriation of $200,000 for survey, resurvey, allotment, classification, and appraisement work, as provided in the report of the Senate Committee on Indian Affairs, is made, it will be used in the following manner, so far as the use can be determined at this time:

Completing allotment work and making the classification and appraisement of the surplus lands within the Colville Indian Reservation, Wash	$25,000
(About 800 allotments remain to be made within this reservation and thereafter the surplus lands must be classified and appraised as required by the act of Mar. 22, 1906; 34 Stats., 80.)
Carrying on the allotment work on the Pine Ridge Reservation, S. Dak	20,000
(Nearly 6,000 allotments have been made within this reservation, with about 2,000 Indians still to be allotted. To expedite the work two crews have been on this reservation, but as the "open" or field season is short, due to snow and cold weather, the number of allotments that can be made each year is comparatively small. For a period of approximately four months in each year the crews working on this reservation are furloughed from field duty, and hence about $10,000 a year is sufficient for each crew.)

Survey work, General Land Office, and such retracement work as may be necessary during the year $125,000

(The following work is urgent: Surveying the boundaries of the Indian Pueblos, in New Mexico, estimated to cost $20,000; surveying the town site of Klaxta, Wash., $3,000; surveying five townships in the Washington National Forest, within which some 80 Skagit Indians have selected allotments and built houses, $5,000; completing surveys within the Fort Belknap Indian Reservation, Mont., $25,000; surveying, in part, the Northern Cheyenne, or Tongue River, Reservation, Mont., $20,000; surveying about 5,000 acres of irrigable land within the Navajo Indian Reservation, N. Mex., which has been or will be irrigated from the "Hogback Canal," $3,000; additional subdivisional survey work within the Hoopa Valley Reservation, Wash., preliminary to allotment, $12,000; surveying town sites within the Pine Ridge, Colville, Fort Berthold, and other reservations, $7,000; resurveying the boundary lines of the Umatilla Indian Reservation, Oreg., $500; Warm Springs Reservation, Oreg., $500; surveying the Mescalero Indian Reservation, N. Mex., $20,000—total, $116,000—leaving $9,000 as an emergency fund for any special work of this character which might arise during the year, including public domain allotments outside Arizona and New Mexico.)

Completing allotment work on the Wind River Reservation, Wyo 10,000

(It is estimated that it will require one allotting crew for a period of 10 months to allot the unallotted Indians within this reservation. The work has been started, but can not be completed during the present field season, owing to the fact that the climate in this locality prevents active field work, except during the summer season.)

Mineral examinations, Geological Survey 10,000

(The department requires, before the issuance of a patent, either fee or trust, that the lands shall be examined by the Geological Survey in order to ascertain if any minerals or power site or reservoir possibilities exist therein. The same class of examination is also made of surplus unallotted lands within Indian reservations prior to disposal to homestead settlers. This work is done by the Geological Survey at the expense of this office when requested so to do, and expenditures of this character are paid out of funds available for the survey, allotment, resurvey, classification, and appraisement work. During the coming year examination should be made at least of lands within the Klamath Reservation, Oreg.; Quinaielt Reservation, Wash.; Crow Reservation, Mont.; the Salt River and Colorado River Reservations, Ariz.; the Yuma Reservation, Cal.; and the Fort Hall Reservation, Idaho.)

In order that you may know the basis upon which the office estimates the cost of this work on various reservations, the following statement will show the average cost of carrying the usual allotting crew for a period of 12 months:

	Per year.
1 surveyor	$2,160
1 head chainman	1,080
1 rear chainman	1,080
1 rodman	1,080
1 flagman	1,080
1 clerk	1,200
1 teamster	900
1 cook	900
Total	9,480
Salary of allotment agent	2,920

Usually $15,000 is segregated for the use of each allotting crew during one year. After allowing the amounts for salaries as listed above it leaves $2,600 for miscellaneous expenditures, such as tents, wagons, teams, forage, etc. Ordinarily this is sufficient unless exceptional conditions are confronted.

The estimates made for survey work by the General Land Office are based upon reports made by the General Land Office upon the request of this office. For illustration of the manner in which this information is obtained, there is attached herewith correspondence between this office and the General Land Office with respect to surveying some 40 unsurveyed townships within the Navajo Reservation, Ariz. This is merely illustrative of the procedure followed in cases of this kind.

Respectfully,

F. H. ABBOTT,
Assistant Commissioner.

SURVEYING NAVAJO EXTENSION, ARIZ.

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
OFFICE OF INDIAN AFFAIRS,
Washington, July 21, 1910.

The COMMISSIONER OF THE GENERAL LAND OFFICE.

SIR: The office is in receipt of a communication from Special Allotting Agent George A. Keepers regarding the necessity for surveying the unsurveyed townships within that part of the Navajo extension created by Executive orders of November 9, 1907, and January 28, 1908, in Arizona. The allotting agent mentions also the advisability of resurveying the townships there which have been surveyed originally by the Land Office, owing to obliterated corners and errors which it is believed exist in the original survey work. Mr. Keepers intimated that Surveyor Sidney E. Blout, who is now surveying the Moqui Reservation, contemplated recommending to your office that a new survey be made of the extension in Arizona so as to cover not only the townships already surveyed but also the unsurveyed part of the extension, and that he (Mr. Blout), by putting on an additional crew, could handle the survey work both within the Moqui Reservation and the extension in Arizona.

The office desires to allot the extension in Arizona at an early date, and in order to carry on this work there it is requested that you advise this office of the approximate amount required to survey the unsurveyed townships and resurvey the townships already surveyed, and also if Mr. Blout can satisfactorily handle this work in connection with the survey work on the Moqui Reservation. An early reply will be appreciated.

Very respectfully,

C. F. HAUKE,
Second Assistant Commissioner.

ESTIMATE OF COST OF SURVEY.

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
GENERAL LAND OFFICE,
Washington, August 25, 1910.

The COMMISSIONER OF INDIAN AFFAIRS.

SIR: In reply to your letter dated July 21, 1910, relative to the surveys and resurveys necessary to complete the survey of the Navajo extension created by Executive orders of November 9, 1907, and January 28, 1908, in Arizona, I have to advise you that such work can be carried on under the supervision of this office during the winter months, and, as there are some 40 townships included in said extension, it is estimated that to establish the usual standard exterior and subdivisional lines would average $500 per township, or a total cost of $20,000.

If further interior subdivisional corners were required for allotment purposes, the cost would probably be doubled.

Very respectfully,

FRED DENNETT, Commissioner.

Mr. STONE. It is easy to get up and attack a committee of which one is a member and to make criticisms. If a Senator wants to do it without rhyme or reason, it is all right, I suppose. Each Senator bears his own measure of responsibility. But it seems to me to be absolutely unjust and unreasonable to assail the committee of which the Senator is an honorable and distinguished member——

Mr. LANE. Mr. President——

Mr. STONE. As being at all inattentive or indifferent.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Missouri yield to the Senator from Oregon?

Mr. STONE. Oh, yes; I will yield.

Mr. LANE. The only justification which was presented to our committee did not show up to some of us—the older members knew how to secure possession of these documents—was the report of some hearings before the subcommittee on Indian Affairs in the House of Representatives, and it is dated January 17, 1912. I could not know much, if anything, about this appropriation annually or the administration of the $900,000,000 worth of property unless I had access to some financial statement, some statement pertaining to the service and explanatory thereof. I think the same condition exists with the majority of the Members of the Senate. But as a member of the committee I was informed by that committee that here was the justification. I will not read the justification, but if you will turn over to pages 11, 12, 13, 14, and 15, you will find the sums, and you can pick them out. First, there is a balance of the appropriation of $220,000, which is called for in that item.

Mr. STONE. The Senator is not talking about the item now under discussion.

Mr. LANE. I beg pardon; then I have misunderstood the Senator.

Mr. STONE. The Senator is talking about an entirely different item.

Mr. LANE. Then I misunderstood the Senator and I beg his pardon. What were we talking about?

Mr. STONE. You were talking about irrigation.

Mr. LANE. You were talking about the first item, for a survey and a resurvey. Is that the one you were discussing?

Mr. STONE. Yes; and that is now before the Senate.

Mr. LANE. I understand the Senator to state that it is for the survey, resurvey, classification, and appraisement of land. Is that right? It is the very first item in the bill.

Mr. STONE. Yes; that is the one now before the Senate.

Mr. LANE. That is the one concerning which I was speaking. It is stated in this report on page 4 of the hearings, that Mr. Meritt said——

Mr. STONE. If the Senator will pardon me, he called attention to pages 11, 12, and 13.

Mr. LANE. Yes; that seems to be this.

Mr. STONE. Here it says:

Diminished Southern Ute Reservation, Colo.: For continuing the construction and maintenance of the irrigation ditch on this reservation.

Just below is the following:

Walker River Reservation, Nev.: For extension, maintenance, and operation of the present irrigation system.

Mr. LANE. The Senator is right about that. All I wish to call attention to in support of my statement that there was a deficiency, is the statement by Mr. Meritt in answer to the chairman. The chairman asks:

Is not this really a deficiency coming over from other years?

Mr. MERITT. Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. Did you ask for no appropriation of this kind two years ago?

Mr. MERITT. No, sir.

Then he goes on to explain the reason why. The reason was because he did not have the bill to verify it. It seems to carry a deficiency.

Mr. FALL. Will the Senator from Missouri yield to me?

Mr. STONE. I yield to the Senator from New Mexico.

Mr. FALL. The statement is made in this Indian appropriation bill report to which the Senator referred. The account balances perfectly. It shows exactly how it is balanced. It is as follows:

SURVEYING AND ALLOTTING INDIAN RESERVATIONS (REIMBURSABLE).

Fiscal year ending June 30, 1913, amount appropriated	$250,000.00
Fiscal year ended June 30, 1912:
Unexpended balance from previous appropriations	65,167.44
Amount appropriated	215,000.00
	280,167.44
Amount expended	255,821.05
Unexpended balance	24,346.39

That is the balance. Now, they ask an additional appropriation of $220,000, and we have agreed to cut $20,000 because of the limitation put on the expenditure, as is explained in the balance of this section.

Mr. LANE. Then, if you please, Mr. President, this volume of reports from the House committee is not to be depended upon in its statement?

Mr. FALL. The Senator has the hearings before a committee and is reading from the hearings certain statements of witnesses. If he had the official report of the estimates which the committee had before it, he will find this item explained, I think.

Mr. LANE. But here, Mr. President, if you please, is the accountant of the department making this statement.

Mr. FALL. If the Senator will allow me a suggestion, I think the quickest way for him to get it is to examine that statement. I think he will find the balance exactly as the estimate itself.

Mr. LANE. Then there is a deficiency given here?

Mr. FALL. Oh, no; not a deficiency. There is a balance on hand of $24,000.

Mr. STONE. Twenty-four thousand dollars and something. That is the official statement.

Mr. FALL. Heretofore they have been asking for an appropriation of $250,000. This year they were asking for a total of only $220,000, because they have an unexpended balance of $24,000 on hand. There is no deficiency at all.

Mr. STONE. That is the very reason why we have cut down the House appropriation from $220,000 to $200,000. It is because there is a balance on hand and not a deficiency. The Senator is entirely wrong. He is proceeding upon a wrong premise, upon wrong information.

Mr. LANE. I was thinking of Mr. Meritt, who is said to be the accountant of this bureau, and his statement was that there was one. He suggested why it happened in connection with this identical item.

Mr. STONE. Mr. President, we will proceed with the bill. I just wish to say before we proceed that it is very important the bill should be passed at the earliest practicable moment.

Every day's delay interferes seriously with the efficiency of the administration in the Indian service—

I will state that I am reading from a statement furnished me by the Commissioner of Indian Affairs at my request—

Every day's delay interferes seriously with the efficiency of administration in the Indian service, because plans for carrying on the various activities can not be made definitely until it is known what funds will be available and such funds are equitably apportioned among the different agencies, schools, etc., where they are to be used. The working out of proper apportionments involves so much detail that there is scarcely enough time left, even now, to do it efficiently.

If the passage of the bill is delayed much longer, it will be impossible to do the work by the 1st of July, and tentative apportionments will have to be made, subject to change later on, which will greatly increase and complicate the work. If it is delayed beyond the 1st of July, a joint resolution extending appropriations for this year will be necessary. This would result in much confusion and possible extravagance, caused by hasty and ill-considered allotments and expenditure authorizations.

Many of the appropriations covered by the bill are required immediately after the 1st of July to continue work on projects authorized by existing law, such as making allotments to Indians and surveying lands in connection with the opening of reservations to settlement. Where work has commenced and the crews are now in the field many thousands of dollars would be lost by having to suspend operations even for a few days.

The delay in the passage of the appropriation act for the current fiscal year and the extension of the appropriations made for the previous year by joint resolution interfered very seriously with the efficient financial management of the Indian service. Such a delay would interfere seriously with the financial management of any governmental institution, but it strikes the Indian service with particular force because of the multiplicity of appropriations found necessary by Congress, which makes its financial system more complex than that of any other bureau under the Government and of some entire departments. A further delay this year in obtaining the funds required to carry on the service can only add embarrassing difficulties to a financial system already sufficiently complicated.

Mr. President, as I have already said, I do not think we ought to fritter away time in useless discussion. We must furnish the funds for the maintenance of this great bureau. It is absolutely impracticable to talk about making appropriations from month to month. The department can not work on appropriations of that kind. If it is necessary by a joint resolution to extend the appropriations for the current year over into the next year by reason of any failure of this bill, that again will leave the bureau in a state of most embarrassing uncertainty as to the apportionment of its funds and in the carrying on of important projects now in process of execution.

Now, Mr. President, I shall not say anything more. I ask that the question before the Senate may be put.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the committee on page 2, line 9, after the word "law," to strike out "$220,000" and in lieu thereof to insert "$200,000."

Mr. GALLINGER. As that amendment appears to be contingent upon a further amendment submitted by the committee, I would ask the Senator from Missouri if it might not be well to pass it over until the subsequent amendment is acted upon. As I understand the matter, if New Mexico and Arizona are not exempted from the provisions of the bill $220,000 will be required, and if that exemption is made $200,000 will be sufficient. I ask the Senator from Missouri if that is correct?

Mr. STONE. That is correct.

Mr. GALLINGER. In that view would it not be well to pass over the first amendment until the second amendment is acted upon?

Mr. STONE. I have no objection to that.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be passed over temporarily.

The Secretary continued the reading of the bill.

The next amendment of the Committee on Indian Affairs was, on page 2, line 12, after the word "expended," to insert the following proviso:

Provided, That no part of said sum, or any other sum, shall be used for survey, resurvey, classification, appraisement, or allotment of any land in severalty upon the public domain to any Indian, whether of the Navajo or other tribes, within the State of New Mexico and the State of Arizona under the provision of any act of Congress now in force until such survey, allotment, etc., shall hereafter be authorized by act of Congress.

Mr. GALLINGER obtained the floor.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President——

Mr. GALLINGER. I yield to the Senator from Ohio.

Mr. POMERENE. I was going to offer an amendment to the amendment of the committee.

Mr. GALLINGER. Let the Senator have it read.

Mr. POMERENE. Yes; I ask that it be read.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Ohio offers an amendment to the amendment, which the Secretary will read.

The SECRETARY. On page 2, line 13, strike out the words "or any other sum," including the commas; and on page 2 strike out, beginning on line 17, the words "under the provision," and all of lines 18, 19, and 20, inclusive, in the following words:

Under the provision of any act of Congress now in force until such survey, allotment, etc., shall hereafter be authorized by act of Congress.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Ohio to the amendment proposed by the committee.

Mr. GALLINGER. If the Senator will permit me, I had in mind offering precisely that amendment. I have no doubt but that the provision is subject to a point of order, particularly from the fact that the words "or any other sum" are inserted. I am not at all sure that the provision is subject to a point of order if those words should go out, for the reason that it simply provides a method of using the fund that is voted in the bill.

I sincerely trust that the amendment submitted by the Senator from Ohio to the amendment may be agreed to. There are very serious objections from certain quarters to the amendment in its entirety. Before I vote yea or nay upon that proposition, Mr. President, I should like to ask the chairman of the committee or the Senators from the States who ask for this exemption the precise reason why New Mexico and Arizona should not be included. There is doubtless some good reason in the mind of the Senators and of the committee that I am not cognizant of. I ask merely for information.

Mr. FALL. Mr. President, there is good and we think very sufficient reason for asking the suspension of this law, which would be the effect of the adoption of the amendment, as applied to New Mexico and Arizona. The Navajo Indian Reserve in Arizona, New Mexico, Colorado, and Utah is larger than the combined States of Massachusetts and Connecticut. An enormous area of that reserve has never been allotted in severalty. The policy of the department has been heretofore to allot in severalty to only a comparatively few of the Navajo Indians and to allow any Navajo who chose to do so to remove from that reserve, go upon the public domain among the American citizens, two, three, and four hundred miles away from his reserve, and there have allotted to him adjoining the ranch of some taxpayer, for instance, 160 acres of land.

He is not compelled to make a homestead residence or final proof, but he simply has it allotted to him under the act of 1887 whenever he chooses to withdraw from the reserve. He can remove himself entirely from all the restraints which are supposed to be placed about him whenever he chooses to do so. Under the policy of the department as it has been administered for several years past he is allowed to go upon the public domain and to choose his land, paying no taxes whatsoever. It is impossible, as the commissioner has said, for the Indian to make a living on 160 acres of land. It is absolutely impossible to do so.

Included in that portion of the Navajo Reserve which lies within the State of New Mexico there are 2,514,000 acres of land. There have been allotted to the Navajo Indians 319,000. There are approximately for their use given to them by the Government 2,211,000 acres which have never been allotted and which remain unallotted to-day.

Within the last three months, over the protest of the two Senators from New Mexico, of the Representative from New Mexico, in defiance of or despite a resolution passed by the Legislature of New Mexico, without listening to these protests, within three months the Indian Department has located 137 renegade Navajo Indians in Socorro County, N. Mex., 250 miles from the Navajo Reservation, where they have unallotted 2,211,000 acres which is used by those who have allotments.

These are some of the reasons that we have asked simply that the law with reference to the location of these Indians in New Mexico be suspended. Why? Mr. President, in 1893 a commission was appointed, made up of engineers from the Army of the United States, to make a thorough survey of the Navajo Reserve and to report upon the feasibility of allotting or setting aside to every Navajo Indian on that reserve and off of it sufficient acreage to enable him to support himself well. Including the Navajos who are off the reserve and the Navajos who are not, there are 1,100 acres to every Navajo—not to the head of a family merely, but to every Navajo man, woman, and child. Nine thousand of them are off the reserve; and, as I have said, within the last three months, in defiance of the protest of the representatives from New Mexico, the department has insisted in locating 137 Indians in Socorro County, N. Mex., alone.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President——

Mr. FALL. If the Senator will pardon me a moment, the Navajos generally are good workmen; they are quiet, law-abiding, peaceable Indians, but these 137 Indians happen to represent the renegades of the tribe, who would not stay at home and work, who do not want to work, but have been leading a nomadic life for several years in the mountains of New Mexico, existing by fishing and stealing. Those are the Indians who have been located among the citizens who are compelled to pay the taxes.

I might add additional reasons, Mr. President, to those which I have already given to convince the Senate of the United States that the policy of this Government with reference to its withdrawals, with reference to its forest reserves and its Indian reserves, and its unwarranted withdrawals of land for other purposes, is a mistaken one. If that policy is not in some way checked within five years, sir, it will be necessary for this Government to make appropriations annually for the support of the new States in the Southwest.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, as I have on more than one occasion in the past when the Indian appropriation bill was under consideration frankly admitted that I knew very little about the Indian question, I make that frank admission to-day; but in view of the statement made by the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. FALL], who is always frank, I will ask him if the difficulty which seems to exist is due to lax administration of the department and is there no remedy that can be enforced outside of enacting this provision which exempts Arizona and New Mexico from the operation of a general law?

Mr. FALL. Mr. President, I want to say to the Senator from New Hampshire that we in the Southwest know that he is one of the Senators from the eastern part of this country who have always been in sympathy with the western part of the country, and we appreciate the help which he has given us on all occasions. I will say frankly to the Senator that the fault is very generally with the Congress of the United States. It lies between the Congress of the United States and the autocratic, bureaucratic methods which have been pursued in the different departments of this Government in the last few years. In 1893, as I started to say a while ago, a board of Army officers, under a resolution of Congress and by direction of the Secretary of the Interior, made a thorough examination of the entire Navajo Reserve. They made a voluminous report, which was transmitted to this body and to the other House, in which it was shown that with the expenditure of $65,000 additional to the amount of $20,000 which they then had on hand, a total of $85,000, the Navajo Reservation could be placed in a condition, by the opening of water holes and the development of small streams of water, so that it would amply support every Navajo Indian, man, woman, and child, on or off the reserve, and that the 9,000 off the reserve could be taken back to the reserve where they belonged and no longer interfere with the citizens living upon the public domain. Congress refused to act; it refused even to appropriate $65,000 for the purpose reported by this board of Army engineers. The fault, therefore, lies to some extent with Congress.

Mr. President, although we have had good friends here, New Mexico and Arizona have been wards of this Government for 60 years past. They have had no representative upon the floor of this body nor upon the floor of the other House; that is, a representative who had a vote. We have been dealt with simply by the bureaus of this Government, and it is yet almost impossible, apparently, to convince the different departments of this Government that New Mexico is now a sovereign State of this Union and should be upon an equality with all the other States. I repeat that the trouble has been very largely with Congress in not listening to the recommendations which have been made and making appropriations at the proper time for needed purposes.

Then, some man connected with a Pueblo Indian school, having no authority over the Navajos and nothing to do with any other Indians except those coming under his immediate employment, happened to be out on a hunting expedition in New Mexico and found that some of these 137 Navajos resisted arrest by the local authorities, and in resisting a man was killed and another wounded. They were finally arrested by the mounted police force of New Mexico for a violation of the laws of the State. They were punished by small fines, which were remitted because they were Indians. This gentleman finds these Indians roaming around, hunting, stealing, and butchering cattle, of course, and he thinks that they must be protected; that they are not receiving justice at the hands of the American citizens. Therefore he recommends to the department that separate allotments be allowed these Indians.

The consequence is that, with every living water hole in that country patented years ago to taxpayers who are helping to support the State government of New Mexico, these Indians are located on dry land, each having 160 acres adjoining the little homestead or the patented water hole or spring of the white settler. The Indians can obtain water by trespassing upon the land of the settler, who is compelled to buy them out at a large price or else see his ranch ruined. Those are the facts of the case.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President——

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, the Senator from Ohio [Mr. POMERENE] having offered the amendment, I yield to him to discuss it.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, I notice the remarks of the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. FALL] were directed particularly to the Navajo Indians. My understanding is that there are two classes of Indians—one on the reservation, the other on the public domain outside the reservation. I was informed this morning—and this matter was called to my attention for the first time this morning—that if the amendment reported by the committee is adopted it will deprive the Indians who dwell upon the public domain and do not have reservation rights of the privilege of having public lands allotted to them under the general legislation now upon the statute books.

Mr. FALL. Mr. President, will the Senator from Ohio yield to me a moment?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Ohio yield to the Senator from New Mexico?

Mr. POMERENE. I do.

Mr. FALL. I should like to know what information the Senator from Ohio has upon that subject. I believe I am very thoroughly familiar with the matter.

Mr. POMERENE. I shall be very glad to give it to the Senator as I proceed. It has seemed to me that that part of the Senate amendment which I seek to strike out by my proposed amendment is clearly new legislation, in that it seeks to modify pro tanto the present legislation upon the subject. To that extent it is clearly subject to the point of order.

Mr. FALL. I agree with the Senator from Ohio. Mr. President, I offered this amendment in the committee for myself and the Arizona Senators, knowing that it was the understanding that it might go out on a point of order, and I am willing, under protest, to accept the amendment offered by the Senator from Ohio for that reason.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, I am very glad to hear the Senator from New Mexico concede the point made by my amendment; but to complete my statement, in order that my position may be known, I desire to say that it seems to me that if the contentions which have been made in favor of this proposed legislation are sound, the Senator from New Mexico is getting the benefit for the time being of the proposed reform, in that no part of the present appropriation shall be used for the purpose of making these allotments to the Indians.

Mr. FALL. Will the Senator from Ohio yield to me?

Mr. POMERENE. Yes.

Mr. FALL. I will state to the Senator that it has been shown here that there is an unexpended balance of this fund amounting to $24,000 which can be used for the location of these Indians upon the public domain. That was my reason for asking that the amendment be changed.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Ohio yield to the Senator from Wyoming?

Mr. POMERENE. I do.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. I merely want to make an inquiry of the Senator in view of one of his statements. I gather from the Senator's statement that his view is that the Navajo Indians who are off the reservation have not any rights on the reservation?

Mr. FALL. No, Mr. President; I did not mean that.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. My understanding is that they have the right to allotment on the reservation if they will go there and take it.

Mr. FALL. They are all reservation Indians. No power under heaven can prevent them from going on the reservation and demanding their allotments.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. While I am on my feet I should like to ask the Senator from New Mexico a question in order to secure a proper understanding. When, under the law, the Government furnishes to Indians off the reservation allotments upon the public domain, does that diminish the size of the reservation in any way?

Mr. FALL. Not at all, sir.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. In other words, it is creating an additional reservation out of the public lands that otherwise might be reserved for the settler?

Mr. FALL. Precisely; and the Indian, by blackmailing me, can force me to buy him out of his 160 acres of land to-day and to-morrow he can go back to the reserve and have set aside to him 1,100 acres.

Mr. POMERENE. In view of the discussion, I want to present some additional information to the Senate. This matter was called to my attention by a telegram from Prof. F. A. McKenzie, of the Ohio State University, and this morning I had left at my office a communication from Mr. S. M. Brosius, the agent of the Indian Rights Association, who makes this statement in his letter:

> It is stated that about 3,000 Papagos have made selections of land for allotment, and more than that number of Navajos are scheduled, a total of over 6,000 Indians who have made their homes on the public domain in these States. If the legislation is enacted into law, not one of these prospective allottees can be given a title to their homes until further legislation by Congress, where any additional supervision is necessary to complete the allotment.
> While the 3,000 Papagos have been scheduled for allotment, there are many other Papagos located on the public lands in Arizona who have not been scheduled, and it is estimated that there are not less than 5,000 Papagos living on the public lands of Arizona. These have no reservation provided for them, and they have always lived on the public domain.
> If this legislation is enacted into law, the States of Arizona and New Mexico would thus be given a preference over any other States in the Union, since the laws providing for allotment of lands to Indians apply equally at this time to all the States.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. Mr. President, if the Senator will permit me, I will ask him who gives him that information?

Mr. POMERENE. I can not advise the Senator. This information was brought to me by this gentleman.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. I ask who gave the Senator the information?

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. S. M. Brosius.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. What organization is he connected with?

Mr. POMERENE. He is agent of the so-called Indian Rights Association, and I was placed in touch with him by Prof. McKenzie, whom I know and for whom I have very high regard.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. I do not want to interrupt the Senator further than to say that the gentleman does not know any more of the matter to which he refers than the Indian Rights Association usually does.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, that may be true. I am not taking sides either one way or the other in this matter, but it has occurred to me that it is a subject well worthy of further consideration when the proposed new legislation may be considered independently of an appropriation bill. In view of the fact that the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. FALL] has accepted the amendment, I shall have nothing further to say.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. Mr. President, for 30 years we have been meeting just such statements as the one just read by the Senator from Ohio [Mr. POMERENE]. There is not a Papago Indian in Arizona who has not more than enough room on the reservations set aside for the Papagos in Arizona. The Papagos who are not on the reservation are off of it because they do not want to stay on it. There is not a Papago on the public lands of the United States that has not ample room for himself and family free to him within the reservations in that State.

Mr. POMERENE. I ask, for my own information, is the Senator advised as to how many acres there are in the reservation of the Papagos?

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. There are several reservations for Pimas and Papagos. I should judge that the Papagos have in Arizona probably a thousand acres apiece—perhaps more—but of the amount I am not certain, but I am sure of one thing, and that is, if these Indians were handled with more sense and less sentiment it would prove a blessing to the tribes and result in a great saving of public money.

Mr. FALL. Mr. President, it is possible that the report of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs may give a little information. It states:

Camp McDowell, Ariz.

Adults:
Male	323
Female	320
		643
Minors:
Male	290
		525
Total population		1,168
Children of school age		331

AREA OF RESERVATION.	Acres.
Allotted (29.8 per cent)	21,330
Unallotted (70.2 per cent)	50,361
Total area of reservation (112 square miles)	71,691

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. I thank the Senator. Fuller information as to amount of lands in all the reservations can be easily obtained from the public records. I have the acreage in my desk, but will not consume time in searching for it. The statement just read by the Senator [Mr. FALL] substantiates my statement. Fort McDowell is, however, not a large reservation as compared with some others.

There is another proposition being everlastingly forced on the Indians themselves and constituting about the greatest lot of nonsense and folly that ever disgraced the administration of any government on earth. It is found in the effort to bring the Indians out East and educate them in a strange and unhealthy environment. I have talked of that for so many years in the other House that I will not now weary this body by further reference to it. There is a large reservation on the Colorado River occupied by some five or six hundred Indians. Their lands have been allotted. Now, it has been ordered that the Mojaves—mountain Indians, living 300 miles away—shall also be allotted lands within this agency. These Mojaves will not live on the plains. They will not fraternize with the present allottees on these lands. And the order also allows the Chimaveus, living just as far away and absolutely unacquainted with the new place, to be allotted lands on this reservation. The senselessness of this works a tragedy in the lives of these transplanted Indians, who have already suffered enough at the hands of fools trying to aid them.

Nevertheless they are attempting to put those two great tribes on this reservation, probably because of the effort which is being made to open that unallotted land to cultivation by white people. If they carry those northern mountain Indians down there, they will not live there, as I have already stated.

Mr. FALL. They can not live there.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. They can not live there. If they bring the Chimaveus there, they will not stay—they will return to their habitat, as the Papagos have done and all others will do. Indians off the reservation are Indians who simply do not want to stay on their reservation; they do not want to work. It is easier and cheaper for them to live on the cattle and stock belonging to other people. I want to say now that the Indians in Arizona have more valuable lands allotted to them to-day than there are left in the whole State for the white man. Other reserves take up nearly the whole valuable lands of the State.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, if the Senator will permit me—and I again plead ignorance of this question in its details—I will ask: Is there power under existing law in the Government, through the Bureau of Indian Affairs or the Interior Department, to compel these Indians to remain on the reservation?

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. Unquestionably.

Mr. GALLINGER. And they have an abundance of land?

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. They have an abundance of it.

Mr. GALLINGER. And conveniences such as would enable them to enjoy the absolute necessaries of life, such as water?

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. Much more than they have where they have been living off the reservations. As has been shown by the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. FALL], they only go into the vicinity where people have settled, where they expect to use water and break up the ranches.

Mr. GALLINGER. That being so—and I assume the Senator has definite knowledge on that point—I am very strongly inclined to the view that it is bad policy on the part of the Government to permit these Indians to go roaming over these great States outside of the reservations.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. We have thought so always.

Mr. GALLINGER. But I think Congress ought to make liberal appropriations to provide them with all the necessaries of life on the reservations. For that reason I have considerable sympathy with the contentions of the Senators from those States on that point.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. It is absolutely essential to the preservation, both of the Indians and of what public lands are left, that some legislation along the lines suggested by the Senator should be at once enacted.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Arizona yield to the Senator from Michigan?

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. I do.

Mr. TOWNSEND. I do not believe I quite understand the situation as the Senator from Arizona explains it. If I understand him correctly, he says that this is a matter that rests entirely within the discretion of the department. I understand that there is a statute which provides that an Indian may locate 160 acres on any part of the public domain, and that the department is absolutely powerless in that regard. I understand the Indian may locate under the statute and has an absolute right to do so.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. Yes; I am glad the Senator corrected me. I had in mind our dealings with the Apache Indians when I made the mistake. Living right in the Apache neighborhood and observing them for all these years, I knew that there was a provision against those Indians going off their reservation. Other Indians may do so; but the law does not recognize the right of Indian agents—the law does not presume that these gentlemen shall go around and disturb and worry the Indians and tell them, "If you will come down here, I can get you a better place"; and to colonize them in that way. That is the trouble with them. The Indians do not go of their own accord; they are colonized in this way, just as they brought the old Apaches back to New Mexico a little while ago; and we will hear something from that by and by. Men born in Oklahoma and raised there have been sent back to New Mexico as neighbors of my friend, the Senator from that State, Senator FALL. The Indians in Arizona and New Mexico have been given more than enough land, and they ought to be confined to it. It is to be hoped that the present administration of the Indian Bureau and the Interior Department will listen more to the voice of reason and less to that misguided sentiment that has too long characterized its dealing with this grave question.

Mr. FALL. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me a moment?

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. Certainly.

Mr. FALL. With reference to the question which was asked by the Senator from Michigan [Mr. TOWNSEND], I will say that I think if he will examine the statute of 1887 and the amendments thereto he will find that while the law may be construed by the department, as it has been construed, to permit an Indian entitled to an allotment on his reserve to go off his reserve and take the allotment on the public domain, I do not think that any sensible man would ever have placed that construction upon it.

In the first place, what is the sense in it? What object can there be? Indians such as the Navajos are not citizens of the United States; they are reservation Indians, not entitled to vote. On the public domain and elsewhere they can refuse and do refuse to pay taxes. They may take a thousand or five thousand or ten thousand head of sheep and run them on the range within the county adjoining my ranch; take the grass away from my cattle; occupy 160 acres each under allotment; pay no taxes, support the Government not at all; and to-morrow, if they choose to do so, after having eaten off the public range, return to the Navajo Reserve and have allotted to them in severalty 1,100 acres. It was never the intention of the Congress of the United States to give the Indians the double privilege. That is a forced construction which has been adopted by some departmental clerk, I presume, and approved without proper consideration by the head of the department.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Ohio [Mr. POMERENE] to the amendment reported by the committee.

Mr. BRISTOW. Mr. President, I should like to know just what changes the amendment proposed by the Senator from Ohio [Mr. POMERENE] makes in the provision. It has not been explained.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read the amendment to the amendment.

The SECRETARY. In the committee amendment on page 2, line 13, after the word "sum," it is proposed to strike out the comma and the words "or any other sum"; and in line 17, after the name "Arizona," to strike out the remainder of the amendment.

Mr. BRISTOW. Now, I should like to have the Senator from New Mexico, if he will, explain the change that makes in the provision as reported by the committee.

Mr. FALL. Mr. President, I have stated that I accepted the amendment proposed by the Senator from Ohio [Mr. POMERENE] because the provision then remains purely a limitation upon the expenditure, and I do not believe is subject to a point of order. I accepted it under protest. It makes this difference, that, applying only to this annual appropriation, the law of 1887 still remains in full force and effect in New Mexico and Arizona; and at any time that Congress desires to appropriate an amount which can be used for the resurvey or reallotment of the public lands to the Indians in those States it can do so. If the amendment were adopted as originally proposed and agreed to by the committee, then it would practically repeal the law as to New Mexico and Arizona until reenactment by Congress.

Mr. BRISTOW. Is there any other fund that could be used for surveying?

Mr. FALL. There is a balance of $24,000 which is not touched by this amendment, Mr. President—an unexpended balance lying in this fund. This is an annual appropriation for the resurvey of allotments, and so forth, of public lands. There is an unexpended balance of $24,000 of this fund. The department can do exactly what it did in New Mexico in another case similar to this. Just to illustrate: The Congress of the United States refused directly to make an appropriation for the removal of the Fort Sill Apaches to the Mescalero Reserve. The matter was thoroughly discussed in the Senate, and that provision was knocked out; the Senate refused to make an appropriation for that specific purpose, but did finally agree to the conference report making an appropriation of $200,000 for the selection of the lands upon which these Indians might be placed. I consented to that because in the Mescalero Reserve in New Mexico no selections could be made. It is a tribal reserve with no allotments whatsoever, and therefore no selections could be made. Yet, in defiance of the action of the Senate in striking out that provision for a specific purpose, the Department of the Interior did remove those Indians and use that $200,000 for that purpose; but it has not yet made the selections and can not make them until they make a general allotment of that reserve. I say it was an absolute misappropriation of the fund.

I have no doubt that despite the action of the Senate now, if it adopts the suggestion of the Senator from Ohio, the former administration of the department would immediately and unhesitatingly appropriate this $24,000 unexpended balance to doing what the Senators from New Mexico and Arizona are protesting against their doing, and what they are now seeking by legislation to prevent. There is nothing remaining, Mr. President. They can use that $24,000, but I do not believe those at the head of the department at present will do it in view of the action of the Senate.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Kansas yield to the Senator from Ohio?

Mr. BRISTOW. I do.

Mr. POMERENE. My purpose was, as stated, largely to prevent ingrafting upon this appropriation bill general legislation which changes the entire policy of the Government with respect to the Indians. In view of the suggestion made by the Senator from New Mexico, I should have no objection, speaking for myself alone, to having this limitation apply to the $24,000 as well.

Mr. FALL. I asked the Senator if he would not accept that, and I understood him to say that he did not feel that he could.

Mr. POMERENE. At the time the Senator spoke to me on the subject I did not feel that the limitation should apply, but I certainly do think no harm can come from delaying until later general legislation on this subject. Meanwhile, by the amendment which I have proposed and the qualification which I have indicated, I would be willing to accept. It seems to me the rights are protected.

Mr. BRISTOW. A point of order would lie against the limitation of which the Senator speaks, because it is not a part of this appropriation bill.

Mr. POMERENE. I have no doubt about that.

Mr. BRISTOW. I am very much opposed to general legislation of this kind in this bill, and that is the reason I made the inquiry. I should feel compelled to make the point of order if it would lie; and so I say to the Senator from Ohio that if he qualifies his amendment, I shall feel compelled to make the point of order.

Mr. CLAPP. Mr. President, will the Senator from Kansas yield to me for a moment?

Mr. BRISTOW. I yield.

Mr. CLAPP. Where the limitation applies simply to the unexpended balance of a similar previous appropriation, it hardly seems to me that the Senator ought to press the point of order. I believe the Senator from New Mexico is right in his contention. I do not believe it would be fair. As to any other sum, if there is any other sum, it might be with propriety urged by the Senator from Kansas that he ought to press his point of order. But as suggested now, to be amended by the amendment of the Senator from Ohio, the limitation would go only to this appropriation and the unexpended balance of a previous similar appropriation.

Mr. BRISTOW. I have great respect for the Senator from Minnesota, but I differ from him in regard to this matter. I am opposed to this provision. I want it out altogether. If a point of order would lie against it as amended, I should make the point; and if any phrase is injected into it that will make it subject to a point of order, I shall feel compelled to make it, because I do not think the amendment ought to be in the bill at all.

Mr. FALL. Mr. President, will the Senator from Kansas yield to me for a moment?

Mr. BRISTOW. Certainly.

Mr FALL. I want to say to the Senator that possibly he does not understand the conditions as they exist in our country. Possibly he is not aware of the fact that every year, two or three times a year, these Indians are allowed to go from their immensely rich reserves to interfere with white men, American citizens, on the public domain, causing the killing of anywhere from one to a dozen people. This is an unfortunate condition of affairs. I can say to the Senator that we people down in our section of the country can deal with these conditions if we are compelled to; but this sometimes becomes a question of all a man has—of his property rights, of protection to his family and his children. Any white man, any American citizen, will then use such force as is necessary in protecting his family. All that we seek to do is to restrict the further location of these Indians upon the public domain until Congress can act again. The committee is being appointed, and I presume this matter will be investigated. It has been investigated before, and reports made, and no action taken. But this must cease; it must stop; and I tell the Senator from Kansas that it will stop.

Mr. BRISTOW. I am perfectly willing to consider legislation affecting these Indians as general legislation. While I realize the intense local interest that there is in regard to this matter, nevertheless it is a national affair, and the people of the United States have obligations toward the Indians which they should respect. What I object to is taking the opportunity of an appropriation bill to put through legislation that affects the policy of the Government in dealing with the Indians.

Mr. FALL. Oh, Mr. President, the Senator is one of those who has most strenuously insisted, as I think he will recall, upon putting through matters of general legislation upon more than one subject when the Panama Canal bill was before the Senate for consideration.

Mr. BRISTOW. That was a legislative bill, and not an appropriation bill.

Mr. FALL. Yes; but is it not a fact that the Senator from Kansas knows that riders are put upon appropriation bills every year?

Mr. BRISTOW. I know they are, a great deal too often and a great many times when they should not be, and sometimes it seems almost necessary that they should be. But I do not think this is one of those cases.

Mr. FALL. It is a question of the point of view, Mr. President. From Kansas it doubtless seems of very little importance. From New Mexico and Arizona it is of just as great importance as any piece of legislation affecting Kansas which will be enacted or could be enacted by this Congress.

Mr. BRISTOW. As I understand, the amendment as offered simply restricts this particular appropriation?

Mr. ASHURST. That is all.

Mr. POMERENE. That is correct.

Mr. BRISTOW. I mean the amendment as offered by the Senator from Ohio to the amendment of the committee.

Mr. FALL. That is right.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Ohio [Mr. POMERENE] to the amendment proposed by the committee.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

Mr. FALL. I suppose we now revert to line 9, to the question of the $10,000?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question now recurs upon the amendment on line 9, page 2.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Indian Affairs was, on page 4, line 6, after the word "liquors," to strike out "and peyote," and in line 7, after the word "Indians," to strike out "$75,000" and insert "$100,000," so as to make the clause read:

For the suppression of the traffic in intoxicating liquors among Indians, $100,000.

Mr. GALLINGER. Before that amendment is agreed to, I should like to ask the chairman of the committee what peyote is. I am seeking information now. The language of the bill is "intoxicating liquors and peyote."

Mr. STONE. I leave it to the Senator from New Mexico. He is more familiar with it than I am.

Mr. GALLINGER. I would rather hear the chairman of the committee.

Mr. FALL. The chairman insists that, being from a cactus district, I am more familiar with peyote than the chairman of the committee himself. Peyote, it seems, is made from a species of cactus which is rather common in some portions of what we used to call the Indian Territory, now Oklahoma. It is a mild narcotic or intoxicant. It seems that the chemists themselves do not know exactly what it is, but at any rate it has an exhilarating effect for the time being, yet not anything like that of whisky. It is used by certain Indians in certain religious observances. The committee was informed that to prohibit its use entirely would likely cause a good deal of trouble.

Mr. GALLINGER. In other words, the Senator is willing that the Indians should eat cactus, or drink it, if they want to?

Mr. FALL. I am more than willing that those in New Mexico should eat cactus.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I have been enlightened, and I think I was justified in asking the question. Hereafter I shall know what peyote is.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is upon agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Indian Affairs was, on page 4, line 16, after the word "therewith," to strike out "$1,420,000" and insert "$1,500,000," so as to make the clause read:

For support of Indian day and industrial schools not otherwise provided for and for other educational and industrial purposes in connection therewith, $1,500,000: Provided, That no part of this appropriation, or any other appropriation provided for herein, except appropriations made pursuant to treaties, shall be used to educate children of less than one-fourth Indian blood whose parents are citizens of the United States and the State wherein they live and where there are adequate free school facilities provided and the facilities of the Indian schools are needed for pupils of more than one-fourth Indian blood.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 6, line 15, after the word "forests," to strike out "Provided, That this shall not, as to timber, apply to the Menominee Indian Reservation in Wisconsin"; and in line 24, after "$400,000," to insert "Provided, That the foregoing shall not, as to timber, apply to the Menominee Indian Reservation in Wisconsin," so as to read:

To conduct experiments on Indian school or agency farms designed to test the possibilities of soil and climate in the cultivation of trees, grains, vegetables, and fruits, for the purposes of preserving living and growing timber on Indian reservations and allotments, and to advise the Indians as to the proper care of forests; for the employment of suitable persons as matrons to teach Indian women housekeeping and other household duties, and for furnishing necessary equipments and supplies and renting quarters for them where necessary; for the employment of practical farmers and stockmen, in addition to the agency and school farmers now employed; and to superintend and direct farming and stock raising among Indians, $400,000: Provided, That the foregoing shall not, as to timber, apply to the Menominee Indian Reservation in Wisconsin.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 8, line 4, after the words "public lands," to strike out "$2,000" and insert "$5,000," so as to make the clause read:

For witness fees and other legal expenses incurred in suits instituted in behalf of or against Indians involving the question of title to lands allotted to them, or the right of possession of personal property held by them, and in hearings set by United States local land officers to determine the rights of Indians to public lands, $5,000: Provided, That no part of this appropriation shall be used in the payment of attorney fees.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 9, line 1, after the words "purpose of," to strike out "conducting hearings and taking evidence to determine" and insert "determining," and in line 7, after "$50,000," to insert: "Provided, That $10,000 of this appropriation may be used for the employment of clerks and other assistance in the Bureau of Indian Affairs and the Department of the Interior in this class of work," so as to make the clause read:

For the purpose of determining the heirs of deceased Indian allottees, pursuant to the act of June 25, 1910 (36 Stat. L., pp. 855–866), and the regulations thereunder prescribed by the Secretary of the Interior, $50,000: Provided, That $10,000 of this appropriation may be used for the employment of clerks and other assistance in the Bureau of Indian Affairs and the Department of the Interior in this class of work.

Mr. GALLINGER. I do not rise to oppose the amendment, but I will suggest that it should read "the Department of the Interior and the Bureau of Indian Affairs." I think the Department of the Interior should precede the bureau. It is simply changing the phraseology.

Mr. STONE. Yes; that is correct.

Mr. GALLINGER. I move that amendment to the amendment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment to the amendment.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

Mr. STONE. I offer an amendment to the bill which I send to the desk.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read the amendment.

The SECRETARY. In line 10, page 9, after the word "work," strike out the period and insert a colon and the following:

Provided further, That the provision in the act of August 23, 1912 (37 Stat. L., p. 396), prohibiting the employment of personal services in the Indian Office other than those specifically provided for by law, shall not apply in the expenditure of this appropriation.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. I should like to ask the reason for the amendment. I do not recall now what the original law was. I am asking for information.

Mr. STONE. There is a provision in the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill of last year to this effect:

For the fiscal year 1914 and annually thereafter estimates in detail shall be submitted for all personal services required in the Indian Office, and after the end of the fiscal year 1913 it shall not be lawful to employ in said office any personal services other than those specifically appropriated for in the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill, except temporary details of field employees for service connected solely with their respective employments.

Now it is proposed to change that law—it is undoubtedly subject to a point of order—by authorizing the Secretary of the Interior, without reference to it, to provide clerks for this particular bureau. It can not be done without that change.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. I understand the situation to be that an estimate has been made for this work by the Department of the Interior. I understand that this work is provided for by preceding law; that the estimate for the services to carry out that law has been provided for and appropriated for in the legislative bill; and that the $10,000 of the $50,000 is to be distributed to other employees than those for whom appropriation has been already made.

Mr. STONE. Other than those to whom the appropriation would be distributed in payment of salaries and furnishing compensation.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Let me ask the Senator a question for information. Was not an estimate made by the department for this particular work in accordance with the statute the Senator has just read?

Mr. STONE. Yes. The estimate is in this language:

For the purpose of conducting hearings and taking evidence to determine the heirs of deceased Indian allottees, pursuant to the act of June 25, 1910 (36 Stat. L., pp. 855–866), and the regulations thereunder prescribed by the Secretary of the Interior, $100,000: Provided, That $10,000 of this amount may be used for clerk hire in the Indian Bureau.

The amount appropriated in the bill is $50,000, and it is provided that $10,000 of that may be used for a temporary force in the bureau. There are a great many of these claims pending. I think something like 40,000 are pending; and the officials of the bureau think the business would be greatly expedited and more efficient service had if they should be permitted to employ efficient clerks and experienced people to do this work. It is temporary in its character.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Mr. President, I shall not make the point of order, because I am not sufficiently well informed upon the subject. Undoubtedly the Senator's statement is perfectly clear to those who understand Indian affairs, but I confess I can not see the necessity of segregating that portion of the appropriation.

Mr. CLAPP. It is necessary, because the department does not feel that otherwise it could use this fund, or any part of it, for that work, which the department thinks is very important, in view of the accumulation of these cases in the office. Officials of the department appeared before the committee, and, feeling that this prohibition applied to the act of holding the hearings, in order to have justification and full authority for using part of the appropriation in the office, asked for this separation.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Yes; but the committee has struck out that part of it that relates to the holding of hearings and has cut in two the estimate of the department as to the appropriation.

Mr. STONE. Oh, no.

Mr. CLAPP. No; the committee substituted the word "determining" for the words "conducting hearings and taking evidence to determine." We struck that out and substituted the word "determining." But even then the department, subject as this department and all departments are to the criticism of using funds for purposes other than those for which they were specifically appropriated, asked that this separation might be made, so that there would be no question of its authority.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Do I understand the fact to be that there are not now in the Indian service, upon the annual roll, those who are capable of making this investigation?

Mr. CLAPP. Not enough.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Missouri yield to the Senator from Michigan?

Mr. STONE. I yield.

Mr. TOWNSEND. I do not understand the situation exactly as the Senator from Minnesota does. My understanding of the situation is that under the law the department has no authority to employ anybody outside of the department to do any special work. As the chairman of the committee has said, these cases involving the determination of the minor heirs have piled up to a very large extent. It is a serious problem with the department and the Indian Office to-day. Under the old custom that has heretofore existed, and that was sought to be continued by an amendment by interested parties, lawyers would take the cases of these infants and endeavor to determine them in the courts at tremendous expense. As compared with the determination of the claims of white infant heirs, the expense was something like two or three times as great.

Now, we come down to this proposition: We appropriate $50,000 for this work. That is probably sufficient; but the department, in the very nature of things, on account of the amount of work that has piled up, can not do that work with the amount of force it has on hand. It is not a question of the competency of the force there so much as it is a question of absolute inability, because of lack of time, to do the work. Feeling, as the department does, that it would have no right to take any part of this sum to employ help outside of the department, it asks that this especial provision be made for $10,000 of the $50,000 in order that it may hasten the work and complete it as it is proposed to have it completed under the provision itself.

Mr. CLAPP. That is just what I said, except that it is more explicit.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is upon agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Missouri [Mr. STONE].

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Indian Affairs was, on page 11, after line 6, to insert:

To increase the salary of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs from $5,000 to $7,500, $2,500.

Mr. CHILTON. Mr. President, I should like to ask the chairman of the committee the reason for that increase of salary.

Mr. STONE. This bureau is perhaps the most important bureau connected with any of the departments. It has a larger amount and a greater variety of subjects to deal with. The commissioner is responsible for the proper conduct of a vast number of trusts, involving nearly a thousand million dollars—$900,000,000 at least—and it requires the services of an unusually capable man properly to conduct the affairs of the bureau.

There was a question in the minds of the members of the committee whether, if an increase should be made in the salary of this particular commissioner, there would not be a clamor for increases in the salaries of other commissioners. But, in the judgment of the committee, the importance of the other commissionerships as compared to this is not such as to put them on terms of equality. We felt that we could well afford to increase this salary with a view of securing the services of a man of large experience and business ability, the services of such a man being very essential, and the committee therefore unanimously recommended the increase.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. If the addition of $2,500 to the salary of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs will accomplish the purpose which the chairman has in mind I, for one, will not object for a moment.

Mr. STONE. We hope so; we think so.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. I desire to say, however, that unless there is a marked development along the line of increased efficiency, I doubt the wisdom of this increase; and I have to take issue with the Senator as to the fact of this being the most important of the commissionerships. I think all the commissioners of this kind, the heads of bureaus, are paid $5,000 per annum. I think the Commissioner of the General Land Office is paid $5,000 per annum. Of course that is an office that deals not with Indian affairs but with the affairs of hundreds of thousands of white American citizens. While I dislike to see a discrimination made between those two offices, which perhaps are of equal importance and which perhaps handle an equal amount of funds, and certainly have to do with very valuable matters, in the hope that the one may follow the other, I shall not object to this. I think the efficient management of both of these offices requires men who are worth $7,500 per annum.

Mr. CHILTON. Mr. President, it was rather as I suspected, that this is a beginning, and no doubt, later on, all the commissioners will ask for an increase in their salaries.

Mr. STONE. I did not hear the Senator.

Mr. CHILTON. I say I have not any doubt that this is the beginning; and if you make a break in it you are going to have all these people come to Congress to have their salaries increased. There are a few of us here who think we should have a little deliberation before we increase these salaries. As far as I am concerned I do not care to discuss it. We might stand here and discuss it until dark, and we will hear the same contention made. It is simply a lot of people at the head of these bureaus who want to have their salaries increased, and they will come here later demanding an increase if this is granted. As far as I am concerned I am opposed to it. We can get a competent man for $5,000. I could furnish 50 from West Virginia who would be glad to take these positions for $5,000 and who are as competent as those now in charge.

Mr. VARDAMAN. I wish to ask the Senator from West Virginia if the Commissioner of Indian Affairs has not already been appointed at a salary of $5,000?

Mr. CHILTON. I understand so.

Mr. VARDAMAN. I am opposed to any raise of the salary.

Mr. CHILTON. I rose for the purpose of saying that I want a vote by yeas and nays on this amendment. I shall at the proper time ask for the yeas and nays upon the amendment. I do not think we ought to increase the salary. I do not think there has been any good reason given.

Mr. STONE. Before the vote is taken or any discussion had, if there is to be further discussion, it has been suggested to me that at the end of line 8 the numerals "2,500" should be stricken out and the numerals "7,500" inserted.

Mr. SMOOT. No, Mr. President.

Mr. CHILTON. That would give him a salary of $12,500.

Mr. SMOOT. I wish to call the Senator's attention to the fact that in the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation act we appropriated $5,000 for the salary of this officer, and I understand it is the object of the committee now to increase it $2,500. If so, the amount as stated here is correct.

Mr. CLAPP. That is right.

Mr. CHILTON. Unless they want him to have $12,500 it is right.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. It is all right as it is.

Mr. STONE. Word was sent to me by an official at the desk that it was wrong.

Mr. SMOOT. I know there was $5,000 appropriated for the salary of this officer.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. We have already appropriated $5,000.

Mr. CLAPP. And $2,500 is added.

Mr. CHILTON. I make the point of order against the amendment that fixing the salary of this officer at $7,500 is a change in existing law and has no place in this appropriation bill.

Mr. OWEN. Mr. President, ordinarily I would not be in favor of increasing the salary of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs to $7,500. In this case I do favor it. The man who takes this office makes an important pecuniary sacrifice to take it. When you come to consider the enormous amount of property, the large interests which are involved in this office, the complicated character of the work, the delicate work that is to be carried out in the office in dealing with the Indian people, I do think that this increase is abundantly justified.

Mr. CHILTON. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Oklahoma yield to the Senator from West Virginia?

Mr. OWEN. Certainly.

Mr. CHILTON. I just want to ask the Senator a question. I do not understand what he means by saying that the gentleman accepted the office at a sacrifice. He knew what the salary was when he did accept it, did he not?

Mr. OWEN. I assume that he did.

Mr. CLAPP. I should like to ask that Senators might take us into their confidence by speaking so that we could hear them.

Mr. OWEN. I did not hear what the Senator from Minnesota said.

Mr. CLAPP. I suggested that the Senator from Oklahoma and the Senator from West Virginia take the balance of the Senate into their confidence by speaking sufficiently loud so that we could hear them.

Mr. OWEN. I have tried to speak loud enough to be heard.

I wish to call the attention of the Senate to the fact that the property of the Indian tribes directly under the supervision of this office amounts to $900,000,000. It is a gigantic sum, and these great properties have not been sufficiently developed to be yielding any proper income to the Indians for whom we are called on to make these large appropriations every year.

Take the case, for instance, of the Yaquina Indians. They have an estate valued at $28,000 apiece, amounting to something over $130,000 for a family of five. In this bill we are appropriating money for the support and civilization of those Indians when they have a gigantic estate which is producing nothing whatever because of the inefficiency of the management of this Government. The reason why the property has not been well managed, I think, is because in too large a degree these important offices are in the control of gentlemen of good manners, of moderate experience, of ability and capacity, who want the office rather than take the office for the purpose of rendering an important public service. I think that the office ought to be made more attractive, so that it might be occupied by men who are able to earn at least as much outside of the Government service as they do in the Government service.

The reason why I think in this case the increase is justified is because the present incumbent is well worth it, and far more, and because I believe that I favor increasing this salary, believing that out of his work the Government will save the amount many times over in the appropriations which are annually made here. Take the case of the Yaquina Indians, with a fortune of $125,000 to $130,000 to a family, producing nothing whatever. Every single one of the Yaquina Indians ought to be able to make a living out of the timber on that reserve. They ought to have their own sawmills; they ought to be getting out that timber with their own labor; they ought to be making an independent fortune out of that property, and if they had the proper advice and the proper counsel and the proper support they would be doing that very thing.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President——

Mr. OWEN. I yield to the Senator from New Hampshire.

Mr. GALLINGER. For information, will the Senator state who is the present Commissioner of Indian Affairs? I think he was recently appointed.

Mr. OWEN. Mr. Cato Sells, of Texas.

Mr. GALLINGER. The Senator knows him to be a very competent man?

Mr. OWEN. I do. I know him.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. I should like to ask the Senator how much Mr. Sells has had to do with Indian affairs? I ask just for information.

Mr. OWEN. I think, answering the question in the spirit of the question——

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. The spirit of the question——

Mr. OWEN. I say, better than all is a free, capable mind. I do not think he has been an Indian agent or an Indian inspector.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. I want to say to the Senator that the spirit of the question was not at all hostile.

Mr. OWEN. I did not take it so. I was simply about to say that I think his experience justifies the expectation that he will handle this office with efficiency.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Do I understand the Senator to believe that a man with little or no experience in Indian affairs is better qualified to deal with the situation?

Mr. OWEN. It depends on the length of time he has been connected with it. If you take a man like James McLaughlin, who has been in the service 38 years and whose conclusions are drawn in his book, My Friend the Indian, I would say yes. If you take a man from Massachusetts who has been on a junketing tour in an Indian tribe for the purpose of nosing out something sensational to come back home and exploit his own virtues on at the expense of other people, I say no.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. I still am uninformed. I wanted to ask the Senator his view——

Mr. OWEN. I will give my view.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. And to ask who would probably make the most efficient Commissioner of Indian Affairs of two men of equal ability, one of whom had experience in connection with those affairs and the other who had not. Which one would probably render the most efficient service? Without knowing anything in regard to the familiarity of Mr. Sells——

Mr. OWEN. Any man who has lived in the western part of the country, who knows the condition of the Indians and has a sufficient knowledge of the Indian's characteristics to know what the problem is. It must depend on a man's sense, upon his high character, upon his penetration, upon his intellectual ability.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Will the Senator inform us just how great Mr. Sells's experience has been in that direction?

Mr. OWEN. With regard to Indian management, I do not think he has had anything particular to do with the management of Indians, but he has had a good deal to do with the management of men. He has been able to handle men of all kinds very well, I am told.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. I do not know Mr. Sells, and I do not know what his occupation is at the present time. When I did know him——

Mr. STONE. I have known Mr. Sells for many years. He formerly lived in Iowa. He was a lawyer there and a very successful man of business. He has been in Texas for some years and has been a very successful man there in business affairs. He is a man of high character, of rather striking intelligence, and familiar with large affairs.

I agree with my friend from Oklahoma that it is not necessary that a man should have had large, direct experience in the management of Indian affairs to make a good Indian Commissioner. It may be that the Senator from Oklahoma is right when he says that it is well to take a man from the field outside who has not been connected very much with Indian affairs and put new life and new blood and new thought into the administration.

The Senator from Wyoming has not had, I imagine, much direct experience in the management of Indian affairs, but I would think that the Indian Bureau, the Interior Department, and the country would be most fortunate to secure a man of the intelligence, force of character, and general judgment of affairs that characterize the Senator from Wyoming.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Mr. President, I simply wanted to say that for many years I have known nothing particular about Mr. Cato Sells. I knew of him in my earlier life. As the Senator says, he is a man of broad mind and good judgment in great affairs. He was at one time, I think, the chairman of the Democratic State committee in Iowa, and if he can manage the Indians in his administration now with one-half the ability that he managed the Democrats in Iowa he will surely make a success in this office.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, I make the point of order that the point of order made by the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. CHILTON] is no longer available, because when a point of order has been discussed upon the merits of the proposition involved in the amendment all right to make the point of order is waived. That is one of our precedents.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair desires to know for its information whether in the act creating the office of Commissioner of Indian Affairs the salary was fixed?

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President, if I may have the attention of the Senator from West Virginia, I sincerely hope that he will withdraw his point of order on this question. This particular item was considered by the Committee on Indian Affairs. Everyone here knows that there is no bureau where the commissioner at its head experiences more difficulty than the Bureau of Indian Affairs.

I admit that the amendment is subject to the point of order made by the Senator from West Virginia. While it may be true that the gentleman who has been appointed to this responsible position is willing to sacrifice his time for the present salary, and while it is also true, as the Senator from West Virginia said, that there are many men who would accept it at the present salary, there are many men who would be glad to accept it at $1,000, perhaps. But the question is, Will they do the work that they are required to do?

I have been a member of various committees in both Houses of Congress, but never have I experienced as much difficulty in solving the problems that come before a committee as upon the Committee on Indian Affairs.

As this is such a responsible position, requiring exceptional ability and a great deal of work, I hope that the Senator from West Virginia will withdraw his point of order.

Mr. CHILTON. Mr. President, when I stated my objection to this amendment and made the point of order I did not know who was Commissioner of Indian Affairs, nor do I care who he is. I am willing to concede that he is a man of ability and character, perfectly competent to discharge the duties of the office. I do not intend to be drawn into a discussion of the fitness of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs. He should be a man who is competent; he should not be appointed unless he is competent; and he should not accept unless he can discharge the duties of the office well. I am speaking to the principle of continually prying up the salaries of these officials after they have accepted the office with a fixed salary. We know how this has been going on. I want to stop it, and I shall insist on my point of order.

In response to what the Senator from Arizona [Mr. ASHURST] has said, I have only this to say: Having addressed the Chair in the usual way to get his attention and made my point of order, and having then exhausted my powers as a Senator, I can not stop other Senators from addressing the Chair and speaking upon the main question. That is a matter for the Chair to take care of. It would seem to me that we are in a very peculiar position from a parliamentary standpoint if a point of order shall be made and then Senators can talk the point of order out until it becomes itself out of order. I hope there is no such ruling.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair will again inquire as to whether, when the office of Commissioner of Indian Affairs was created, a salary was fixed by the statute?

Mr. CHILTON. I am unable to answer the question.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair makes the inquiry for the purpose of ruling on the point of order.

Mr. SMOOT. I have not the statute here with me, but necessarily there must have been a salary fixed in the act creating the office.

Mr. CHILTON. I take it so.

Mr. SMOOT. At the time of the passage of the act for the creation of the office a salary was fixed with the office.

Mr. STONE. Mr. President, there is an appropriation made in the legislative appropriation bill each year to pay the salary of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs as the salaries of other executive officers are paid, and the appropriations made will cover the salaries fixed by law.

Mr. SMOOT. That is the case, no doubt.

Mr. STONE. I have no doubt that is true.

Mr. SMOOT. Every year in the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill a sum is appropriated covering the amount fixed by law for the salaries of all the departmental officials, and among them, of course, is the office of Commissioner of Indian Affairs.

The VICE PRESIDENT. That is not the inquiry which the Chair is making. The Chair has no doubt that the salaries are always included in the appropriation bill, but the query is whether when the office was created the salary was fixed.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. If the President will permit me, section 462 of the Revised Statutes provides that—

> There shall be in the Department of the Interior a Commissioner of Indian Affairs, who shall be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, and who shall be entitled to a salary of $3,000 a year.

That statute was passed the 9th of July, 1832, and is the statute creating the office of Commissioner of Indian Affairs.

Mr. STONE. Then the salary has been increased by the appropriations for that purpose?

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. The salary has been increased from time to time, I understand, in the annual appropriation bill. The appropriation has been in excess of the salary originally fixed.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Now, upon the point of order of the Senator from West Virginia——

Mr. GORE. Mr. President, before the President rules I wish to say that I share the sentiment of those Senators who have requested the Senator from West Virginia not to insist upon his point of order. As a rule I shall stand beside the Senator in resisting increases in salaries, especially unnecessary increases, but, in my judgment, we need a $7,500 man as Commissioner of Indian Affairs. I think in this instance we have a $7,500 man appointed to that station. I believe that it would be a source of great economy and that his services will entitle him to this compensation. I think this ought to constitute an exception to the Senator's rule and to my rule.

Mr. FALL. Mr. President, complaint is very often heard that it is impossible to have the business of this Government conducted as private business is conducted. The Commissioner of Indian Affairs has charge of property approximating $900,000,000 in value all over the western portion of the United States. At any rate, it covers a great variety of business. If this was a private business matter, there would be no question of a salary of $25,000 or more accompanying the duties of the office of the commissioner. The corporation or business interest receiving such services, if they were properly rendered, would consider $25,000 a very moderate amount.

I think if the Government will get good men and pay good men something like a commensurate salary, the complaint so often made heretofore that we can not get our business attended to in a businesslike way might, to some extent at least, be obviated. I join the Senators who have expressed themselves in the sincere wish that the Senator from West Virginia will withhold his point of order.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair finds that on January 13, 1881, the Presiding Officer, Mr. Hoar, of Massachusetts, decided the question that an amendment was not in order, was not good, after debate had proceeded upon the merits of the amendment. There seems to have been no appeal from the decision of the Chair. The Chair as now constituted does not believe that ruling was correct. The Chair believes that in the course of the discussion on an amendment a fact may arise which indicates that a point of order should be made and should be sustained by the Chair. The Chair believes that this is general legislation, intended to increase the salary of an office where the salary is fixed by statute, and that it can not be done over an objection upon an appropriation bill.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I desire simply to make an observation in response to a suggestion made by the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. OWEN]. Those of us coming from Eastern States have always hesitated to take any prominent part in the discussion of Indian affairs or any matters relating to the public lands, for the reason that naturally we are not as well informed as western men. I have, however, to some extent heretofore, as I have to-day, taken an interest in the Indian appropriation bill, and I shall continue to do so as long as I remain a Member of this body.

I regretted to hear the Senator from Oklahoma sneeringly allude to men from Massachusetts who go out West nosing around and coming back and making reports on Indian affairs. It is not a proper characterization of some men in Massachusetts as well as in other States of the East.

We all remember the great services that Senator Dawes, of Massachusetts, rendered this country in relation to Indian affairs. We all remember that of the entire membership of this body Senator Dawes was looked upon as an authority for years and years, and that the work he did was of inestimable value to the people of this country.

We also, some of us, remember the work that Senator Platt, of Connecticut, did—that man of sainted memory, standing, I think, in one of these seats here, perhaps the one I occupy now, for years a member of the Committee on Indian Affairs, sometimes protesting against remaining on that committee. I say we all remember the work that man did and the great services he rendered the Government. He came not from Massachusetts, but from the contiguous State of Connecticut. He had as deep an interest in the welfare of the Indians of this country as any man who ever lived, and he rendered service that we ought not to minimize in our consideration of Indian questions.

We also remember Senator Quay, of Pennsylvania. I think the last speech he made in the Senate was a eulogy on the Indians, a speech coming from a man who seldom spoke, that brought tears to the eyes of some Members of this body. His devotion to the cause of the Indians was of a character that some of us remember and are glad to pay tribute to on this occasion.

I recall, Mr. President, the fact that when Mr. Cornelius Bliss was appointed Secretary of the Interior from the State of New York there was great trepidation in the minds of many men lest he should bring to the consideration of the great questions in that very important department of the Government narrow views on questions that more directly concern the Western States and the representatives of the Western States. Yet, Mr. President, there is not a western Senator here to-day who is familiar with the work that Mr. Bliss did in that great department who will not agree with me that the Government never had a more efficient, a more capable, and a more broad-minded Secretary of the Interior than Mr. Bliss.

Mr. President, I say this partly in apology for presuming to take any part in the consideration of the bill to-day. I do not pretend to be familiar with the details of Indian legislation or of the management of the Indian Office, but I do, Mr. President, assert here and now that I have just as deep an interest in the welfare of those wards of our Nation as any man has, no matter what State he represents.

I hope that hereafter in the discussion of this question we will not draw the geographic line and say that men living in the East must be debarred from investigating these subjects and expressing their opinions any more than shall Senators from the Western or Southern States of the Union.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair has sustained the point of order upon the proposition that the amendment of the committee is general legislation on an appropriation bill. The reading of the bill will proceed.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Indian Affairs was, on page 11, after line 8, to insert:

For the purpose of making thorough inquiry into conditions in the Indian service, with a view to ascertaining any and all facts relating to the conduct and management of the Bureau of Indian Affairs, and of recommending such changes in the administration of Indian affairs as would promote the betterment of the service and the well-being of Indians, there is hereby constituted a commission, to be known as the Joint Commission to Investigate Indian Affairs, to be composed of three Members of the Senate, to be appointed by the Presiding Officer of the Senate from the membership of the Senate Committee on Indian Affairs, and three Members of the House of Representatives, to be appointed by the Speaker from the membership of the Committee on Indian Affairs of the House of Representatives. The said commission be, and is hereby, directed, authorized, and empowered to examine into the conduct and management of the Bureau of Indian Affairs and all its branches and agencies, their organization and administration. The commission shall have power and authority to examine all books, documents, and papers in the said Bureau of Indian Affairs, its branches or agencies, relating to the administration of the business of said bureau, and shall have and is hereby granted authority to subpœna witnesses, compel their attendance, administer oaths, and to demand any and all books, documents, and papers of whatever nature relating to the affairs of Indians as conducted by said bureau, its branches and agencies. Said commission is hereby authorized to visit any Indian agency, school, institution, or other establishment under the jurisdiction and control of the Bureau of Indian Affairs or the Department of the Interior, and it shall be the duty of the Secretary of the Interior, the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, and all other officers connected with the administration of Indian affairs to aid the said commission and furnish all available information that may be demanded by said commission.

The investigation hereby provided for shall be conducted by said commission as speedily as possible, and the findings, conclusions, and recommendations of such commission shall be reported to Congress at the second session of the Sixty-third Congress. Said commission is hereby authorized to employ such clerical and other assistance, including stenographers, as said commission may deem necessary in the proper prosecution of its work: Provided, That stenographers so employed shall not receive for their services exceeding $1 per printed page. The sum of $50,000 is hereby appropriated to pay the expenses of the said commission. Within 10 days after the appointment of the members of the commission they shall proceed to elect a chairman and secretary, and the funds hereby appropriated shall be paid out on the order of such chairman and secretary, and a full, itemized account of all such expenditures shall accompany the final report of the commission when submitted to Congress.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I desire to ask the chairman of the committee if he has any objection to striking out, on page 11, in lines 18 and 19, the words "from the membership of the Senate Committee on Indian Affairs," and, in lines 21 and 22, to striking out "from the membership of the Committee on Indian Affairs of the House of Representatives"?

I assume that very likely the members of this commission, if it shall be appointed—and I do not object to it—will be selected from those two committees as a rule, but it might occur that for good and sufficient reasons some Senator outside of that committee or some Member of the House of Representatives outside of that committee ought to go on that commission.

I will say for myself, Mr. President, that I would not go on the commission if I received the appropriation that is included in this item; so, I do not speak from any personal consideration; but I think it is well in selecting the members of such commissions to let the matter remain open for the Vice President, seeking the advice, as he will, of the chairman of the committee, to make such selections as, in his judgment, he should deem wise. I shall not move to strike out the words, but I ask the distinguished chairman of the committee if he would object to doing so?

Mr. STONE. So far as I am personally concerned, I have no objection whatever to the change which the Senator suggests; and I almost feel like taking the authority of speaking for the committee and accepting the suggestion.

Mr. GALLINGER. Then I will, under that statement, make the motion, Mr. President.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from New Hampshire moves an amendment to strike certain words from the amendment of the committee. The amendment to the amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 11, in lines 18 and 19, after the word "Senate," it is proposed to strike out "from the membership of the Senate Committee on Indian Affairs," and in lines 21 and 22, after the word "Speaker," to strike out "from the membership of the Committee on Indian Affairs of the House of Representatives."

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment to the amendment.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment, as amended, was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Indian Affairs was, on page 13, after line 11, to insert:

That an agreement, made at the Navajo Springs Indian Agency, in the State of Colorado, on the 10th day of May, 1911, with the Wiminuche Band of Southern Ute Indians, belonging to the jurisdiction of the Navajo Springs Indian Agency, be, and the same is hereby, modified and amended to read as follows:

"ARTICLE I.

"The said Wiminuche Band of Southern Ute Indians hereby agrees to relinquish and surrender to the United States of America all its right, title, and interest in and to that portion of its reservation described as follows:

"Beginning at a point on the north boundary of the Southern Ute Indian Reservation in southwestern Colorado, where the north quarter corner of unsurveyed fractional section 2, township 34 north, range 15 west, 'south of the Ute boundary,' intersects the same; thence south to the south quarter corner of unsurveyed section 26, said township; thence west to the southwest corner of unsurveyed section 25, township 34 north, range 16 west; thence north to the northwest corner of unsurveyed fractional section 1, said township; thence east to the north quarter corner of unsurveyed fractional section 2, township 34 north, range 15 west, 'south of the Ute boundary,' the place of beginning; 14,520 acres, more or less, lying and being in Montezuma County, State of Colorado.

"ARTICLE II.

"In consideration for the lands relinquished and surrendered as aforesaid the United States hereby agrees to convey to said Wiminuche Band of Southern Ute Indians in exchange therefor lands lying within the present boundaries of the Mesa Verde National Park and from the public domain, said lands to become a part of the reservation of said Wiminuche Band of Southern Ute Indians and to take on the same character and title as the rest of the land of the said reservation, of which they become a part by virtue of this agreement, and described as follows:

"Sections 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, fractional sections 8, 9, 10, 11, 12, in township 34 north, range 16 west, 'north of the Ute boundary'; also sections 25, 26, 27, southeast quarter section 28, sections 32, 33, 34, 35, and 36, township 35 north, range 16 west, containing 10,080 acres, more or less

"Also sections 5 and 6 and fractional sections 7 and 8 (unsurveyed) in township 34 north, range 17 west, 'north of the Ute boundary,' and sections 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, and fractional sections 8, 9, 10, 11, and 12 (unsurveyed), in township 34 north, range 18 west, 'north of the Ute boundary,' and sections 19, 20, 29, 30, 31, and 32, in township 35 north, range 17 west, and sections 20, 21, 22, 23, 24, 25, 26, 27, 28, 29, 32, 33, 34, 35, and 36, in township 35 north, range 18 west, New Mexico principal meridian, containing 20,160 acres, more or less.

"And in case it be found that any portion of the lands herein described have been entered or patented under any of the land laws of the United States, then, and in that event, it is stipulated and agreed that public lands of an equal amount and like character and lying adjacent to the lands herein described be substituted and given to said Wiminuche Band of Southern Ute Indians, to make the total area of lands to be given in amount equal to the above-described lands, the total area in said western tract to contain 20,160 acres.

"ARTICLE III.

"Nothing in this agreement shall be construed to deprive the Indians parties hereto of any annuities or benefits to which they are entitled under existing laws and treaties.

"ARTICLE IV.

"This agreement shall become effective and binding on the parties hereto when ratified by the Congress of the United States."

SEC. 2. That the said agreement be, and the same is hereby, accepted, ratified, and confirmed as herein amended.

SEC. 3. That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized to add to the area conveyed to the Indians in exchange for the lands relinquished any tracts of unappropriated public land adjoining thereto which may be necessary to make the total area of the acreage ceded to the Indians in lieu of that lost to them by any prior existing valid rights attaching thereto.

SEC. 4. That the boundary of the Mesa Verde National Park, created by the act of Congress approved June 29, 1906 (34 Stat. L., 616), is hereby extended on the south so as to include the land relinquished by the Indians in the foregoing agreement as herein provided and the boundaries of said park shall hereafter be defined as follows:

Beginning at a point on the north boundary of the Southern Ute Indian Reservation in southwestern Colorado where the north quarter corner of unsurveyed fractional section 2, township 34 north, range 15 west, "south of the Ute boundary," intersects the same; thence south to the south quarter corner of unsurveyed section 26, said township; thence west to the southwest corner of unsurveyed section 25, township 34 north, range 16 west; thence north to the northwest corner of unsurveyed fractional section 1, said township and range; thence west to the southeast corner of fractional section 12, township 34 north, range 16 west, "north of the Ute boundary"; thence north to the northwest corner of section 19, township 35 north, range 15 west; thence east to the southwest corner of the southeast quarter of section 16, said township; thence north to the northwest corner of the southeast quarter of said section; thence east to the southwest corner of the northeast quarter of section 13, said township; thence north to the northwest corner of the northeast quarter of said section; thence east to the southwest corner of section 7, township 35 north, range 14 west; thence north to the northwest corner of said section; thence east to the southwest corner of section 5, said township; thence north to the northwest corner of said section; thence east to the northeast corner of said section; thence south to the southeast corner of the northeast quarter of said section; thence east to the northeast corner of the southwest quarter of section 4, said township; thence south to the northwest corner of the southeast quarter of section 16, said township; thence east to the northeast corner of the southeast quarter of said section; thence south to the northwest corner of section 22, said township; thence east to the northeast corner of said section; thence south to the northwest corner of section 26, said township; thence east along the north section line of section 26 to the east bank of the Rio Mancos; thence in a southeasterly direction along the east bank of the Rio Mancos to its intersection with the northern boundary line of the Southern Ute Indian Reservation; thence west along said Indian reservation boundary to its intersection with the range line between ranges 14 and 15 west, the place of beginning;

And the provisions of the act of June 29, 1896, creating the park, are hereby extended over the same.

So much of the act of June 29, 1906, as provides that the custodianship of the Secretary of the Interior shall extend over all prehistoric ruins situated within 5 miles of the eastern, western, and northern boundaries of the park, as described in said act, not on lands alienated by patent from the ownership of the United States, is hereby repealed.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the head of "Arizona and New Mexico," in section 2, page 21, line 4, after the words "determining the," to strike out "reasonability" and insert "feasibility," so as to make the clause read:

For continuing the investigation by the Secretary of War for the purpose of determining the feasibility and practicability of constructing a dam and reservoir at or near the vicinity of the Box Canyon on the San Carlos Indian Reservation, and for other purposes, as authorized by the act of August 24, 1912 (37 Stat. L., pp. 518-522), $10,000, to be immediately available and to remain available until expended.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 22, line 19, after the word "act," to insert "to be immediately available," so as to make the clause read:

For completion of the construction of necessary channels and laterals for the utilization of water in connection with the pumping plant for irrigation purposes on the Colorado River Indian Reservation, Ariz., as provided in the act of April 4, 1910 (36 Stat. L., p. 275), for the purpose of securing an appropriation of water for the irrigation of approximately 150,000 acres of land and for maintaining and operating the pumping plant, $25,000, reimbursable as provided in said act, to be immediately available and to remain available until expended.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 23, line 4, after $65,300, to strike out "which said sum of $65,300 shall be reimbursed to the United States by the Apache Indians having tribal rights on the Fort Apache and San Carlos Indian Reservations, and shall be and remain a charge and lien upon the lands, property, and funds belonging to said Apache Indians until paid in full," so as to make the clause read:

For the construction of a bridge across the Gila River on the San Carlos Apache Indian Reservation, Arizona, $45,500; and for the construction of a bridge across the San Carlos River on said reservation in said State, $19,800, to be immediately available, said bridges to be constructed across said streams in the places and manner recommended by the Secretary of the Interior in House Document No. 1013, Sixty-second Congress, third session; in all, $65,300.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the head of "California," in section 3, page 25, after line 19, to insert:

For completing the construction of the wagon road on the Hoopa Valley Indian Reservation, in the county of Humboldt, State of California, and for the purpose of repairing that part of said road already constructed under the provisions of the act of April 30, 1908, $5,000, to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the head of "Kansas," in section 7, page 27, line 20, after the words "the sum of," to strike out "$4,010,75" and insert "$2,000," so as to make the clause read:

That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay to D. C. Tillotson, of Topeka, Kans., the sum of $2,000, said amount being in payment for work done and expenses incurred by said Tillotson in carrying out the provisions of the treaty with the Pottawatomie Indians proclaimed April 19, 1862, and under the act of Congress approved March 3, 1909, under contract with the Secretary of the Interior, said sum to be paid on proper certificate from the Secretary of the Interior.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the head of "Minnesota," in section 9, page 34, after line 9, to insert:

That any Indian allottee of the Fond du Lac Reservation who has not already received 80 acres of land in allotment shall be entitled to take by allotment of any unappropriated land of said reservation sufficient, with the land already allotted such Indian, to make 80 acres of land, such allotment not to interfere with existing timber contracts.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the head of "Montana," in section 10, page 34, line 18, after the word "employees," to strike out "20,000" and insert "$25,000," so as to make the clause read:

SEC. 10. For support and civilization of the Indians at Fort Belknap Agency, Mont., including pay of employees, $25,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 34, line 21, after the word "employees," to strike out "$12,000" and insert "$15,000," so as to make the clause read:

For support and civilization of Indians at Flathead Agency, Mont., including pay of employees, $15,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 35, line 13, after the word "estimates," to strike out "$275,000" and insert "$350,000," so as to make the clause read:

For continuing the construction of irrigation systems to irrigate the allotted lands of the Indians of the Flathead Reservation, in Montana, and the unallotted irrigable lands to be or which have been heretofore disposed of under authority of law, including the necessary surveys, plans, and estimates, $350,000, to be immediately available, reimbursable in accordance with the provisions of the act of April 4, 1910.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 36, after line 2, to insert:

There is hereby appropriated the sum of $50,000, reimbursable, to be immediately available and to remain available until expended, and the Secretary of the Interior is authorized to use this money, or so much thereof as may be necessary, under such regulations as he may prescribe, for the promotion of civilization and self-support among the Indians residing and having tribal rights on the Fort Peck Indian Reservation, Mont. The said sum to be expended in the purchase of seed, live stock, vehicles, harness, machinery, tools, implements, and other agricultural equipment; for the construction of houses for said Indians, and for such other purposes as the Secretary of the Interior may deem proper in promoting their civilization and self-support: Provided, That said sum shall be expended under conditions to be prescribed by the Secretary of the Interior for its repayment to the United States on or before June 30, 1925, and all repayments to this fund made on or before June 30, 1924, are hereby reappropriated for the same purpose as the original fund, and the entire fund, including such repayments, shall remain available until June 30, 1924; and all repayments to the fund hereby created which shall be made subsequent to June 30, 1924, shall be covered into the Treasury and shall not be withdrawn or applied except in consequence of a subsequent appropriation made by law.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, at the top of page 38, to insert:

The Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized to pay to Omer D. Lewis, lease clerk at the Flathead Indian Agency, Mont., the sum of $2,573.25, for the purpose of reimbursing him for expenses incurred for hospital and doctor's fees paid and serious personal injuries received while aiding Federal officers engaged in suppressing the sale of liquor to Indians, the same to be immediately available.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 38, after line 21, to insert:

The Court of Claims is hereby authorized and directed to hear and consider all claims, legal or equitable, of the Blackfoot, Blood, Piegan, Grosventre, River Crow, and Assiniboine Tribes or Nations of Indians residing on the Blackfoot, Fort Belknap, and Fort Peck Indian Reservations in the State of Montana, respectively, arising under treaties, agreements, acts of Congress, and executive orders, and all legal and equitable defenses thereto, including set-offs and counterclaims of the United States against said tribes or nations of Indians, without regard to the lapse of time, and to make findings of fact and report the same to Congress.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 39, after line 7, to insert:

There is hereby made available the balance of any tribal funds now in the Treasury of the United States to the credit of the Blackfeet Indians of Montana, or which shall hereafter be deposited to their credit, including the proceeds from the sale of surplus lands, for expenditure by the Secretary of the Interior, under such regulations as he may prescribe, for the promotion of civilization and self-support among the Indians residing on and having tribal rights on the Blackfeet Indian Reservation.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the head of "Nevada," in section 12, page 40, line 10, after the words "in all," to strike out "$73,400" and insert "$56,100," so as to make the clause read:

For support and education of 300 Indian pupils at the Indian school at Carson City, Nev., and for pay of superintendent, $50,100; for general repairs and improvements, $6,000; in all, $56,100.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the head of "New Mexico," section 13, page 40, after line 11, to strike out:

SEC. 13. For support and education of 300 Indian pupils at the Indian school at Albuquerque, N. Mex., and for pay of superintendent, $51,900; for general repairs and improvements, $3,000; new buildings, $15,000; in all, $69,900.

And in lieu thereof to insert:

SEC. 13. For support and education of 400 Indian pupils at the Indian school at Albuquerque, N. Mex., and for pay of superintendent, $68,600; for general repairs and improvements, $7,000; for the construction of new buildings, $46,000, as follows: Shop buildings, $14,000; domestic science building, $7,000; gymnasium and assembly hall, $25,000; in all, $121,600.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 40, after line 23, to strike out:

For support and education of 300 Indian pupils at the Indian school at Santa Fe, N. Mex., and for pay of superintendent, $51,900; for general repairs and improvements, $4,000; for water supply, $1,600; for girls' dormitory, $18,000; in all, $75,500.

And in lieu thereof to insert:

For support and education of 400 Indian pupils at the Indian school at Santa Fe, N. Mex., and for pay of superintendent, $68,600; for general repairs and improvements, $8,000; for water supply, $1,600; for addition to girls' dormitory, to be made immediately available, $18,000; for a gymnasium and assembly hall, combined, $25,000; in all, $121,200.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 41, after line 10, to insert:

For the construction, equipment, and maintenance of a tuberculosis sanatorium on the Mescalero Reservation, N. Mex., for the treatment of tuberculous Indians, the sum of $100,000: Provided, That not to exceed $10,000 of this sum shall be used for the construction of a wagon road from Three Rivers, N. Mex., to the sanatorium site on the Mescalero Reservation.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. SHIVELY in the chair). The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President, when the bill was before the committee I made some objection to this provision, and I made the statement, I believe, that I should raise a point of order against it in the Senate. I have since been furnished with information that an estimate has been made for the appropriation, and I shall therefore not now make the point of order.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, before the amendment is voted on—I do not propose to make a point of order against it, even if it would lie—I should like to ask for a little information from either the chairman of the committee or from one of the Senators from New Mexico concerning this proposed sanatorium. How many Indians are likely to make use of this sanatorium if it shall be established at an expense of $100,000?

Mr. FALL. I understand the proposition will finally resolve itself down to the point that they propose to take care of 500 Indians annually. As to the number with which they will start, I was informed by the commissioner that they would commence with about 100. They need this money for buildings, for the construction of roads and irrigation ditches, and to enable them to enter upon farming. I believe they propose to allow some of the Indians to conduct farming operations and that has to be done by irrigation.

Mr. GALLINGER. The sanatorium will be open to Indians from all parts of the country?

Mr. FALL. From all parts of the country.

Mr. GALLINGER. Have they means to enable them to leave their homes from distant points to get to the sanatorium?

Mr. FALL. The commissioner seemed to think that there were ample funds in the individual appropriations for the different Indian tribes and in the general appropriations to enable the Bureau of Indian Affairs to remove the Indians there and to take care of them.

I will say to the Senator that there was considerable objection to this item, which was suggested to me something over a year ago by the Commissioner of Indian Affairs. The site which he selected—he has been out there himself—and which was agreed to by the physicians who have been sent out by the department, was located on the upper head of streams which flow down through my ranch and by my home. As a matter of first impression I objected to that very seriously. The matter was argued, however, and finally the railroad company practically agreed that they would erect a separate station for the handling of the tuberculous Indians, and that they would be kept out of contact with the settlers on the three river branches—there are about 300 settlers in there—and taken up above, 8 or 9 miles away, at a place which the department considers the most ideal location, they say, in the United States for a hospital of this kind.

Mr. GALLINGER. The project is undoubtedly a proper one. We of the East, however, are usually of the opinion that the climate of New Mexico is so salubrious that tuberculosis does not thrive there to any very great extent; that, in fact, people there are immune to a large extent; and we are in the habit of sending our patients from the East to New Mexico to be cured.

Mr. FALL. Exactly. The proposition here is to send Indians from all over the East, from the various reservations, to this hospital for treatment.

Mr. GALLINGER. That being the case, I really think the item ought to go into the bill.

I made a great—if I may use the word—fight some years ago to secure an appropriation for the establishment of a sanatorium in New Mexico for the treatment of white tubercular patients from all parts of our country. I was backed up vigorously and valiantly by the medical profession, but I did not succeed in getting the appropriation, and the project failed. I met then a good deal of opposition to that project from the people in New Mexico, who did not want tubercular patients sent into their territory, as I recall; and I sympathized, to some extent, with that feeling.

I am glad that the Indians are to be provided for, and possibly before my term ends—which is not very far in the future—I may renew the effort to find a place in that salubrious State where we can establish a sanatorium to which, the Government giving us some help, we can send poor patients from the East who, if they are to get relief, must get it from a change of climate. I shall very cheerfully vote for the proposed amendment.

Mr. CATRON. Mr. President, I think it is possible that the Senator from New Hampshire who has just finished speaking may have forgotten a little. I was a Delegate in the lower House when he made the effort which he speaks of making. His first effort was to have turned over to the country for such a hospital the military reservation which was in the city of Santa Fe, called Fort Marcy. He will remember now that I made strenuous objection to a reserve of that kind being placed right in the city of Santa Fe, and suggested to him that there was an abandoned reservation at Fort Stanton which could be taken up, and he did take that up.

Mr. GALLINGER. Yes.

Mr. CATRON. I think the reserve was established there afterwards. I do not know positively, but I am under the impression that it was done, at large expense.

Mr. GALLINGER. I think they established a sanitarium there for the marines of the Navy.

Mr. CATRON. Not for the people generally?

Mr. GALLINGER. Not for the people in whom I was more particularly interested.

Mr. FALL. That is true.

Mr. CATRON. I do not think the people will seriously object to a properly established sanitarium for that purpose for the people at large, provided it is within due limits. We recognize that we have the best climate in the United States for that purpose.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Indian Affairs was, on page 41, line 20, after "$16,500," to strike out "which said sum shall be reimbursed to the United States by the Navajo Indians, and shall remain a charge and lien upon the lands, property, and funds belonging to said Navajo Indians until paid in full," so as to make the clause read:

For the construction of a bridge across the San Juan River at Shiprock, N. Mex., on the Navajo Indian Reservation, to be immediately available, $16,500.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 42, line 2, after the words "New Mexico," to insert "to be designated by the Secretary of the Interior," so as to make the clause read:

For the pay of one special attorney for the Pueblo Indians of New Mexico to be designated by the Secretary of the Interior and for necessary traveling expenses of said attorney, $2,000, or so much thereof as the Secretary of the Interior may deem necessary.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the head of "North Dakota," section 16, page 43, after line 17, to strike out:

For support and education of 150 Indian pupils at the Indian school, Wahpeton, N. Dak., and pay of superintendent, $26,500; for general repairs and improvements, $5,000; for addition to barn, $2,500; for dairy cows, $1,000; in all, $35,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 43, after line 22, to insert:

For support and education of 200 Indian pupils at the Indian school, Wahpeton, N. Dak., and pay of superintendent, $35,200; for general repairs and improvements, $3,000; for beautifying and improving school grounds, $1,000; for gymnasium and playground equipment, $1,500; for cement walks, $1,000; for addition to barn, $4,000; for dairy cows, $1,000; for school building, $30,000; in all, $76,700. Of the above amount all shall be immediately available except the amount appropriated for education and support of pupils and for general repairs and improvements.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 44, after line 7, to insert:

For examination of the land embraced in Sullys Hill Park to determine whether it contains valuable minerals, $1,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary.

Mr. GRONNA. May I have the attention of the chairman of the committee for a moment? I think a mistake has been made here. I believe the committee allowed $500 for this purpose. If so, I wish that to be corrected.

Mr. STONE. I think that is an error.

Mr. GRONNA. It should be reduced to $500.

Mr. STONE. It ought to be $500.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. What is Sullys Hill Park? Is it an Indian reservation?

Mr. GRONNA. It is a Government park.

Mr. STONE. I move that "$1,000" be stricken out and "$500" inserted.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment to the amendment.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. GALLINGER. Before the amendment as amended is agreed to I wish to get a little information. I will ask if Sullys Hill Park is in an Indian reservation or whether it is entirely separate from an Indian reservation?

Mr. GRONNA. About the year 1902, I think, approximately 780 acres of Indian land were set aside as a Government park. Before that time a survey or examination was supposed to have been made to ascertain whether or not there were any minerals in what was called Sullys Hill. The Indians have been dissatisfied with the examination. The Committee on Indian Affairs looked into this matter very thoroughly, with the assistance of Commissioner Abbott. We found that no borings, no examination, had been made except by citizens of the State—so-called prospectors. Personally I do not think there are any minerals in those hills, but the Indians believe there are minerals there. We have been told that the borings can be made for the small amount of $500, and the commissioner and the committee thought it would be money well expended.

Mr. GALLINGER. I presume the Senator has answered my question, and yet I do not quite comprehend the situation. Is this a part of an Indian reservation at the present time.

Mr. GRONNA. At the present time it is a small Government park. It belongs to the United States, but it is right in the Fort Totten Reserve.

Mr. GALLINGER. Why is not the Geological Survey the proper body to make an investigation of this kind?

Mr. GRONNA. I will say to the Senator that the Geological Survey will make this investigation.

Mr. GALLINGER. Has not the Geological Survey $500 lying around loose somewhere that it could appropriate and use for that purpose?

Mr. GRONNA. No; I will say to the Senator from New Hampshire that we looked into that matter very thoroughly.

Mr. GALLINGER. I have no objection. It is a small item.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment as amended.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Indian Affairs was, under the head of "Oklahoma," section 17, page 44, after line 15, to insert:

That the Secretary of the Interior, in his discretion, is authorized to sell upon such terms and under such rules and regulations as he may prescribe the unused, unallotted, unreserved, and such portions of the school and agency lands that are no longer needed for administration purposes, in the Kiowa, Comanche, Apache, and Wichita Tribes of Indians in Oklahoma, the proceeds therefrom, less $1.25 per acre, to be deposited to the credit of said Indians in the United States Treasury, to draw until further provided by Congress 5 per cent interest, and to be known as the Kiowa Agency hospital fund, to be used only for maintenance of said hospital: Provided, That by and with the approval of the Secretary of the Interior the county commissioners of Comanche County for the benefit of said county shall, for 90 days from and after the passage and approval of this act, have the preference right to buy at $1.25 per acre a suitable 160-acre tract of land to be used for county poor-farm purposes.

The hospital heretofore authorized to be constructed on the Fort Sill Indian School Reservation, Okla., for the benefit of the Indians of the Kiowa, Comanche, and Apache Tribes in that State, by the act of August 24, 1912 (37 Stat. L., p. 529), is hereby made available for any members of the Caddo, Wichita, or other Indians in the State of Oklahoma, under the jurisdiction of the superintendent in charge of the Kiowa Agency.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. I should like to ask one question in regard to that amendment. I hardly understand what it means, and I ask for information. Does this amendment dispose of all of the unused, unallotted lands of these four tribes? It would seem to be so indicated. If that is true, I should be glad to be informed by the chairman, or somebody who is familiar with it, as to the extent of these lands. The amendment seems to grant authority to dispose of all the lands except those that have been given in individual allotments.

Mr. STONE. The purpose of the amendment, as I understand, is to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to sell the unused, unallotted, and unreserved lands, and such portions of the school and agency lands as are no longer needed for administration purposes, embracing about 2,000 acres altogether.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. About 2,000 acres, and not much more than that?

Mr. STONE. I will ask the Senator from Oklahoma if that is not correct?

Mr. OWEN. Yes; there are about 2,000 acres. Nearly all their land was sold. Some of it was turned back, and there are some odds and ends there that the department thought ought to be cleaned up, and they want to use them for a hospital for these people.

Mr. STONE. I can read what is said in the report, if the Senator is not satisfied.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Oh, I am perfectly satisfied. I simply desired a little information.

Mr. STONE. The matter is very fully discussed in the report.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Indian Affairs was, on page 45, after line 16, to strike out:

That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized in his discretion to extend each of the deferred payments on the town lots of the north addition to the city of Lawton, Okla., one year from the date on which they become due under existing law: Provided, That no title shall issue to any such purchaser until all deferred payments, interest, and taxes have been made as provided in the act of March 27, 1908 (35 Stats, 49), and the act of February 18, 1909 (35 Stats., 637).

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 49, line 10, after the name "Edward Welch," to insert "Provided, That the lands heretofore or hereafter purchased for said Fort Sill Indians shall be subject to the provisions of the general allotment act of February 8, 1887 (24 Stats. L., 388), as amended, and trust patents shall issue to said Indians in accordance with the said act of February 8, 1887, and the amendments thereto," so as to make the clause read:

For continuing the relief and settlement of the Apache Indians now confined as prisoners of war at Fort Sill Military Reservation, Oklahoma, on lands in Oklahoma to be selected for them by the Secretary of the Interior and the Secretary of War, $100,000, to be expended under such rules and regulations as the Secretary of the Interior and the Secretary of War may prescribe, and to be immediately available: Provided, That allotments may be purchased in Oklahoma for the widow of George Wrattan, interpreter for the Fort Sill prisoners of war, Martin Grab, and Edward Welch: Provided, That the lands heretofore or hereafter purchased for said Fort Sill Indians shall be subject to the provisions of the general allotment act of February 8, 1887 (24 Stat. L., p. 388), as amended, and trust patents shall issue to said Indians in accordance with the said act of February 8, 1887, and the amendments thereto.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. President, for the purpose of bringing the matter before the Senate, I desire to offer an amendment to come in as a new paragraph after the paragraph just read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

Mr. STONE. If the Senator will pardon me, unless he very much desires it, I suggest that it would be better to complete the committee amendments before individual amendments are offered.

Mr. TOWNSEND. I have no objection to following that course.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will continue the reading of the bill.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Indian Affairs was, under the subhead "Five Civilized Tribes," section 18, page 50, line 24, after the date "nineteen hundred and thirteen," to insert "and the sum of $10,000, to be paid out of the Choctaw and Chickasaw tribal funds, is hereby appropriated for the completion of the work," so as to make the clause read:

That the act of Congress approved February 19, 1912 (37 Stat. L., p. 67), being "An act to provide for the sale of the surface of the coal and asphalt lands of the Choctaw and Chickasaw Nations, and for other purposes," be, and the same is hereby, amended to provide that the classification and appraisement of such lands shall be completed not later than December 1, 1913, and the sum of $10,000, to be paid out of the Choctaw and Chickasaw tribal funds, is hereby appropriated for the completion of the work.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 53, after line 3, to insert:

For settling land suits in eastern Oklahoma, $25,000, reimbursable from fees which may be imposed in such cases by the Secretary of the Interior: Provided, That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized, in his discretion, to approve any deed or contract or adjustment heretofore made by or between the parties to such suits, regardless of date, in the following cases:

Where the purchase or contract or settlement was made in good faith, without fraud, and the allottee actually paid the reasonable value of the land; or where a sum sufficient to make up the reasonable value of the land, in addition to the amount already paid to the allottee, shall be paid to the United States superintendent for the Union Agency; or where the adjustment shall be made upon such terms of settlement as the Secretary of the Interior may deem just, proper, and equitable, and under such rules and regulations as he may prescribe; and upon such settlement suit, if any, instituted at the request of the Secretary of the Interior shall be dismissed without court costs to the defendant.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, unless I can get satisfactory information concerning this proposed amendment I shall make the point of order against it. I wish first to inquire how many of these suits are to-day in controversy, and whether or not they are in the courts at the present time.

Mr. STONE. If the Senator will refer to the report accompanying the bill he will find a departmental letter addressed to me, as chairman of the committee, covering this subject. The Secretary of the Interior states, in the fourth paragraph of the letter, that he understands there are over 20,000 of these suits. Then he proceeds to say that additional legislation is imperative to preserve to the Indians the rights which would have been theirs had the agreement and laws of Congress been strictly complied with by these defendants, and so forth.

Mr. GALLINGER. And it is proposed at one fell swoop, in an appropriation bill, to settle 30,000 cases that are now in controversy or in the courts?

Mr. TOWNSEND. And now ready for judgment.

Mr. GALLINGER. And now ready for judgment, as I understand.

Mr. STONE. Twenty thousand, not thirty thousand. The proposed appropriation is $25,000. The Secretary says:

I am of opinion, however, that the amount proposed to be appropriated, $10,000, is entirely inadequate.

The Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. OWEN] has offered an amendment to the Indian appropriation bill which has been referred to the committee. That amendment I caused to be transmitted to the Secretary for a report upon it, and the letter which I am reading came from him in response. The amendment offered by the Senator from Oklahoma was for an appropriation of $10,000. The Secretary says that he is of opinion that $10,000 will be inadequate, and he proceeds to say:

If I am charged with the duty of adjusting these numerous and important suits, I would want to appoint a board or committee of three competent persons to act for the department in the field in the prosecution of the work. To do this we should have an initial appropriation of at least $25,000.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, this matter manifestly ought not to be in an appropriation bill. Here are 20,000 or 30,000 suits—I do not know how many. There are large sums that will go to attorneys in these cases when they are settled, I presume, unless they are held on a contingent fee and they are defeated in the courts. I have here a Senate document entitled "Indian lands in Oklahoma. Decisions of the Supreme Court of the United States relative to the allotment of and taxes on certain Indian lands in Oklahoma; also relating to conveyances and the cancellation of conveyances, deeds, and mortgages thereon," which treats to some extent of this question.

In view of the fact that these cases are so numerous and, I apprehend, of considerable importance to somebody, I am quite unwilling that 20,000 or 30,000 suits should be settled by the Secretary of the Interior by a stroke of his pen. I therefore make the point of order that this is general legislation on an appropriation bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The point of order is sustained.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Indian Affairs was, on page 56, after line 2, to insert:

That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized to designate and set aside not to exceed 4 sections of the unallotted lands belonging to the Choctaw and Chickasaw Tribes of Indians in Oklahoma, said reservation being for the purpose of providing land on which to build a sanatorium or sanatoria for the benefit of said tribes of Indians.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 56, after line 20, to strike out:

All contracts, written or verbal, purporting or intended to authorize any person or persons, directly or indirectly, to represent any of the Five Civilized Tribes or any member or members thereof in respect to the payment, distribution, or any other disposition of money or other property of the said nation held by or under the supervision of the United States, shall be absolutely void and incapable of ratification or confirmation unless the consent of the Secretary of the Interior and approval of Congress shall have previously been given in writing to the person claiming thereunder to negotiate such contract, and unless such contract shall be approved as required by section 2103 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, and any person who shall secure or attempt to secure any such contract without the consent of the Secretary of the Interior, or demand or attempt to collect or receive any money payment or any other consideration under any such contract not approved as herein required, shall be guilty of a misdemeanor, and upon conviction thereof shall be punished by fine of not less than $500 or imprisonment for not more than six months, or by both such fine and imprisonment, at the discretion of the court: Provided, That this shall not apply to contracts with tribal attorneys for said tribes entered into and approved by the President in accordance with existing law.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 57, after line 19, to insert:

No contract made with any Indian, where such contract relates to the tribal funds or property in the hands of the United States, shall be valid, nor shall any payment for services rendered in relation thereto be made unless the consent of the United States has previously been given.

Mr. GORE. I wish to offer an amendment there, with the consent of the Senator who has the bill in charge, to save adverting to it later. I think it will be accepted. After the word "given," I move to insert "in such manner as Congress may prescribe." The amendment says "unless the consent of the United States has previously been given," but it does not signify who shall speak for the United States. I think the amendment ought to contain that provision.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. I will ask the Senator if the Secretary of the Interior has not customarily dealt with those matters? Is not the consent of the Secretary of the Interior necessary in all of these matters?

Mr. GORE. There is a method prescribed with reference to Indians who are not citizens of the United States. I have forgotten the section of the Revised Statutes which prescribes it. There is no law upon this point, however, and the very uncertainty of it, raised by the Senator's question, I think renders important this amendment.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Of course the Senator understands perfectly that the amendment which he proposes would make it absolutely impossible for any Indian to enter into any contract of this sort. The Senator's amendment is a prohibition of the contract, I think; is it not?

Mr. GORE. I will say that this is a particular kind of contract, a contract on the part of Indians relating to undistributed tribal funds. It struck me that this provision is vague and uncertain, and that neither the Secretary of the Interior nor anybody else would have express authority to speak for the United States.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. I simply wanted to get the purpose of the amendment. I understand that the effect of the amendment, if not its purpose, would be to render impossible any contract of this sort, because certainly Congress is not going to undertake the business of approving contracts between individuals.

Mr. GORE. I take it that it might prescribe some method for the approval of these contracts. The Senator will see very clearly that neither the Secretary of the Interior nor anybody else would be able to give the consent of the United States without some authority being conferred upon him to give that consent, and I do not want to leave the matter in that uncertain state.

Mr. STERLING. Mr. President, it seems to me this is a very important matter. The amendment is very sweeping in its provisions, and I think time has hardly been had for sufficient consideration. I should like to ask if this amendment can not go over until to-morrow? I can see wherein an amendment like this might do great injustice to the Indians themselves in certain cases; and it is on that account, and not in the interest of attorneys, that I suggest that there may be some desire to modify the amendment.

Mr. FALL. Mr. President, the effect of this amendment, as it stands now, would be to tie the hands of the Indians. Of course, whether that is desirable or not is for the Congress of the United States to decide. My personal opinion is that it is not desirable to tie their hands so that they are in a position where, except for the assistance of attorneys appointed by the Department of the Interior, they are absolutely precluded from resisting attempts to rob them. While this matter was up for consideration in the Senate committee I suggested that at least exceptions should be made with reference to the character of contracts which they should be restricted from entering into.

Take, for instance, the Chippewa Indians: The Senator from Oregon [Mr. LANE] has objected to the provision in this bill with reference to the method by which the roll of the Chippewa Indians is to be made up. The Chippewa Indians have quite a valuable property. Of course, that property belongs to those who are justly entitled to be on the roll. There is a proposition in this bill to make a new roll by authority of a commission provided for in the bill. No one knows whether the Chippewa Indians want any such commission, or whether they want any roll; but the proposition is now that this commission shall make the roll. If the Chippewa Indians object to it—and from what I have seen of them, some of them are certainly intelligent enough to know what they want—they are absolutely precluded from employing an attorney to resist placing upon the roll one or ten thousand fraudulent Chippewa Indians to share in the tribal property. The same thing is true with reference to the reopening of the Chickasaw, Choctaw, Cherokee, Creek, or Seminole rolls in the Indian country to-day in the State of Oklahoma.

There has been a fight heretofore made to place upon the rolls men who, it was claimed, were not entitled to enrollment. There has been legislation, and under that legislation a fight has been made to purge those rolls. Several years, I believe, were taken up in this fight, which was made by a man who has been denounced as a notorious lobbyist, and whom I am not here to defend, although I do not believe he should be accused of all the crimes in the calendar, at any rate. I refer to Mr. MacMurray, about whom we have heard a good deal of talk. He apparently appeared for these Indians and resisted the attempt to put certain Indians upon the roll, and purged the roll of quite a large number of persons.

The testimony given before the committee showed that if the Indians claiming the right of enrollment had secured such right and had been placed upon the roll, it would have cost the Five Civilized Tribes from twenty-one to forty million dollars. It showed that by their ability so to enter into a contract, and thereby to prevent the enrollment of these parties whom the courts, I believe, or at least the commission, decided were not entitled to enrollment, by their ability to contract with attorneys, who received a very large fee for their services—I think $750,000—they saved to the Five Civilized Tribes from twenty-one to forty million dollars.

It developed in the hearings before the committee that there are 7,000 people claiming the right to allotment; that it is proposed now to go into a new enrollment; and that there are attorneys here seeking to secure the enrollment of these people. I think the department has stated that there are some 50 Indians who are entitled to go on the rolls, but that there are 7,000 who, under one claim or another—whether just or unjust I have no way of knowing, and I do not pretend to pass upon—allege that they are entitled to go upon these rolls.

Each allotment, as I understand, is worth to-day approximately $8,000. Seven thousand Indians, then, would take $8,000 each from the Indians who are now upon the rolls. By this amendment it is proposed to tie their hands absolutely, and to say that they shall not employ attorneys to defend their rights, but that the Indians who are not on this roll may pledge their property and employ attorneys to take the property away from the Five Civilized Tribes. You place them absolutely at the mercy of any attorney who takes a contingent fee.

I object to it, Mr. President. It is nothing to me. It is for the Congress of the United States to say whether they will be influenced by a cry that some Indian attorney—a lobbyist—is trying to make a fee out of these Indians by defending them. The sworn testimony in this case of the attorney of the Choctaw Nation is that he is receiving $5,000. He is appointed not by and with the consent of the tribe, but he is appointed by the Secretary of the Interior to represent the United States. His own testimony asserts that it was absolutely impossible for him to conduct such litigation as was conducted by MacMurray and these lobbyists through which $40,000,000 was saved to these Indians.

Now, this is a tax against them to the extent of $50,000,000, or something like that, and their hands are tied absolutely by the provision which the committee has placed in the bill. They are absolutely tied and they must stand defenseless under these Indian attorneys representing 7,000 Indians, who have been declared not entitled to enrollment. They have been declared by the court or by the commission appointed by Congress not to be entitled to enrollment. They must stand absolutely silent. They can not even lift their voice except through the puny tones of a little attorney appointed by the Secretary of the Interior, who himself confesses he can not properly defend them. These Indians stand silent and their pockets are robbed.

Mr. President, very recently a suit was decided by the Supreme Court of the United States defended by an Indian lobbyist, Mr. MacMurray, under a contract with the Choctaw and Chickasaw Indians. The result of that suit was a saving to those Indians upon the evidence shown of $21,000,000, costing the different allottees something like $10 apiece, or a total, I believe, of about $180,000. The Supreme Court decided contrary to the determination or the advice of the Indian Department, which refused to allow the suit to be tried to defend these Indians from the taxation which was sought to be imposed upon them regardless of their treaty. The department refused to allow the department's attorney or any of its officials or the attorney appointed for these Indians to defend their suit and to represent these Indians in that taxation case coming up from Oklahoma. They were compelled to make private contracts, which they did make. The Supreme Court of the United States claimed that, irrespective of what the department had said, they had a good defense under the treaty, and they were saved something like $21,000,000, because, it is claimed, had the tax been levied on the property of the minor children the property must necessarily have been sold for taxes and gone to the State, and gone from the Indians and their heirs forever.

In this bill one of the Senators from Oklahoma has asked and has obtained an appropriation of $300,000 for the public schools of the State of Oklahoma in the eastern district, because it is said the fact that the State can not tax those Indian lands under the decision of the Supreme Court of the United States has therefore reduced the ability to conduct the public schools, and the United States to-day, through its Congress, is now appropriating $300,000 in this bill for the support of those schools.

Mr. President, I know exactly what is often said when a man in public life undertakes to make what he conceives to be a true statement about matters of this kind. It is said that he is influenced by some lobbyist. I think that I stand a little above that, but I do not fear any such criticism. No such criticism will close my mouth when I can see that injustice is being done people who are just as civilized, just as able, and just as competent citizens as any who live in the United States. Those Indians are electing United States Senators, and have two here. They are electing Congressmen, and have six in the other Hall. They are electing governors. Their governor to-day is a blood Indian. They are electing legislators who are blood Indians and Indians by marriage. They are assisting in electing the President of the United States. They cast a vote, I believe, for the present President of the United States. Are they not capable citizens, capable of attending to their own business?

Before the white men insisted that the Five Civilized Tribes should go into statehood and should have their property allotted there were no more peaceable or prosperous people on the face of this globe than those Five Civilized Tribes. Under our beneficent administration of their affairs, in throwing restrictions around them and treating them as though somebody robbed them, those Indians to-day are not worth individually nor collectively one-half what they were before. Their property was allotted and divided over their opposition.

Mr. President, taking these two suits—one for enrollment and the other resisting an illegal attempt at taxation—and then tying the hands of these Indians so that under some other guise this land may be taxed illegally, and no attorney can be employed by them or paid for out of their tribal funds to resist such an attempt, it seems to me that thus to administer the property of the Indians who think that somebody robs them is a very small business, to say the least of it, for honorable Senators to engage in, simply because some one may say that the man who has been defending them will make contracts payable out of the tribal funds and may be a lobbyist. I suppose there are a great many Indians in the Indian Territory who, if they say their prayers, thank God on their bended knees that they were able to avail themselves of the services of a lobbyist.

In the committee I offered an amendment which I thought would properly protect the Indians against a practice of this kind and enable them at least to protect themselves. It was rejected by a divided vote—4 to 4, as the record in this case will show—only 8 members of the committee being present and voting. One of the arguments used there was that unconscionable fees were charged. It was shown, as a matter of fact, that while under the MacMurray contracts, for instance, in defending the Indians they collected something like 9 per cent, I believe, for the defense, contracts are now outstanding for the enrollment of 4,000 Indians at from 25 to 40 per cent of the property which is gained. Those claiming to be Indians on the outside are not restricted. Only those who are already enrolled as Indians are restricted.

It is useless to undertake to wrangle about the word "Indian" and what it means. We all know what this means. We know exactly what the object of this is.

My attention was called to the argument used that enormous fees had been made by the attorneys representing the Indians. That absolutely is true. It is entirely true. This amendment as it appears here in the bill does not restrict the collection of such fees. Of course, if the Secretary of the Interior or the Congress of the United States did not like the particular attorney who was to have the contract, he would not be appointed under this provision. If he was a friendly gentleman, I suppose his fees might be placed at a certain figure, and they might restrict his fees.

I offered an amendment, as I said, which I thought was fair so that it would reach the proposition and at the same time protect the Indians against enormous fees. I propose to read the amendment, Mr. President, and offer it pro forma. I have no interest in the matter of any kind or character. If the Senate chooses to reject it or to adopt any other amendment it is absolutely immaterial to me; but I conceived it to be my duty, irrespective of any criticism, to have said what I have said and to do what I propose to do now in offering this amendment, which I will read:

Provided, That this prohibition shall not apply to contracts for the recovery of money or property in a suit or claim against and resisted by the United States or to a claim by or against any State or municipality, nor to a claim for services in resisting the enrollment of any Indian as a member of any tribe, which enrollment is resisted by such tribe or a majority thereof; but no claim for any such service shall be paid until same has been approved as to amount by the tribunal, court, or department finally passing upon the claim or enrollment, without respect to the agreed fee or commission mentioned in any such contract.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. There is already an amendment to the committee amendment pending. The question is on the amendment submitted by the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. GORE] to the amendment of the committee.

Mr. GALLINGER and Mr. ASHURST. Let it be read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be read.

The SECRETARY. At the end of the committee amendment, page 57, line 24, after the word "given," and before the period, insert the words:

in such manner as Congress may prescribe.

Mr. GORE. It has been suggested by my colleague that it might obviate some objection if the amendment were modified to read:

in such manner as Congress may have prescribed or may hereafter prescribe.

I thought probably that would meet the objection of the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. STERLING].

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment suggested by the Senator from Oklahoma to the amendment of the committee.

Mr. STONE. Mr. President, as a matter of information, I should like to ask either of the Senators from Oklahoma what provision has been made by Congress. The modification reads "may have prescribed or may hereafter prescribe."

Mr. GORE. I will say that this amendment is not limited to Oklahoma. My colleague suggested to me that probably that modification would meet the objection which the Senator from South Dakota had in mind. When there have been specific directions heretofore given by Congress this amendment would not interfere.

Mr. STONE. I am asking the Senator if he knows that any have been prescribed.

Mr. GORE. I do not know, I will say to the Senator. Probably my colleague might be able to give the information.

Mr. STONE. Mr. President, if we are going to make an amendment along this line, I ask the question would it not be better now to prescribe the terms upon which the contracts may be made, or that they shall be made with the approval of some particular authority, instead of leaving it to the action of some future Congress and have to go all over this again? I ask the Senator from Oklahoma if it would not be satisfactory to him if there could be inserted at the end of the amendment "if the consent of the United States has been previously given by the action of the Secretary of the Interior"?

Mr. GORE. That might be all right in some cases and in some cases I do not think it would be satisfactory. It would change the existing law in some particulars where I do not think it ought to be changed. For that reason I do not think I can accept the amendment.

Mr. STONE. Mr. President, I want to say just a word on this question. I do not care anything whatever about the personal aspects of this case, and by personal aspects I mean the personal things referred to by the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. FALL]. It does seem to me, however, that it would hardly be right to tie up the right of contract by restrictions which would make the exercise of that right impossible or impracticable. The fact is there are large numbers of Indians, not only in Oklahoma but elsewhere in different parts of the country, who are as intelligent men as you will find, who average up well with the citizenry of the country. It seems to me it would hardly be right to put a restraint upon those men to make contracts.

When this matter was before the committee it was discussed at some considerable length. I must say that I heard comparatively little of the discussion, being at that time engaged more especially with work connected with one of the subcommittees of the Committee on Finance in an adjoining room, but I heard the discussion by the members of the committee, not by those who came before the committee. As a result a subcommittee of three able, experienced men on that committee was appointed to draft a provision that might cover the ground and meet the situation. That subcommittee made a report, and that report was considered and amended and the provision as it appears in the text of the bill was agreed upon and incorporated. It was not thought by the committee—and I am speaking now for the committee—that it was wise or prudent or just to carry the restriction upon the right of contract so far with respect to intelligent American citizens, men who are exercising all the rights of American citizenship, who are holding important places of public trust in their States and in the Nation, as to deprive or in a large measure unnecessarily to restrict the constitutional right of such people to make contracts. I believe the committee was right in its conclusion.

Now, to adopt this amendment and say that the right to make a contract by one of the United States Senators sitting here in this body from Oklahoma and another equally well qualified man in the exercise of all his rights of citizenship occupying a place in the House of Representatives, that the governor of a State and men of this kind can not make a contract now, but must wait upon the pleasure of Congress at some future day, does not meet my approval and did not meet the approval of your committee.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment submitted by the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. GORE] to the committee amendment.

The amendment to the amendment was rejected.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question now recurs on the committee amendment.

Mr. FALL. I reoffer to the committee amendment the amendment which I read and which is on the Secretary's desk.

Mr. STONE. Let the amendment be stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is the amendment submitted by the Senator from New Mexico an amendment to the committee amendment?

Mr. FALL. It is an amendment to the committee amendment. It is simply a proviso. I ask that it be stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will state the amendment to the amendment.

The SECRETARY. In the committee amendment, on page 57, line 24, after the word "given," before the period, it is proposed to insert a colon and the following proviso:

Provided, That this prohibition shall not apply to contracts for the recovery of money or property in a suit or claim against and resisted by the United States or to a claim by or against any State or municipality, nor to claim for services in resisting enrollment of any Indian as a member of any tribe, which enrollment is resisted by such tribe or a majority thereof; but no claim for any such service shall be paid until same has been approved as to amount by the tribunal, court, or department finally passing upon the claim or enrollment without respect to the agreed fee or commission mentioned in any such contract.

Mr. STONE. Mr. President, I feel at liberty to say that this amendment was presented to the committee as it is presented here and was there disagreed to.

Mr. FALL. I made the statement, Mr. President, in offering the amendment that it was disagreed to by a tie vote in committee, there being eight members of the committee present, four voting aye and four voting no. I reserved the right at that time to offer it here, as the record will show.

Mr. STONE. That is correct. The Senator did reserve the right to offer the amendment in the Senate.

Mr. ASHURST. On that I ask for the yeas and nays.

Mr. STONE. What for?

Mr. ASHURST. Then I will withdraw the call for the yeas and nays.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator insist on the yeas and nays?

Mr. ASHURST. I thought we would thereby save time.

Mr. GORE. Mr. President, I do not know whether this amendment is subject to a point of order or not, but in view of the pending provisions in the bill, I will raise the point of order and get a ruling of the Chair.

Mr. FALL. Then I will raise the point of order that the amendment itself reported by the committee is new legislation.

Mr. GORE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Oklahoma.

Mr. GORE. I will wait until the Chair rules on the point. I have been seriously considering making the very point which the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. FALL] makes in reference to the entire amendment, but I have not concluded to go so far as that.

Mr. FALL. I am perfectly willing that these contracts be restricted in every way; but I do protest against tying the hands of some people while other people are filching their profits.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, I am not content to have that statement made by the honorable Senator from New Mexico [Mr. FALL] go into the RECORD without some challenge. I do not feel at liberty to advert to what took place before the committee, but I speak the language of truth and soberness when I say that some ex-Senators and some lobbyists have been seeking for years to have certain contracts approved which, in effect, would mulct the Indians out of large sums of money. I have here upon my desk a statement of the moneys paid out of Indian funds to one firm of attorneys aggregating nearly $1,000,000. It was the purpose of the committee "not to tie the hands of the Indian and rob him," but to prevent the Indian from being further plundered. It was the purpose of the committee to provide that certain contracts—which would net to this firm of lawyers $3,500,000 for no services—should not be ratified.

Mr. President, I shall not take up the time of the Senate further than to say that I wish most emphatically to record myself as being one Senator who feels it his duty and responsibility to see that the hungry and larcenous fingers of grafters and seekers of exorbitant fees shall not be extended into the trust funds belonging to the Indians.

This fund of $35,000,000 belongs to these Indians in question. No one questions the right of the Indians to these funds. Are we doing our duty to the Government and to these Indians, therefore, when we permit, without protest, legislation which might allow lobbyists or other persons to take a fee of $3,500,000 for work that he or they could not perform?

Mr. FALL. Will the Senator yield to me a moment?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Arizona yield to the Senator from New Mexico?

Mr. ASHURST. Certainly.

Mr. FALL. How does the Senator arrive at the conclusion that there is a fee claimed of $3,500,000? I have seen that statement in the newspapers and heard it talked about, but how does the Senator arrive at the conclusion that there is a fee claimed by anyone of $3,500,000 or of any other amount against this $35,000,000?

Mr. ASHURST. I will be entirely within the record when I say that since the subject has been agitated and since this firm of attorneys have reached the conclusion that it can not obtain this fee they have very politely declined to accept it. Seeing that their efforts were blocked they have filed a disclaimer to it. I have some doubt as to the validity and legality of the disclaimer or waiver; that is to say, I am not satisfied that the matter should rest upon the disclaimer wholly, but Congress should make an affirmative expression against the payment of these fees where attorneys pretend to perform a service when in truth the Government has absolutely and expressly recognized the fact that it holds the money, land, or other property in trust for the Indian.

Mr. FALL. I will ask the Senator if it is not a fact that under existing law this firm of attorneys could not get 10 cents out of these tribal funds without the assent of Congress affirmatively given? The Senator knows that a dollar can not be paid from this fund without an appropriation by Congress. Therefore, if these gentlemen had not relinquished any claim, it must have required an act of the Congress to enable them to get 10 cents or any other amount. Those are the facts, I believe.

Mr. ASHURST. That is the Senator's opinion concerning the facts.

Mr. FALL. Yes, it is.

Mr. ASHURST. But every Senator is charged with the responsibility and duty of putting his own construction upon a state of facts.

Mr. FALL. Certainly.

Mr. ASHURST. I have here a statement from the former Secretary of the Interior which shows that the firm of attorneys which attempted to secure this $3,500,000, in 1901 was paid $750,000 by both the Choctaw and the Chickasaw Nations.

Mr. FALL. For what was that?

Mr. ASHURST. That was paid in connection with the so-called citizenship contract of January 7, 1901.

Mr. FALL. For resisting enrollment, was it not?

Mr. ASHURST. The fee amounted to $750,000. There was paid about the same time, or possibly a little subsequent to that time, by the Choctaw Nation to this firm $79,000, and at another time there was paid to this firm by the Chickasaw Nation $102,916, making a total of moneys paid to this one firm of $932,848. It has not been made apparent to the committee, or to this member of the committee at least, what service these lobbyists will render for this $3,500,000. That was the reason I asked for the yeas and nays.

Mr. FALL. The Senator did not understand me as objecting to the yeas and nays, did he?

Mr. ASHURST. No; I did not.

Mr. FALL. I would welcome a roll call.

Mr. ASHURST. I have not said it was improper for the Senator to object to a roll call.

Mr. FALL. But his Senator did not object.

Mr. STONE. I objected to save time.

Mr. ASHURST. I owe a vast deal to the distinguished chairman of the committee [Mr. STONE] for his courtesies and his kindness toward me, and much as I should like to save time—as time is a valuable asset of mankind—we are charged here with the duty, and should be charged with the duty, of trying to save money for the Indians.

Mr. STONE. That is all right.

Mr. ASHURST. Indeed it is. I shall not at this time advert at length to the findings of the House committee in 1910 on this subject. The majority members found that the influence of this firm was improper and should be characterized, so the majority say, by a stronger term than "undue influence," while the minority member, Mr. STEPHENS, now a majority member and now chairman of the House Committee on Indian Affairs, found that improper means had been used or attempted to be used seeking to validate certain contracts and obtain large fees out of Indian funds.

I believe this committee amendment to be wholesome legislation. It is proper to provide by law that tribal property not belonging to the individual but to the tribe and unallotted lands in the hands of the United States Government, as trustee, should be delivered to and reach the Indians undiminished in quantity. Less than that we should not do.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. GORE] makes the point of order against the amendment submitted by the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. FALL] to the amendment of the committee on the ground that it is general legislation on an appropriation bill.

Mr. GORE. Mr. President, I wish to say merely a word or two. Waiving entirely the personal features of the discussion, I am perfectly willing that every Indian tribe and that every individual Indian should have ample and able attorneys when they are engaged in a lawsuit, when they have a claim to establish, a right to vindicate, or a wrong to redress. I may say that there are in Oklahoma five tribes, known as the Five Civilized Tribes. The Cherokee Tribe has a very able attorney at present, who receives $5,000 per annum; the Creek Tribe also has a regularly employed attorney, who receives $5,000 per year, and, I think, for the current year is receiving $10,000 in addition for some special service; the Chickasaw Tribe of Indians has an attorney who receives $5,000 a year; and the Choctaw Tribe has four attorneys, one of them receiving $5,000 and the other three receiving, jointly, $5,000. For all ordinary purposes these regularly employed attorneys would seem to be quite sufficient to protect the rights of the Five Civilized Tribes.

The amendment now pending is the outgrowth of an amendment I offered during the recent regular session; and I may say that the amendment was prepared in the Department of the Interior. When offered it was limited to the Creek Tribe of Indians. The particular circumstance which gave rise to the amendment was this: The Creek Indians have now $3,000,000 in the Treasury of the United States; it is their money; there is no question, there is no challenge to their title. Attorneys were circulating contracts in Oklahoma which would entitle them to 10 per cent on the $3,000,000 to recover it from the Government and to secure its distribution among the Indians.

The money belongs to the Creeks. It was the opinion of the Department, and it was my own opinion, that no attorney or firm of attorneys should be paid $300,000 to prevail upon Congress to distribute this money amongst the Indians who are legally and unquestionably entitled to receive it. On the floor of the Senate I submitted a motion to extend the amendment to the Five Civilized Tribes instead of limiting it to the Creek Tribe alone. That is the history of this amendment as originally presented by me in the Senate.

I will say, Mr. President, that the Senator from New Mexico was entirely correct in the statement that what is known as the tax litigation saved the Indians perhaps many million dollars. Under the treaties their allotments were exempt from taxation. Congress passed a law subsequent to statehood undertaking to subject those allotments to taxation. The Indians contested the validity of that law, won their suit, and escaped taxation for some 21 years. That undoubtedly saved them a vast amount of money. They had a right to bring that suit; they had a right to have attorneys, if they saw fit, in that sort of litigation.

I may say, however, Mr. President, that I understand individual Indians of the Chickasaw and Choctaw country made contracts with private attorneys aggregating $80,000 to resist this attempted taxation, whereas, as a matter of fact, suit was brought by the regularly employed attorneys of the Choctaw Nation, suit was brought by the regularly retained attorney of the Cherokee Nation, as I am informed, and suit was brought by the regularly employed attorneys of the Creek Nation. The first suit, which went to the Supreme Court of the United States, was a Choctaw suit in which the regularly employed attorneys of the nation represented the nation; and I have no doubt that the regularly retained attorneys of those nations would—they did in the case of three nations and would have done so in the Choctaw Nation—have protected the rights of the Indians and would have shielded them against unwarranted taxation if no contracts had been entered into with private attorneys. I make no doubt of that; and yet there can be no complaint if the Indians saw fit to engage attorneys in that sort of litigation.

Mr. President, the pending amendment is limited to contracts on the part of Indians with attorneys, such contracts relating to undistributed tribal funds. What I had in my mind was this: The Government of the United States is under treaty obligation to wind up the affairs of those tribes and to dispose of their tribal property. The treaty stipulates that it shall be done without expense to the Indians. My own feeling has been that the Government ought to carry out that treaty in good faith. It ought not to oblige, and it ought not to permit, those Indians to make contracts with reference to that tribal estate whereby anybody will receive a large fee or compensation for doing what it is the duty of the Government to do, and what I hope and believe the Government at no distant day will do in good faith.

That is what I had in my mind in connection with this amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. GORE] makes the point of order against the amendment submitted by the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. FALL] to the amendment of the committee on the ground that it is general legislation. The amendment submitted by the Senator from New Mexico is palpably a substitute for that part of the bill beginning with line 21, on page 56, and ending with line 19, on page 57. That was the language which came to the Senate from the House. This being an amendment to a House provision, the Chair is impressed with the view that the point of order does not lie. It is therefore overruled.

The question now is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. FALL] to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment to the amendment was rejected.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question now is upon agreeing to the committee amendment.

Mr. STERLING. I offer an amendment to the committee amendment.

Mr. STONE. Let the amendment be read, Mr. President.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment to the amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. At the end of line 24, page 57, before the period, it is proposed to insert the following proviso:

Provided, The foregoing provision shall not apply to contracts made with or services rendered any Indian who is a citizen of the United States, has severed his tribal relations, and has been or is the owner in fee of lands under grant from the Government of the United States.

Mr. STERLING obtained the floor.

Mr. STONE. Mr. President, just a moment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from South Dakota has the floor.

Mr. STONE. I was merely going to make a request.

Mr. STERLING. I yield to the Senator from Missouri.

Mr. STONE. It is getting late, and clearly we shall not be able to conclude the bill to-night. I thought the Senator from South Dakota desired to have this matter go over, in order that he might look into it.

Mr. STERLING. That will be perfectly satisfactory to me.

Mr. STONE. If there are other amendments to be proposed to this particular provision, I should be glad to have them offered now, so that they may appear in the RECORD to-morrow morning.

Mr. OWEN. I wish to offer an amendment, in order that it may go in the RECORD of to-day's proceedings.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The pending amendment, then, will be the amendment submitted by the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. STERLING] to the amendment of the committee.

Mr. GALLINGER. It will be printed in the RECORD?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It will be printed, and pending.

Mr. STONE. It will be the pending amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Further amendments may be offered for printing.

Mr. OWEN. I submit an amendment to the amendment for printing, and give notice that I shall offer it at the proper time. It is as follows:

On page 57, at the end of line 24, strike out the period and add a comma and the following:

"And no contract made with any person claiming citizenship in any Indian tribe, where such contract affects the tribal funds or property in the hands of the United States, or the fee is to be paid from the claimant's portion of tribal funds or property, shall be valid, nor shall any payment for services rendered in relation thereto be made, unless the consent of the United States has previously been given."

Mr. MYERS. I offer an amendment to the bill, for the purpose of having it printed, and ask that it may lie on the table until reached.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. In the absence of objection, the amendment will be printed and lie on the table.

HOUR OF MEETING TO-MORROW.

Mr. KERN. I move that when the Senate adjourns to-day it adjourn to meet to-morrow afternoon at 2 o'clock.

The motion was agreed to.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. BACON. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to, and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After 50 minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened, and (at 6 o'clock and 35 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Wednesday, June 18, 1913, at 2 o'clock p. m.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

TUESDAY, June 17, 1913.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Father in heaven, impress us more profoundly with the sinfulness of sin and inspire within us an admiration and fervent desire for righteousness. Sin impoverishes the soul, while righteousness enriches it. Sin weakens the moral fiber, while righteousness strengthens it. Sin alienates, while righteousness brings us in communion with Thee. Sin is a reproach to the individual, a reproach to any people. Righteousness exalteth the individual and exalteth the Nation. The moral and religious status of the Nation is measured by the moral and religious status of the individuals who compose it. Hence we pray most fervently that sin may diminish and righteousness increase, that as individuals and as a Nation we may reflect Thy glory in thought, word, and deed, and have the respect and admiration of all the people of all the world; and all the praise we will ascribe to Thee, our God and our Father. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of Friday, June 13, 1913, was read and approved.

SWEARING IN OF A MEMBER.

Mr. HENRY GEORGE, Jr., appeared at the bar of the House and took the oath of office.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. FRANCIS, for two weeks, on account of important business.

To Mr. STEVENS of Minnesota, for three weeks, on account of important business.

To Mr. GORDON, for several days, on account of important business.

CHANGE OF REFERENCE.

By unanimous consent, reference of the bill (H. R. 4480) to reimburse certain fire insurance companies the amounts paid by them for property destroyed by fire in suppressing the bubonic plague in the Territory of Hawaii in the years 1899 and 1900 was changed from the Committee on Appropriations to the Committee on Claims.

LEAVE TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE.

Mr. HENRY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that on Friday next immediately after the reading of the Journal the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. NEELEY] be allowed to address the House for one hour.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas asks unanimous consent that on Friday next, immediately after the reading of the Journal, the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. NEELEY] be permitted to address the House for one hour. Is there objection?

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object—of course I have no desire to interfere with the gentleman speaking—but on that day, immediately after the reading of the Journal, there may be some very important matters to be considered by the House.

Mr. HENRY. That is, not to interfere with the business of the House.

Mr. SHERLEY. If that is understood, I have no objection.

The SPEAKER. The request, then, is amended so that it may not interfere with the business of the House. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

SIZE, ACCOMMODATIONS, AND COST OF PUBLIC BUILDINGS.

The SPEAKER. Under public act No. 432, approved March 4, 1913, to increase the limit of cost of certain public buildings, to authorize the enlargement, extension, remodeling, or improvement of certain public buildings, to authorize the erection and completion of public buildings, to authorize the purchase of sites for public buildings, and for other purposes, the appointment of a commission is provided for in section 36 of that act, as follows:

SEC. 36. That a commission composed of the Secretary of the Treasury, the Postmaster General, the Attorney General, two members of the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds of the Senate to be appointed by the President of the Senate, and two members of the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds of the House of Representatives to be appointed by the Speaker of the House, shall, with the aid of the Supervising Architect of the Treasury, present to Congress a connected scheme, involving annual appropriations, for the construction and completion of public buildings heretofore authorized within a reasonable time, and shall frame a standard or standards by which the size and cost of public buildings shall, as far as practicable, be determined, and shall report as to the adaptability in size, accommodations, and cost of buildings hitherto authorized to the requirements of the communities in which they are to be located, and also whether the existing appropriations should be increased or diminished to meet such requirements, and that the sum of $5,000 is hereby appropriated for the expenses of such inquiry.

The Speaker appoints as members of that commission the gentleman from Florida [Mr. CLARK] and the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. AUSTIN].

MONEY TRUST INVESTIGATION.

Mr. HENRY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the resolution which I send to the Clerk's desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That there be printed 100,000 additional copies of the report of the Pujo Money Trust committee on House resolutions Nos. 429 and 504, 75,000 copies for the use of the House of Representatives, to be apportioned as follows: Five thousand to the Committee on Banking and Currency and 70,000 to the House document room; and 25,000 for the use of the Senate.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Mr. Speaker, I understand that this is a request for unanimous consent?

The SPEAKER. It is.

Mr. HENRY. It is. I would like to make a statement respecting it.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I desire to make the point of order that the resolution is not in order, being a joint resolution, and it can only be brought up through the basket. If the Speaker desires to hear me upon that I would be very glad to address myself to the Chair.

Mr. HENRY. Mr. Speaker, I will ask the gentleman to hear me for a few minutes.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Very well, Mr. Speaker. I will reserve the right to object, and withhold the point of order for the present.

Mr. HENRY. Mr. Speaker, I am asking unanimous consent for the present consideration of this resolution, and the House can give unanimous consent to suspend all rules and to consider it. I wish to say this is a very important and urgent matter. There are numerous requests coming from all parts of the country for this report. My office is so flooded with requests that I can not supply one-fiftieth part of the demand. I have a letter here to-day from Collier's Weekly to this effect:

COLLIER'S WEEKLY,
901 Munsey Building, Washington, D. C., June 16, 1913.

Hon. ROBERT L. HENRY,
House Office Building, City.

MY DEAR CONGRESSMAN: Of the letters which come into this office making various requests for information and documents, we notice that there is a very great demand for the reports of the Pujo committee. I am convinced that it would serve a useful public purpose and be a very popular thing if more copies of that report were printed and made available for distribution. It is a very educational thing and deals with a subject which will be widely discussed during the coming months.

Of course we have no interest in this whatever, and I am writing this letter wholly as a suggestion which may interest you and be serviceable to the public. In my own judgment it would be very well worth while to have more copies printed and have it made known that they are available for distribution.

Cordially, yours, MARK SULLIVAN.

Mr. Speaker, I am asking for only 100,000 copies of that report now. It is my purpose to follow it hereafter if the demand increases, which I am sure will occur, and ultimately it will be necessary to print additional copies of this report. It is the fruit of months of investigation, and more than $50,000 were expended to make the investigation. It is highly important that we give to the country the result of that investigation.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. HENRY. I will.

Mr. MONDELL. How large a document is that report?

Mr. HENRY. The document is about 260 pages, including the maps, charts, and so forth, but the report proper is about 160 pages. I do not ask for a reprint of the hearings; it is only the report signed by the members of the majority and the minority of the committee.

Mr. MONDELL. Does the gentleman know how much 100,000 copies of the report will cost?

Mr. HENRY. I do, and will give the gentleman the figures now. I have had the Public Printer make an estimate.

The estimate is as follows:

OFFICE OF THE PUBLIC PRINTER,
Washington, June 16, 1913.

Hon. ROBERT L. HENRY,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR MR. HENRY: Pursuant to your verbal request for estimates on House Report No. 1593, Sixty-second Congress, third session, "Report of the committee appointed pursuant to House resolution 429," etc., I have the honor to quote as follows:

25,000 copies	$3,238.25
50,000 copies	6,195.75
75,000 copies	9,153.25
100,000 copies	11,568.25
150,000 copies	17,128.75
200,000 copies	22,689.25
250,000 copies	28,249.75
300,000 copies	33,810.25
350,000 copies	39,370.75
400,000 copies	44,931.25
450,000 copies	50,491.75
500,000 copies	56,052.25

Respectfully,

SAM'L B. DONNELLY,
Public Printer.

Now, the demand for this document has been so great that the counsel for the Money Trust investigating committee spent $20,000 out of his own pocket in order to have it reprinted and circulated.

Mr. MONDELL. How many reports were originally printed or have been printed up to this time?

Mr. HENRY. I have not made that calculation because I do not know. All I know is that there is a demand coming to the document room and to Members of the House and to my office daily.

Mr. MONDELL. And the supply is entirely exhausted, is it?

Mr. HENRY. Entirely exhausted; only 10,500 copies have been printed, the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. NEELEY], who was a member of the investigating committee, informs me.

Mr. MONDELL. Well, now, is it the opinion of the gentleman, other than the suggestion from the editor of Collier's Weekly, that there will be a demand from now on for ten times as many copies as have already been printed?

Mr. HENRY. I will say to the gentleman I have in my office a demand for 25,000 copies now, and they are coming in every day, and I am sure other Members have demands.

Mr. MONDELL. Twenty-five thousand people have written the gentleman asking for copies of this report?

Mr. HENRY. Twenty-five thousand including suggestions to send copies to the following names, and so forth. That many can be supplied, and I am sure it will amount to more than that; but I wish the Members to understand that in my judgment this report, after having spent all this money on it, should be reprinted at the cost estimated by the Public Printer.

Mr. BORLAND. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Texas yield to the gentleman from Missouri?

Mr. HENRY. I do.

Mr. BORLAND. I agree very thoroughly with the gentleman about the demand for this document, but I would like to ask the gentleman why he has not proposed to put it in the document room rather than in the folding room?

Mr. HENRY. I have no objection to that.

Mr. BORLAND. I think it is absolutely necessary that there should be an equal distribution.

Mr. HENRY. I think the gentleman is correct about that.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Texas yield to the gentleman from Wyoming?

Mr. HENRY. I will modify my request, Mr. Speaker, in that particular, so as to provide that the copies shall be placed in the folding room.

Mr. MONDELL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HENRY. Yes.

Mr. MONDELL. Is it not usual, in the case of a request for a publication so large as this, that the matter should be first referred to the Committee on Printing?

Mr. HENRY. I do not think so, when the House has full information on the subject.

Mr. MONDELL. I have no information on the subject, and I have not had a single request for the document.

Mr. HENRY. If the gentleman wishes, I will modify my request to this extent, to ask to-day for 50,000 copies, and then when that edition is exhausted, come on another day and ask for more.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield for a question or two?

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. HENRY. Yes; certainly.

Mr. SHERLEY. These documents are purchasable, are they not?

Mr. HENRY. From the Public Printer; yes.

Mr. SHERLEY. Is it not true that there is an organized movement—and I do not use that word in an offensive way—to distribute these documents around? For instance, there are a series of articles purporting to be written by Mr. Lawson, in which there is an agitation for these documents, and now the gentleman from Texas [Mr. HENRY] presents a letter from Collier's. I have always believed that the mistake we made was in the indiscriminate free distribution of documents. I believe that men who really desire documents of this kind would not mind the small expense incident to the purchase of a copy, and I have heard right through this discussion half a dozen gentlemen around me say what has been their experience, which has been mine, of a very limited demand. I have had about five requests for this document, which I have supplied, and I have heard at least five gentlemen since the matter started say that that had been about their experience.

Of course the gentleman from Texas, through his connection with the matter, has had a special demand made upon him, and he has made a very surprising statement, that the counsel of the commission had expended $20,000 in supplying copies of the report. As I recall, his fee was only $25,000.

Mr. HENRY. His fee was only $15,000.

Mr. SHERLEY. Then he is $5,000 to the bad?

Mr. HENRY. Yes; but on an important matter like this, why require the people interested to pay for such a report?

Mr. SHERLEY. As I understand the gentleman, it costs $11,000 to print an edition of 100,000 copies?

Mr. HENRY. Yes.

Mr. SHERLEY. Then the gentleman referred to has already distributed about 200,000 copies. I mean the counsel, Mr. Untermyer.

Mr. HENRY. Something like 175,000 copies.

Mr. SHERLEY. How many has the Government printed heretofore?

Mr. HENRY. We have had printed 10,000 and something. That is the reason I am complaining. Now, we could expend some money and give some circulation to this report.

Mr. SHERLEY. I think it should have proper circulation, but the gentleman knows how many reports are sent out and never read.

Mr. HENRY. I agree with the gentleman on that, and I would not want to have printed more copies than we need. Here is the report. It embraces 165 pages—the report proper. Then there are some maps and charts and figures, and two bills are suggested, and the whole thing together is 258 pages. That is the report proper, not the hearings. I think we ought to print a sufficient number to supply the demand.

Mr. SHERLEY. So do I, provided the demand is a legitimate demand. But I do not think we ought to print documents to supply an agitated demand, and, judging from what men about me are saying constantly in conversation, their experience concerning the demand is very different from that which the gentleman has had.

Mr. HENRY. Well, there is the letter from Collier's Weekly, a public-spirited journal of this country.

Mr. SHERLEY. I understand that. Collier's Weekly is a popular publication, and I am not criticizing it. This is a question of policy. They happen to like a particular report that coincides with some particular views which they entertain. Naturally they think it advisable to have these views largely disseminated. So does Everybody's, in its publication, and it is perfectly natural that they should feed the desire as long as it does not cost these publications anything to have the reports published. What I am suggesting to the gentleman is whether we ought not to take the other course and say that in publications of this kind we will make them available to the men who really desire to get them at a nominal cost. In England there are hardly any public documents distributed free, but here we waste annually millions of dollars in printing and distributing public documents without any apparent beneficial result.

Mr. HENRY. It is true we do expend a great deal of money in publishing documents and distributing them, but it seems to me we ought to get together on this important document.

Mr. SHERLEY. I think this is an important document, but it is like very many other important documents. It is important, but perhaps my absence from having a direct relation to the creation of it has prevented me from seeing the superlative importance in it that the gentleman from Texas sees. I think it is of value, but I do not think the country is suffering from an absence of copies of the Pujo report.

Mr. HENRY. That comes, perhaps, from the fact that the gentleman has not read the report.

Mr. SHERLEY. That might be, but it so happens that that is not the fact.

Mr. HENRY. Therefore I hope the gentleman will join with me in this request in order that we may have a sufficient number of copies.

Mr. MONDELL. Will the gentleman from Texas yield?

Mr. HENRY. I will.

Mr. MONDELL. I understand it is the view of the gentleman from Texas that there should be a further investigation along the lines of that adopted by the Pujo committee.

Mr. HENRY. I do not hesitate to state to the gentleman my position. It is that this report urgently recommends the continuation of the investigation into the Money Trust by this Congress, for the reason that the power of the former committee expired when the last Congress adjourned. There were fifty-odd witnesses standing around ready to testify; there were stacks of records and proof ready to be presented to the committee if there had been time then. In my judgment the present able and strong Banking and Currency Committee should be authorized to carry out the urgent recommendations of this report and be instructed to at once take up this question of investigating the Money Trust, concurrently with the investigation by the Committee on Banking and Currency of the currency proposition, and go to the bottom of the question if it takes July, August, September, October, November, and up to the first of December to get all the light that can be procured on the subject.

I do not know of a more important thing that could be done for this country to-day than to endow the new Banking and Currency Committee with power to carry out the recommendations of the old investigating committee.

Mr. MONDELL. Is it the gentleman's view that the dissemination of 100,000 copies of this report would furnish the people with sufficient information on which to base intelligent public opinion relative to currency legislation, or is it his view that the reading of this report would increase the importance and necessity of carrying on the work of the investigation by this committee before passing currency legislation? I want to get at the gentleman's position.

Mr. HENRY. I am glad to answer the gentleman's question. This committee exhausted the inquiry in so far as the clearing-house situation and stock exchange in New York was concerned. But in this report the committee announce that they barely scratched the surface of the proposition of the concentration and control of money and credit. There is one branch of the subject entirely untouched by this committee, and they ask that the next Congress give the committee power to go into this thing. We will be to a certain extent groping in the dark in regard to currency legislation until this committee is given ample power to investigate these things showing the connection between Wall Street and the bankers and the gamblers and the stock-brokers and monopoly, and its connection with the Treasury of the United States under the last Republican administration. We want it in order to get behind that statute which gave immunity to the Comptroller of the Currency under which he refused to allow the committee to go into the affairs of these concerns and the national banks. We want to give Congress the power to go into the uttermost recesses of all these transactions so that we may know what steps to take in regard to banking and currency legislation and their interlocking with trusts and monopolies.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HENRY. Yes.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Will the gentleman state how much it has cost to simply "scratch the surface"?

Mr. HENRY. I will. It has cost about $50,000 and a little over.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. How much of that was paid for the attorney fee?

Mr. HENRY. I think $15,000 was paid to him. That is my understanding.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. How much does the gentleman estimate it will take to get a thorough investigation if it has cost already some $50,000 to scratch the surface?

Mr. HENRY. Mr. Speaker, I think if you will amend this immunity statute behind which the Comptroller of the Currency hid and behind which the great Wall Street bankers took refuge, if the Senate will pass the resolution as we passed it almost unanimously during the last Congress, and will give this committee ample power, and they go into the question, that in less than 60 days, with an expenditure of $25,000, with nonreluctant witnesses, we can get information that will be worth untold millions and millions of dollars to the American people.

Mr. BORLAND. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HENRY. Yes.

Mr. BORLAND. I will ask the gentleman whether it is not a fact that the then Comptroller of the Currency refused to disclose to the investigating committee some very important facts that were then within his control and knowledge?

Mr. HENRY. It is.

Mr. BORLAND. Is it not possible that a Comptroller of the Currency under a different administration might take a different view and might disclose a great deal of valuable information without any further investigating committee?

Mr. HENRY. That may be true, and therefore the investigation might run along, and at the same time a Comptroller of the Currency might bring these records in. Let me give the House a little information about this, because some have not studied this report as carefully as they should. The report reads:

> Your committee was advised by Messrs. Untermyer and Farrar at the time they accepted their retainers that there could be no exhaustive inquiry such as was contemplated by the resolutions without access to the books and documents of the national banks, nor unless the official examiners appointed by the Comptroller of the Currency or expert accountants to be employed by your committee were permitted to examine into certain of the transactions of the national banks and to extract from their books and otherwise such information as might be deemed necessary. Your committee was especially desirous of ascertaining, with the view of recommending remedial legislation, whether, and if so, in what instances and to what extent, the resources of the national banks are or were controlled or being used to further the practices or to promote the financial operations referred to in the resolutions. Without such access and information it was manifestly impossible to secure a complete exposure of the existing relations of such banks to the alleged concentration of money and credit as required by the resolutions.

The comptroller hid behind that statute and the bankers dodged behind it, as they would do again, and refused to answer the questions while they were extracting money from the vaults of the Treasury of the United States daily and using the people's money in gambling transactions.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HENRY. Yes.

Mr. PAYNE. Has the gentleman any information by which he can inform the House whether the present Comptroller of the Currency is hiding behind any statute and refusing to give any information?

Mr. HENRY. I do not know anything about that, but I know these bankers will hide behind it.

Mr. PAYNE. But you are talking about the Comptroller of the Currency. Did they not put it upon the ground that the statute makes that confidential information to the Government? And is there any difference in the attitude between the present comptroller and the former comptroller?

Mr. HENRY. No; they did not put it upon that ground. They put it on the ground that these great bankers slipped one over on the people when that part of the statute was written, in order that no power except the comptroller and courts could go into the affairs of national banks.

Mr. PAYNE. Then the gentleman has no knowledge of the attitude of the present comptroller?

Mr. HENRY. No; I have not tried to get any information about that, because I know that the former comptroller balked the committee, and the bankers would hasten to hide behind the same statute again, unless we give the people's representatives the power to inquire into such affairs.

Mr. PAYNE. But I am asking the gentleman about the present comptroller. I want to find out what his attitude is. The gentleman from Texas is seeking to make political capital out of the fact that the former comptroller did what he deemed to be his duty and refused to reveal these things that came to him confidentially, as he claimed, from the banks. I want to know whether there has been any improvement or change in the attitude of the present comptroller.

Mr. HENRY. I understand no comptroller has been named, although that makes no difference as far as this proposition is concerned. No matter who the comptroller is, whether Democratic or Republican, he ought not to have this power.

Mr. PAYNE. Then, has the gentleman put it up to the present administration and the present President as to whether it is his idea that the comptroller should refuse this information?

Mr. HENRY. Oh, my good-natured friend knows that is not germane to this question.

Mr. BORLAND and Mr. MONDELL rose.

The SPEAKER. To whom does the gentleman from Texas yield?

Mr. HENRY. I yield first to the gentleman from Missouri and then to the gentleman from Wyoming.

Mr. BORLAND. I want to call the attention of the gentleman to this: As I gather from the report he has in his hand, the committee made an examination into the New York Stock Exchange and into the clearing-house situation?

Mr. HENRY. Yes.

Mr. BORLAND. But they were unable to make an examination into the credits or loans that had been made by these big national banks and the purposes for which those loans were made.

Mr. HENRY. The gentleman is entirely correct.

Mr. BORLAND. Now, that is the place where the comptroller, as the gentleman says, balked the committee under the construction of that statute. Is not all of that information, as to the big loans that the banks have made, and the parties to whom they have gone, and the relations of these parties to the banks, within the knowledge of the comptroller through his bank examiners? And if he took a different view of the situation, could he not, without any further investigation by Congress, lay that information before the committee or before Congress?

Mr. HENRY. That might be possible, but we prefer to throw the gates wide open and let in the light on these transactions. And here stood this investigating committee, saying to these bankers in Wall Street, to this Money Trust, "We do not want any facts in regard to any transaction of less than $1,000,000 in magnitude. We will not come below $1,000,000, but we want to know about transactions above $1,000,000." I say that statute ought to be amended so as to place this power back with the House and the Senate, in order that they may make investigations.

Mr. CULLOP. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. HENRY. I promised to yield to the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL] first.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I think the gentleman's demand for this report should be met, and I am anxious to understand as to the character of the demand and its extent. I have not had information on that subject. I have had very few requests. I notice that the Washington Post, in a recent article under the caption "Under veto threat," has this to say:

> The House Banking and Currency Committee will not hold open meetings during its consideration of the Wilson-Glass currency-reform bill. The meetings will be executive.
> The Wilson bill is to be submitted to the committee with instructions that it shall not be changed in committee or by the House. Members of Congress interested in currency legislation have advised the President and Secretary McAdoo that any plan of currency reform must be presented in prepared form and must not be left open to amendment or change in either House or Senate. The bill as it comes from the White House will be the law.
> It was explained that there were too many Members of both branches who held radical ideas on the subject to admit of the possibility of sensible legislation should they be permitted to inject their individual views. The President and Secretary McAdoo concurred in this suggestion. It has been announced by an administration official that the bill to come from the House committee will be jammed through both House and Senate under threat of the presidential veto should there be a change.

What I am anxious to know is whether the gentleman from Texas is in favor of this wide distribution of this document or whether his committee is in favor of it on the theory that it will retard the legislative program outlined in the editorial I have just read.

Mr. HENRY. The gentleman is very "cute," but he can not draw me into gratifying his childlike and bland curiosity on that point. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. MONDELL. Will the gentleman yield for just one more question?

Mr. HENRY. I will.

Mr. MONDELL. Does the gentleman believe the distribution of these documents would expedite the passage of currency legislation at this session?

Mr. HENRY. Oh, I think so. I think it would expedite everything good pertaining to it.

Mr. MONDELL. Would it expedite the program outlined in the article which I have read?

Mr. HENRY. The gentleman is trying to draw me into that question again, and I beg to decline.

Mr. CULLOP. It would at least educate the people on the necessity of it, would it not?

Mr. HENRY. I should think so, undoubtedly. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. CULLOP. I should like to ask the gentleman from Texas this question: I understand from the gentleman's construction of this statute controlling national banks and the Comptroller of the Currency that it is merely directory instead of mandatory?

Mr. HENRY. Yes.

Mr. CULLOP. If that be true, could not the Committee on Banking and Currency get this information from the Comptroller of the Treasury, if he is friendly to this matter, without continuing the powers of the Pujo committee?

Mr. HENRY. No; he could not. Now I will read the statute; I have it here.

Mr. CULLOP. I have the gentleman's answer.

Mr. HENRY. No; and I will tell you why, if you will let me. Here is the reason why. The statute is section 5241 of the Revised Statutes:

> No association shall be subject to any visitatorial powers other than such as are authorized by this title or are vested in the courts of justice.

They would hide behind it, and when you ask for these facts they under that statute claim immunity.

Mr. CULLOP. That refers to banks.

Mr. HENRY. Yes. No matter who the comptroller might be or to what party he belongs.

Mr. CULLOP. If the comptroller has this information and is friendly to the opening up of this matter to the public, what is in that or any other statute that would prevent him from communicating it to the Committee on Banking and Currency as he ought to and should do?

Mr. HENRY. If my friend will read the banking and currency law, he will find that those gentlemen would hide behind a hundred stumps whenever you undertake to dig into their affairs.

Mr. CULLOP. Is there anything in the law——

Mr. HENRY. Yes——

Mr. CULLOP. Wait until I get through my question—that would prevent the Comptroller of the Currency from giving that information, as one of the heads of the department, to the Committee on Banking and Currency?

Mr. HENRY. Oh, he would give certain information and then these gentlemen would hide behind these different provisions of the law, as I said, and so obscure the issue you could not get to the bottom of it.

Mr. CULLOP. Well, is there anything in the law that prevents the Comptroller of the Currency from fully investigating and getting all the information possessed by any national bank in this country; and if so, what is that provision?

Mr. HENRY. Yes; there is a great deal in the law. The gentleman is in favor of this investigation, is he not?

Mr. CULLOP. Certainly I am and I am in favor of publishing this report, but the question with me is the best, most feasible, and quickest way to get at it, and I contend that the Comptroller of the Currency, under the law, has a right to come before the committee any day and furnish it with this information and that there is no law that will prevent him from disclosing the condition of any bank.

He also has power already provided under the law to compel national banks to disclose fully every transaction conducted by it. There is no law that would enable them to hide any transaction from him, and I contend it is his duty when called upon by the proper authority to get this information and give it to the committee. No law prevents it and public policy requires it, and if he refused to do so when properly called upon, he should be dealt with as the offense required. He would have no right to refuse such a request. It seems to me this information might well be obtained through him, and if so, additional legislation would not be necessary in order to get possession of this information.

Mr. HENRY. Mr. Speaker, I congratulate the gentleman on his patriotism.

Mr. MOORE. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Texas yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

Mr. HENRY. I yield.

Mr. MOORE. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman said a few moments ago that if it were necessary he would be willing to stay here until September or October, or November if necessary, to pursue this currency investigation. Does the gentleman mean to indicate we are likely to be held here until November on the currency question?

Mr. HENRY. I do not know anything about that; but have not the slightest idea we will get away before the 1st of October on the tariff question.

Mr. MOORE. That is just the point. A number of gentlemen here are very anxious to have the tariff question closed, and I think there is good Democratic authority for the statement that it would be good Democratic policy, as well as good Republican policy, to have that question closed as quickly as possible.

Mr. HENRY. It seems to me the Democratic Party would promptly grant the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. MOORE. Is it not a fact that there is very high Democratic authority for the statement that we ought to dispose of the tariff question before taking up the currency question, inasmuch as the people seem to be better informed on the tariff than upon the subject of currency?

Mr. HENRY. Well, that is another side issue.

Mr. MOORE. Has it not come from high Democratic authority that it would be very good policy to have the tariff question disposed of before taking up the currency question?

Mr. HENRY. Oh, the gentleman is educated, can read and construe language.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of this resolution?

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. Speaker, I object.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Mr. Speaker, I made a point of order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee objects.

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES.

A message, in writing, from the President of the United States was communicated to the House of Representatives by Mr. Latta, one of his secretaries.

ADJOURNMENT UNTIL FRIDAY.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that when the House adjourns to-day it adjourn to meet on Friday next.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

ARMOR PLATE.

Mr. BARTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the following resolution.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolution by Mr. BARTON.

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Navy be, and he is hereby, instructed to send to the House of Representatives at the earliest date possible the following information:

First. What has been the total expenditure of the United States Government for armor plate for all purposes since its introduction and use in the construction of war vessels?

Second. What portion of this amount has been paid to the Carnegie Steel Co., the Bethlehem Steel Co., and the Midvale Steel Co., and to other steel companies, if any?

Third. What is the cost per ton to the Government for armor plate purchased? What is the cost of manufacturing armor plate per ton?

Fourth. Do steel-manufacturing companies having contracts to furnish gun castings for the United States Government make contracts with foreign countries, the guns being finished wholly or in part by the United States navy yards? If so, what number of guns have been so finished and for what countries, and what compensation has the United States received?

Fifth. What would be the cost of erecting and equipping a Government plant for the manufacture of armor plate?

Sixth. A large portion of the expense of making guns being already provided for by the Government in its own plant, what would be the additional expense of enlarging the plant so that the guns could be made entirely by the Government?

Seventh. What is the cost per ton of powder now manufactured by Government plants? What is the cost per ton of powder purchased for the use of the Government? What would be the expense of enlarging the Government plant or erecting additional plants, to the end that the United States manufacture all its powder instead of only a portion, as at the present time?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I desire to say that so far as the information affecting powder is concerned, it was all furnished to the House at the last session of Congress by the Committee on Appropriations. It seems to me that this resolution should go to the Committee on Naval Affairs or to whatever committee should have jurisdiction. I object.

Mr. BARTON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman from New York reserve the right to object until I can make a brief statement?

Mr. FITZGERALD. How much time does the gentleman desire?

Mr. BARTON. About two minutes.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Very well.

Mr. BARTON. Mr. Speaker, a resolution similar to this was introduced by Senator TILLMAN. While it did not take up the powder proposition, it did take up the cost of armor plate, and was considered by the Senate. I know from personal knowledge that this information can not be obtained upon application of a Member of Congress, and I feel that a Representative here should be entitled to information, if we are not transcending our rights when we are simply asking for something to act upon in future legislation.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, under the rules of the House all resolutions of inquiry, if not reported back by a committee within a week, are privileged matters, and it has been the custom always to give the committee that would have proper jurisdiction of such resolution an opportunity to determine whether the request made is sufficient, or should be broadened, or should be narrowed.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the gentleman whether the committee would have the right to report this under the rule recently adopted by the Democratic caucus, putting off action on resolutions of this kind?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Even if it did not, the right of the gentleman to move the discharge of the committee would not be affected.

Mr. PAYNE. What would a poor minority Member do? He is not a member of the Democratic caucus, and he can not protest there. He comes here and presents a resolution, and he is told to go to the committee, and the committee is prohibited from acting by the rules of the Democratic caucus.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, the members of the poor minority can properly spend their time in offering thanks to divine Providence that the people in their supreme wisdom had placed the Government in the hands of the Democratic Party in the last election. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. PAYNE. I do not think they have exhibited that wisdom here conspicuously. They seem to be afraid of themselves and afraid of their own party and they are afraid to let things take their proper course in the Congress of the United States.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I am simply asking, Mr. Speaker, that this resolution take its proper course.

Mr. PAYNE. No; the gentleman has attempted to block that proper course and stop the action of the rules of the House, and destroy the action of the rules of the House by action of your caucus. That is a so-called reform—I guess the Democratic brand of reform.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from New York [Mr. PAYNE] had been in Congress until he was looked upon as an antique relic before I came here, and in all the time of his service he never raised his voice to obtain any information about the many indefensible contracts of the steel corporations of the country. It is too late for him to deceive anybody into the belief that he is anxious to obtain information. All of this information that is desirable will be had.

In the last session of Congress the Committee on Appropriations, under the lead of the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. SHERLEY] made a very exhaustive investigation into the cost of production of powder, both by the Government and by private plants, and as a result it reduced the price of powder——

Mr. BARTON. On that theory might not this reduce the price of steel?

Mr. FITZGERALD. All that information is available, and as I say, they reduced the price of powder.

Mr. BARTON. If I strike out the part pertaining to powder——

Mr. FITZGERALD. The committee recommended and Congress fixed the price of this powder at a figure less than the representatives of the Government expressed the opinion that it should be fixed.

Mr. BARTON. So long as the Democratic Secretary of the Navy has recommended this sort of proceeding, and so long as you admit that the investigation by the last committee reduced the price of powder to the Government, if I will agree to strike out the part relative to powder will you permit the portion relating to armor plate to go before the House?

Mr. FITZGERALD. I believe that the gentleman's resolution should be considered by the committee that has most information and greatest familiarity with the matter.

Mr. BARTON. Then do you object?

Mr. FITZGERALD. And if the committee does not report within a week the gentleman can test the sense of the House any day after that by submitting a privileged motion to discharge the committee from the present consideration of the resolution.

Mr. BARTON. You know I can not do that.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Oh, the gentleman can do that.

Mr. BARTON. After the 23d?

Mr. FITZGERALD. At any time after one week, if this resolution is referred to the committee to-day.

Mr. BARTON. Do you object?

Mr. FITZGERALD. I object.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York objects, and the resolution is referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

PHILIPPINE PUBLIC LANDS (H. DOC. NO. 89).

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following message from the President of the United States, which, with the accompanying documents, was ordered to be printed and referred to the Committee on Insular Affairs:

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

I submit herewith Act No. 2222 of the third Philippine Legislature, entitled:

An act further to amend section 33, chapter 4, of Act No. 926, entitled "The public-land act," as amended, by providing for the granting of free patents to native settlers until January 1, 1923.

I have approved the act and submit it in accordance with provisions of section 13 of the act of Congress, July 1, 1902, entitled:

An act temporarily to provide for the administration of the affairs of civil government in the Philippine Islands, and for other purposes.

I also transmit herewith a letter of the Secretary of War, explaining the act and its purposes.

WOODROW WILSON.

THE WHITE HOUSE, June 13, 1913.

ADMINISTRATION OF THE PUBLIC LANDS.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, on the 4th, 5th, and 6th of this month the governors of the Western States held a meeting in Salt Lake City, Utah, for the purpose of considering the question of conservation as it has been practiced by the Federal Government during the past few years.

The object of the governors was to thoroughly discuss, agree upon, and systematically show to this new administration and to Congress how and wherein the present public-land policy is seriously impeding and permanently retarding the settlement of the public-land States, and to earnestly urge upon this administration and this Congress the imperative necessity of opening the public domain to settlement, and of a more liberal and practical policy toward the public-land settlers, the miners, and the development of the West generally.

The meeting was attended by nearly all of the western governors. The First Assistant Secretary of the Interior and the Commissioner of the General Land Office were both present by special invitation, and there was a full and free three days' discussion of the Federal public-land policy. No other question was considered. The conference was perfectly harmonious, thoroughly businesslike, and most successful; and after an exhaustive presentation of the subject, representing all phases of the matter, the governors unanimously agreed upon a statement to the country in the form of a set of resolutions, which have been transmitted to me by the governor of Colorado, and I ask leave to extend my remarks by inserting those resolutions in the RECORD, and at some later time I will ask consent to discuss these various subjects more in detail.

STATE OF COLORADO, EXECUTIVE OFFICE,
Denver, June 12, 1913.

Hon. EDWARD T. TAYLOR,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

DEAR ED.: I send you herewith copy of resolutions unanimously agreed to by the governors' conference at Salt Lake City. No other subject was considered, and the full three days were spent considering this matter. I found that the sentiment from other States was as strong as that from Colorado. When the proceedings are published, I will send you copies.

Yours, sincerely, E. M. AMMONS, Governor.

We, the governors of public-land States, in conference assembled, believing that upon the administration of the laws governing the disposal of the public lands in a very large measure depends the future prosperity of our States, do hereby agree to the following statement of what we believe should be the policy of the National Government in the administration of the public lands:

First. That the newer States, having been admitted in expressed terms on an equal footing in all respects whatever with the original States, no realization of that condition can be obtained until the State jurisdiction shall extend to all their territory, the taxing power to all their lands, and their political power and influence be thereby secured.

Second. That as rapidly as the States become prepared to take over the work of conservation the Federal Government withdraw its bureaus from the field and turn the work over to the States.

Third. The permanent withdrawal of any lands within our States from entry and sale we believe to be contrary to the spirit and letter of the ordinance of 1787, the policy of which was followed for over a century, and we urge that such lands be returned to entry and opened to sale as speedily as possible.

Fourth. Dilatory action on the part of executive departments of the Government in passing title to purchasers of public lands is unfair to the States, as it permits purchasers to occupy the lands indefinitely without the State having power to tax them.

Fifth. We believe that the best development of these States depends upon the disposal of the public land to citizens as rapidly as the laws can be complied with.

Sixth. Bona fide homestead entry within forest-reserve boundaries should be permitted in the same manner as on unreserved lands, subject only to protest where lands selected are heavily timbered with trees of commercial value or are known to contain valuable mineral deposits.

Seventh. That the Government grant to the public-land States 5 per cent of the public land remaining in each, to be administered by the States as the school lands are now administered, for the purpose of building national public highways.

Eighth. That liberal land grants be made for the purpose of establishing and maintaining forestry schools in the public-land States.

Ninth. That rights of way for all lawful purposes be granted without unwarranted hindrance or delay.

Tenth. That all mineral lands now withheld from entry or classified at prohibitive prices be reopened to entry at nominal prices under strict provision against monopolization.

Eleventh. That we express our appreciation of the splendid work done by the department at Washington in cooperation with the several States in experimentation and instruction. This assistance has been most valuable in the education of our children and the development of our States, and we commend the same principle to the administration at Washington as being the most feasible plan for the present advancement of true conservation.

Twelfth. We believe that the National Government should provide for expert experimental work in the solution of the mining problems of the mineral States in the same manner that the Agricultural Department now assists the farmers in solving the agricultural problems.

Thirteenth. We believe that the speedy settlement of these public lands constitutes the true and best interests of the Republic. The wealth and strength of the country are its landowning population.

Fourteenth. The best and most economical development of this western territory was accomplished under those methods in vogue when the States of the Middle West were occupied and settled. In our opinion those methods have never been improved upon, and we advocate a return to these first principles of vested ownership with joint interest and with widely scattered individual responsibility.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Tulley, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had receded from amendment No. 2 of the bill (H. R. 2441) making appropriation for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1914, and for other purposes.

SENATE BILLS REFERRED.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, Senate bills of the following titles were taken from the Speaker's table and referred to their appropriate committees, as indicated below:

S. 99. An act to fix the times and places of holding district court for the district of Arizona; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

S. 485. An act to amend section 1 of an act entitled "An act to codify, revise, and amend the laws relating to the judiciary," approved March 3, 1911; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

S. 577. An act authorizing the President to appoint an additional circuit judge for the fourth circuit; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

S. 1027. An act to provide for an enlarged homestead; to the Committee on the Public Lands.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

Mr. ASHBROOK, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled bill of the following title, when the Speaker signed the same:

H. R. 2441. An act making appropriation for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1914, and for other purposes.

LIFE-SAVING SERVICE IN THE OHIO FLOODS.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to have printed as a document a report made by the Life-Saving Service as to the work done by its crews in the recent floods in the Ohio Valley.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kentucky asks unanimous consent to have printed as a House document a report of the Life-Saving Service. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

ST. LOUIS & SAN FRANCISCO RAILROAD SYSTEM.

Mr. HINEBAUGH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend in the RECORD as a part of my remarks a letter from Hon. Frederick W. Lehmann, former Solicitor General of the United States, and a short letter from Hon. Charles Nagel, former Secretary of Commerce and Labor, for the purpose of correcting a mistake in the mentioning of their names in a resolution offered in relation to the Frisco Railway receivership.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HINEBAUGH] asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD as indicated. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The letters referred to are as follows:

ST. LOUIS, MO., June 13, 1913.

Hon. WILLIAM H. HINEBAUGH,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: I have seen to-day for the first time the resolution introduced by you in the House on the 2d instant, in which you recite among other things that "the St. Louis & San Francisco Railroad system, on the application of Charles Nagel, former Secretary of Commerce and Labor, and Frederick W. Lehmann, former Solicitor General of the United States, was placed in the hands of a receiver," etc.

This is erroneous as to Mr. Nagel and myself, and indeed is the very reverse of the fact. The suit in which the receivers were appointed was by the North American Co. as sole complainant against the St. Louis & San Francisco Railroad Co. as sole defendant. I send to you under separate cover a printed copy of the record in the case, from which you will see that the application for receivership was made by the North American Co. and assented to by the railroad company; that the application was made and granted May 27, the day the suit was filed, and that neither Mr. Nagel nor myself represented either party to the suit.

Our sole relation to the matter was that at the request of a large bond-holding interest we made inquiry on May 27 and learned that an application for receivership was pending, and at the request of that same interest, without formal appearance in the case, we opposed what was done.

I regret that your resolution did not sooner come to my knowledge. Will you kindly correct the error it contains, which I observe was repeated in your remarks published in the RECORD of June 6?

Very respectfully, yours,

F. W. LEHMANN.

ST. LOUIS, MO., June 14, 1913.

Hon. WILLIAM H. HINEBAUGH,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SIR: Mr. Frederick W. Lehmann, of this city, has shown me copy of a letter which he has written to you in respect to your resolution upon the subject of the Frisco receivership.

The matter had not been called to my attention, with the exception of a newspaper clipping here or there, which I had assumed was based upon error or misunderstanding. I find now that your resolution does state that the receivers in the Frisco matter were appointed at our instance. As he says, the reverse is true. We had nothing to do with the application or with the suggestion of the receivership. On the contrary, it was our position, when we learned of the application at the last moment, that receivers should be appointed who had in no manner been associated with the affairs of the Frisco system either as officers, directors, or otherwise, and this fact has been pretty generally noted by the press.

Knowing that you would be interested to correct a mistake which is based upon evident misapprehension, I am,

Very truly, yours, CHARLES NAGEL.

THE PHILIPPINE ISLANDS.

Mr. GORDON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by publishing a document issued by the Hon. Moorfield Story, of Boston, on the Philippine question.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD by printing an article on the Philippine Islands by the Hon. Moorfield Story.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I want to call attention to the fact that this is a pamphlet of 60 pages, and hardly a proper thing to put in the RECORD.

Mr. GORDON. Mr. Speaker, at the last session of the House, without objection, an address by Bishop Brent was inserted in the RECORD, and this pamphlet is a reply to it.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I do not think that either one should be in the RECORD. To insert a pamphlet of 60 pages in the RECORD under the guise of extension of remarks is going beyond anything in reason, and I shall object.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York objects.

THE FOREST SERVICE.

Mr. BRYAN. Mr. Speaker, on the 29th of May a resolution was introduced in this House by Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington, calling for an investigation or trial of the Forest Service. This resolution by inference made certain charges against the Forest Service which might be termed counts in the indictment of the gentleman from Washington leveled against the Forest Service. Briefly stated, these counts involved:

First. Fraudulent lieu-land selections and exchanges.

Second. Corrupt relationship of the Forest Service with certain big interests.

Third. Nontimbered lands wrongfully included in reservations.

Fourth. Uselessly maintained reserves in Alaska.

Fifth. Waste by allowing large quantities of timber to decay.

Sixth. Incompetency of the men employed in the service.

Thereafter, on June 3, the gentleman from Washington who introduced the resolution made a speech in this House in which he supported his indictment by a recital of grievances and charges against the Forest Service. On the following Friday this resolution was discussed, and the Forest Service defended by the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. MURDOCK] and by myself, and on last Tuesday the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL] addressed the House on the same subject.

It had been my intention to not further take up the time of the House with this matter, especially in view of the fact that no Member of the House had publicly lent any encouragement whatever to the resolution introduced by Mr. HUMPHREY or spoken on its behalf except my colleague [Mr. JOHNSON of Washington], who filed certain telegraphic communications and made brief comments friendly to the proposed investigation and hostile to the Forest Service.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask my colleague a question.

Mr. BRYAN. I will yield.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. I want to know if the gentleman will permit me to insert in his remarks a further statement showing that the Forest Service has issued a bulletin for general distribution on the sale of $7 worth of logs in the Appalachian Forest Reserve?

Mr. BRYAN. I will not, of course, allow the gentleman to introduce anything in my remarks; but I have no objection to his introducing it in the RECORD after I have finished my remarks.

By his remarks the gentleman from Washington intimated that conservation as practiced by the Forest Service was conservation of the "dream-book variety"; but he favored practical conservation, such as would eliminate enough lands from the reserves to permit Mason and other counties in his district to realize substantial gains in taxation.

REACTIONARY PRESS OF STATE OF WASHINGTON MAKE FALSE AND SENSATIONAL REPORTS.

The attack of my colleague, Mr. HUMPHREY, has been widely advertised, however, by the reactionary press of the State of Washington, and an impression has been made that the Forest Service has been caught in all kinds of wrongdoing, and that the wrath of Congress is about to be brought down on the heads of this bureau. This impression has been combatted by the progressive and independent press of the State of Washington, but there appears an insufficient understanding of the facts connected with these charges.

These charges of my colleague [Mr. HUMPHREY] were filed and his speech delivered only a few days prior to a conference of governors in the Northwest, by which this subject was to be considered. The result of this conference is ably set forth in an editorial in the Spokesman-Review, a great daily newspaper published at Spokane, Wash., a newspaper surely without a superior in the Northwest. The Spokesman-Review, in an editorial published June 9 concerning this meeting of the governors, makes the following comment:

It begins at last to look as if the beginning of the end to the struggle for State conservation of national forests were about to dawn.

The State conservation commission of Oregon declares as the result of prolonged and exhaustive investigation that, in its judgment, transfer of control over the national forests from the Nation to the States "is wrong in principle and would be disastrous in results." Gov. Hunt, of Arizona, tells the Salt Lake conservation conference of western governors that the western record of State conservation under what are called State rights "does not justify the attitude of defiance to national control." Gov. West, of Oregon, writes to the same conference that national conservation of natural resources is "a policy not only wise but necessary."

These statements, both separately and together, are significant and encouraging. They show that the closest and most disinterested western students of the problem have learned the lesson of experience, East and West, taught by State conservation. It is that State conservation is no conservation. It results in robbery of the people who own the natural resources and in the ruin of their property. The statements also reveal that the educational work initiated by Messrs. Pinchot and Roosevelt and pushed steadily forward by the National Forestry Service is winning the people of the West. They see through the hollowness of the claims advanced by the State conservationists, and behind these men they discern the predatory interests that seek only their own advantage.

Gov. West frankly calls attention to what he considers faults in the departmental administration of national conservation. Gov. Hunt insists on cooperation between the Nation and the States in conserving natural resources that belong to all the people. But both the governors and the Oregon commission take the true view of the conservation issue—that of the Nation, which is the point of view of the statesman. There is plenty of fighting yet to be done by the friends of national conservation; there must be no relaxation of watchfulness, but the stars in their courses fight the State conservationists and the people of the Western States are taking their stand in this matter with the national policy.

WHY SUCH A CONTRAST ON PURPORTED "NEWS"?

The Post-Intelligencer, of Seattle, concerning the same meeting of the governors, published to its readers on June 7 the following:

Governors attack Federal control of public lands—Executives agree men acquainted with conditions should be in charge of domain—Regulation of Forestry Service scored.

Evidently with a purpose to influence this meeting of the governors, my colleague's speech was widely published on the 2d and 3d of June, and, in order that the Members may see the extent to which the purported "news" of this speech and the proceedings here—I should say the lack of proceedings here—have been garbled and falsely presented to the people of my State, and particularly to those residing in western Washington, I here present some of the headlines and reports that were given out.

"NATION ROBBED," SAYS POST-INTELLIGENCER, FOR NORTHERN PACIFIC RAILWAY.

The Post-Intelligencer at Seattle gave a full page to Congressman HUMPHREY'S speech, which had been sent out in advance subject to release, and published the following headlines and comment to herald the speech:

NATION ROBBED FOR BENEFIT OF TIMBER BARONS—HUMPHREY CHARGES THAT FOREST RESERVES HAVE BENEFITED ONLY RAILROAD AND LUMBER INTERESTS—CONGRESSMAN ATTACKS THE FOREST SERVICE—TELLS CONGRESS HOW BIG CORPORATIONS, UNDER LIEU-LAND LAW, AMONG THEM THE NORTHERN PACIFIC, TRADED TREELESS WASTES FOR VIRGIN FORESTS OF THE WEST.

Charging that the public forest reserves throughout the West are maintained for the benefit of a few railroads, for the protection of one or two large timber companies, and for the glorification of certain bureaus and Government employees, Representative HUMPHREY this afternoon, in a speech before the House of Representatives, fired the second gun in the comprehensive attack which he intends to make upon the Federal Forest Bureau.

LEDGER, TOO, ACCUSES AUTHOR OF RAINIER EXCHANGE OF "STEALING."

The Tacoma Ledger, owned by Sam A. Perkins, the Republican national committeeman of the State of Washington, who also owns quite a string of daily papers in western Washington, published the speech with the following headlines:

Charges vast timber steals—HUMPHREY declares Forest Service has been allied with private monopoly—Conservation a mask—Great reserves created, then railroads permitted to trade barren land for timber.

SEATTLE TIMES SAYS IT WAS PINCHOT, AND PUBLISHES A LIBEL.

The Seattle Times, owned by Col. Alden J. Blethen, a man who formerly resided at Minneapolis and is thoroughly posted on the methods used by the Northern Pacific Railway and the Weyerhaeusers to get into their possession vast areas of timberland, and who is bound to know of the struggle of Gifford Pinchot and others against these unjust and wrongful lieu-land exchanges, published the speech with the following libelous and false headlines and comment.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Does the gentleman intend to leave all that in his speech, as printed in the RECORD charging a man with libel?

Mr. BRYAN. Mr. Speaker, I refuse to answer the question.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. BRYAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask that the gentleman take his seat.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has a right to rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. BRYAN. To take a man off his feet with a parliamentary inquiry?

The SPEAKER. Of course the gentleman has a right to make a parliamentary inquiry; it is not taken out of the gentleman's time.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. It was stated on the floor the other day that certain references to men in the West made on the floor during the forestry debate should remain in the RECORD. That was insisted on, and I now want to make sure that the charges of libel made by the gentleman who has the floor will remain in the RECORD, and not be stricken out, as were the references of a few days ago.

The SPEAKER. That is not a parliamentary inquiry, and the gentleman from Washington is under no obligation to answer the question unless he chooses to.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Has a Member of the House a right to address the House and quote from newspaper articles and then cut those out of his speech when published?

The SPEAKER. The Chair will state the rule and the practice. If it is a speech in the ordinary acceptation of the term, with no dialogue, the Member has a perfect right to put in his speeches anything he pleases, provided he is not violating the rule by talking about the Senate or a Senator, is not using abusive language toward the President, is not using language offensive to any Member of the House, and is not violating any other rule. When he comes to revise his remarks, he can cut out any part of that speech he pleases, or all of it, unless there is a dialogue in it, and if there is a dialogue involved he can not change that dialogue without the consent of the interlocutor or interlocutors.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. When a Member is addressing the House and quoting from a newspaper as a part of his speech, and he is asked on the floor whether he is going to let that remain in, can he refuse to answer the question and cut it out afterwards?

The SPEAKER. He may do one of two things. He may refuse to answer, or if he answers he must let his answer remain in the RECORD.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Have we not a right to know whether he is going to let this speech that he is now making stay in the RECORD?

The SPEAKER. No. The presumption is that every Member will observe the rules of the House, and one can not ascertain in advance whether he is going to violate the rules in remodeling his speech or not; but if he remodels it, even where there is no dialogue, and inserts in it language offensive to a Member of the House, or a criticism of the Senate that should be resented, or anything of that sort, under the rules and practices then the House may harness him up, and strike out that part of his speech. That was tried upon one occasion; in fact, it has been tried many times. The most notable case was that of a Member from Massachusetts, whose name I shall not call. The man is dead. He remodeled one of his speeches, and some one came in and made a motion to strike out that part of his speech which was abusive, and it took three days to get that part of the speech out of the RECORD, because the gentleman from Massachusetts was a very resourceful man.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, I have no desire to harass the Chair, but many of us believe that these headlines that the gentleman from Washington is reading are absolutely true, and we do not want them cut out of the RECORD after the speech is made.

The SPEAKER. That is his lookout and not the Speaker's lookout or that of the gentleman from Colorado.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. What I am inquiring is whether he has the right to cut them out.

The SPEAKER. He has the right to remodel his speech under the rules of the House.

Mr. BRYAN. Mr. Speaker, the only reason I declined to answer the question of my colleague was because I thought it partook of the nature of a discourtesy for one gentleman to ask another gentleman on the floor whether he intended to leave his remarks in the RECORD. I will state for the benefit of the gentleman that it took me quite a little time to get up this particular part of my remarks, and I got it up more particularly for home consumption than for any other purpose. I did not have any idea that I was going to accomplish anything particular here by speaking to the gentlemen in Congress, but I prepared this especially to be read by my constituents and the people in the State of Washington, and by the constituents of my colleague, and I assure you that every word of it will go into the RECORD.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BRYAN. Mr. Speaker, I decline to yield.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. But I think the gentleman has made a charge against me, and he ought to yield.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. BRYAN. Mr. Speaker, I made no charge.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. BRYAN. I decline to yield.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. But the gentleman accused me of discourtesy.

Mr. BRYAN. I made no charge against the gentleman.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. And the gentleman charged me——

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Washington [Mr. BRYAN] declines to yield to his colleague, and his colleague must not interrupt.

Mr. BRYAN. The Seattle Times published the following headlines and comments:

HUMPHREY ACCUSES PINCHOT OF GIGANTIC THEFT FROM DOMAIN—HUMPHREY, IN DEMANDING PROBE OF FORESTRY SERVICE, DECLARES NATION HAS LOST $200,000,000.

Congressman WILL E. HUMPHREY, of Washington, this morning created a sensation in the House when, in supporting a resolution for the appointment of a committee to investigate the forest reserves, he delivered a speech in which he virtually charged Gifford Pinchot and other leaders of the conservation movement with stealing from the Government on behalf of the Northern Pacific and Santa Fe Railroads and the Weyerhaeuser Lumber Co. timberlands valued at more than $200,000,000.

It would seem that this charge against Gifford Pinchot of an open theft of $200,000,000 worth of timber, involving not only the ordinary moral turpitude of a land grabber or timberland crook, but also involving official degradation and betrayal of trust, reaches the climax of charges made against the Forest Service and Mr. Pinchot. These charges are not only criminally libelous and false, but are made at a time when the Forest Service and Mr. Pinchot are more thoroughly vindicated in public opinion than has been the case in any period in the past.

NO INVESTIGATION IN PROSPECT, HENCE THESE FALSE STATEMENTS MUST BE CONTROVERTED.

If there was to be an investigation it would be unnecessary to pay any attention to the charges of my colleague, but if no answer is made the enemies of conservation will have scored their point, for already the charges have been circulated far and wide, while the Congressman taunts us with the interrogations, "Do you object to an investigation?" "What harm can come from an investigation?" although he knows none of the Members of this House will consider his proposition with any seriousness whatever. Still the speech and the charges are made the most of at home.

WHO IS RESPONSIBLE FOR THESE CORRUPT LIEU-LAND EXCHANGES?

My colleague, Mr. HUMPHREY, well knowing that the people of Washington resent the lieu-land transactions, in so far as they enabled men and the big interests to rob the Government of priceless timber holdings, has seized upon that fact to lend a color to the present charges, although he is bound to know that the criminal raid of the public domain in the timber regions of the West under these infamous and corruptly enacted lieu-land statutes had nothing whatever to do with the Forest Service or the men he now seeks to charge with wrongdoing. The distinguished gentleman has served in this Congress for more than 10 years past, and to say that he has not known what has gone on during that time or that he is not informed as to facts which have been so widely discussed as these lieu-land exchanges, is to accuse him of imbecility, and I certainly would not make any such accusation.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BRYAN. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. MONDELL. Just a moment ago the gentleman referred to the lieu-land statute, enacted at a time when he was not in Congress, and when I was not in Congress, and he referred to it as having been corruptly enacted. Did the gentleman mean just that? I wondered if that is just what the gentleman wanted to have remain in his speech.

Mr. BRYAN. Mr. Speaker, I am willing to stand by what I have said. The other day my colleague referred to it as highway robbery in his speech, and we all agreed that it was highway robbery, and these newspapers back there that reported all say that he accused everybody of stealing, and I am certainly not going any further than he went.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BRYAN. Yes.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Does the gentleman say in the beginning of his remarks that I am opposed to conservation?

Mr. BRYAN. I charged plainly that you said that you opposed "dream-book" conservation, but you wanted "practical" conservation.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Why do you charge that I am opposed to conservation when I merely seek to obtain some relief for individual settlers in hundreds of thousands of cases where land has been taken away? What is conservation?

Mr. BRYAN. Mr. Speaker, every enemy that has ever come down here to Congress against conservation, every man that has ever come down here to help loot the public domain, has made that same talk about "settlers," and the people of this country are tired of this proposition of eliminating timber from the forest reserves for the "poor settlers."

You come from a timber country and you know the big men of your district are timberland owners, that they want this timber eliminated. They perhaps believe that it is for the good of the country, and you may believe it is for the good of the country.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will admonish the gentleman from Washington [Mr. BRYAN] that he must not under the rule address a fellow Member in the second person.

Mr. BRYAN. Mr. Speaker, I will be glad to correct my remarks in that respect and say the gentleman comes from a timber district and he knows the people of that district, the large timberland owners, want this timber eliminated, and they may believe that it is for the best interests of the country, for the best interests of the Government, and he may believe it is for the good of the Government, but the men who have always fought for the "poor settlers" have always taken that same tack and have always made that same argument here, as will be shown further in my speech, and that any quantity of timberlands have been eliminated for that pretended purpose, but the "settlers" were never able to ever cut a stick of timber; to the contrary, the big timber owners and operators got it all.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BRYAN. I decline to yield further.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman declines to yield.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, in that connection will the gentleman yield to me?

Mr. BRYAN. My time is going; if I may have a little more time yielded to me, I shall be glad to yield.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. I will ask unanimous consent that the gentleman's time be extended 15 minutes longer.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Colorado [Mr. TAYLOR] asks unanimous consent that the time of the gentleman from Washington be extended 15 minutes. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. That gives the gentleman 20 minutes from this time.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. I will ask the gentleman whether or not he applies that remark to the State of Colorado, where 70 per cent of the fourteen and a half million acres now in forest reserves contain not one stick of timber?

Mr. BRYAN. I do not claim to know the condition of the forest reserves in the State of Colorado, nor do I claim to be widely or thoroughly informed about the forest reserves of the various States and reservations, but I do say this, that there has come from Colorado, so far as I have heard, no persistent demand that has found expression in the membership here in Congress for the elimination or abandonment of the forest-reserve idea.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. The gentleman not having served heretofore is not informed of the fight that has been going on for the past four years, in which I have been taking a part, trying to get agriculture land and nontimber land eliminated from the reserves.

Mr. BRYAN. I have examined the record thoroughly, and I have found a great deal about what has been going on, and I have tried to put these findings in my remarks.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Will the gentleman yield?

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. BRYAN. I do.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. I would like to ask my colleague how he knows the owners of timber in the second congressional district are not in favor of conservation, and if he knows more about the conservation situation in the second district of Washington than he apparently does about the State of Colorado?

Mr. BRYAN. Well, I am afraid, Mr. Speaker, if I should answer that question my colleague would object to it on the ground it was personal.

In order, however, that the Members of this House and those who read the RECORD may know once for all that this charge against the Forest Service is entirely without foundation, and that the crime by which the lieu-land exchanges were made was a fraud on the Government for which the political backers of the gentleman who now presents the charges, the other Representatives from the State of Washington, and the proprietor of the Post-Intelligencer, which heralds the charges, were themselves directly responsible, I desire to present a few facts

AS TO THE RESPONSIBILITY OF THE FOREST SERVICE.

Away back yonder in the eighties public sentiment was aroused on behalf of forest preservation. Men who owned large tracts of timber—seeking in the main protection from fire—and other public-spirited men formed a private association known as the American Forestry Association. Public opinion was aroused, until Congress, by act of March 3, 1891, passed a new act providing for the administration of the reservations of land containing timber by the Department of the Interior. The work was assigned to the division of the department known as Division P of the General Land Office, under which plan the forest reservations were administered without any very definite plan, except those involving the fighting of fire, and, it might be added, the passing of title from the Government to land sharks and land grabbers.

NOW LET US FIND WHO CONDUCTED THE LEADING RAIDS.

During this period the Government was robbed of millions upon millions of feet of timber. The ordinary process of obtaining timber by dummy entrymen, by looting school sections, and by taking advantage of the incompetency and, at times, I fear, the crookedness of many officers of the Government and of the States on whom the Department of the Interior and the several States had placed the duty of administering the land laws, came to be regarded as a sort of worn-out system—a retail system, as it were, when the time for wholesale transactions had arrived.

THE NORTHERN PACIFIC SEEKS A "WHOLESALE" MAN—AND FINDS HIM.

The getting of timberland by forties, by quarter sections, and by sections came to be entirely too slow a process. The Northern Pacific Railroad, presided over by James J. Hill—and I here assert that the statement that James J. Hill had ever contributed anything toward the Forest Service or is a friend of that service is entirely erroneous—with Weyerhaeusers and others, got their heads together to devise some wholesale method of railroading the timberlands into their own hands.

Mr. Hill remembered that after President Cleveland had sought for legislation by Congress to give administration to the reserves he had created, involving 17,500,000 acres of timberland in Western States and Territories, under authority of the act of March 3, 1891, that every effort at such administrative relief for the reserves had been opposed by such "conservation Senators" as Senator Clark, of Montana; Senator Pettigrew, of South Dakota; Senator John L. Wilson, of Washington; Senator Mitchell, of Oregon, and others. He remembered that when, on February 22, 1897, President Cleveland created forest reserves to the extent of 21,000,000 acres, on the recommendation of a scientific commission he had appointed to investigate the timber situation and report, that these same men did all they could to block the effort and to repeal the executive acts of the President; he also remembered that six days after the President had made his Executive withdrawal of 21,000,000 just referred to, Senator Pettigrew, of South Dakota, had, with the assistance of Senator Clark, of Montana, and Senator Wilson, of Washington, and other friends of those who were endeavoring to loot the public domain, injected into the sundry civil bill an amendment restoring these lands to public entry, which amendment read as follows:

And all lands in the States of Wyoming, Utah, Colorado, Montana, Washington, Idaho, and North Dakota set apart and reserved by Executive orders and proclamation of February 22, 1897, hereby restored to the public domain and subject to settlement, occupancy, and entry upon the land laws of the United States the same as if said Executive orders and proclamation had not been made.

Mr. Hill well remembered how devotedly these Senators worked; that although it was known that the President would veto the entire sundry civil bill if this amendment was presented as a rider, yet, despite this fact, ignoring the importance of the sundry civil bill, in endeavoring to restore these lands to the public domain for private entry they succeeded in having the amendment adopted by the Senate.

The amendment referred to was introduced in the Senate by Senator Pettigrew, of South Dakota. The Senator declared that the amendment would give the forest reserves the administrative laws so long sought for and at the same time would give the West relief. In presenting the amendment to the Senate it was said that it was prepared by the Secretary of the Interior under the eye of President McKinley, which statement was afterwards strongly denied. In the debate it was developed that Senator Pettigrew was the sole author of the substantial features of the amendment. One section which he wrote read:

That the Executive orders and proclamation dated February 22, 1897, setting apart and reserving certain lands in the States of Wyoming, Utah, Montana, Washington, Idaho, and South Dakota as forest reserves be and are hereby suspended and the lands therein restored to the public domain the same as though said order had not been issued: Provided further, That the land embraced in such reservations and otherwise disposed of shall, when the surveys of said reservations are completed, be subject to such orders as the President may make with reference to the same, so as not to disturb the rights of any actual settler upon any of the lands embraced in said reservation.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. Speaker, will my colleague yield?

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman yield to his colleague from Washington?

Mr. BRYAN. I do.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Am I to understand you are aiming to give the impression here that John L. Wilson, at the time he was Senator, had any interest in the Post-Intelligencer, of Washington—was the owner of it, or——

Mr. BRYAN. I have not said that. I said he was the owner just a short time back.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Your speech would clearly indicate——

The SPEAKER. The Chair admonishes the other gentleman from Washington that he must not address a colleague in the second person.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I beg pardon; I have not taken part in debates enough to get used to the method of procedure.

Mr. BRYAN. I will state to my colleague I do not know just the date John L. Wilson become owner of the Post-Intelligencer—when the final negotiations placed the paper into his hands—but when the name of John L. Wilson is mentioned in western Washington it is always associated with the name of the paper.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. With the permission of the gentleman, I will inform him that Senator John L. Wilson had no connection with the Post-Intelligencer in any shape, form, or manner until after he had ceased to be a Member of Congress.

Mr. EVANS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Washington yield to the gentleman from Montana?

Mr. BRYAN. In just a moment. The particular feature involving the ownership of the Post-Intelligencer by Senator Wilson or his heirs involves these headlines which were published the other day. I am not going back to that period so far as ownership is concerned. I am merely referring to those headlines. But surely the heirs of a man can not be allowed to take that man's own public acts and impute them to other men and call them "robberies."

Mr. EVANS. Do I understand the gentleman to say that Senator Clark was a Member of the Senate at that time?

Mr. BRYAN. I do so say.

Mr. EVANS. What was the date referred to—February, 1897?

Mr. BRYAN. The bill was introduced in March, 1897. I think that was the date.

Mr. EVANS. That is the date the gentleman stated.

Mr. BRYAN. I think I am not incorrect on that.

Mr. EVANS. I submit to the gentleman that Senator Clark was not in the Senate at that time, or for three or four years thereafter.

Mr. BRYAN. Well, if I am wrong in that I shall be glad to correct it, but the record I have consulted does not show otherwise, and you will find he was in the Senate during that period.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman yield to his colleague from the State of Washington?

Mr. BRYAN. I decline, Mr. Speaker, to yield but for a brief question.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Inasmuch as it has already been stated that Senator Wilson did not own the Seattle Post-Intelligencer until after he was in Congress, and since he is dead now, I can not see the reason for dragging his name in these remarks in this manner.

Mr. BRYAN. I think I will explain it before I finish my remarks. Senator Wilson was the right-hand bower of Senator Pettigrew in support of this amendment, and in the debates he said:

I do not know why the order should have been made as to the State of Washington. All of our rivers flow directly into Puget Sound. The two great rivers of the State, the Skagit and the Columbia, have their sources in British Columbia, and all the other rivers have a perpetual and everlasting supply until time shall be no more from the glaciers of Mount Rainier in addition, so that we have an annual rainfall in Washington of 108 inches. So it would seem, Mr. President, that there was no necessity, so far as preserving the watershed was concerned, for this withdrawal. All the timbers of western Washington that are merchantable are within 25 miles of the waters of Puget Sound. The timberlands withdrawn by this order do not contain merchantable timber. They only have their value, if any, for mineral purposes. I think the order extremely unfortunate.

Mr. Pettigrew of South Dakota rejoined:

We come and say that this ignorant act of a corrupt Executive shall be overturned.

This section of the amendment passed the Senate by a vote of 32 to 15.

MR. BARTLETT GOES AFTER THE "SAWDUST RING," BUT DIDN'T KNOW ITS NAME.

When the amendment reached the House an earnest effort was made by Mr. Hartman, of Montana, and others whom I might name, for its enactment. Mr. Bartlett, a Member from New York, championed the cause of the people and laid bare the purposes of the amendment and the purposes of the gentlemen who were favoring the amendment.

He said, in part:

I believe that all this opposition to the policy of forest reserves is inspired by the timber and railroad rings in our Western States and Territories. I am so informed by a gentleman of the highest credibility; so I say that we ought not to repeal this act just now. Bring it up in your new Congress. I believe that the vital force against us is the force of the men who control the timber and lumber rings [in western Washington we would say "sawdust ring"] in the States and Territories affected. I do not care to give their names, but their names are well known to the gentlemen who support this largely, and they are animated by a desire to please these lumber syndicates and are not prompted by any wish to please the settlers in their States.

AWAY WITH THE RESERVATION—THE COPPER KINGS NEED MONEY.

No doubt Mr. Bartlett was denounced and made a subject of ridicule by the reactionary press of the State of Washington. But how plain it is now as we look back to that period almost 20 years ago and consider recent events in connection with a statement made in the debate by Mr. Hartman, of Montana, who was championing the measure, to see the "paw of the beast" in the efforts of those who were then pretending to represent the people.

I want to say—

Said Mr. Hartman, of Montana—

upon the successful knocking out of this proclamation depends the great mining industries which in the city of Butte produced $212,000,000 of copper last year. On one mining property there was spent over $10,000,000 last year. This proposition of the President proposed to make it impossible for that great enterprise to be kept up.

It happened that the Anaconda Mining Co. all this time was gleefully and rapturously engaged in removing millions of feet of timber from the public domain without any adequate respect for the commandment "Thou shalt not steal."

J. J. HILL CALLS THE ROLL AND SELECTS SENATOR JOHN L. WILSON.

No roll call of men who have aided those who looked upon the public domain as a legitimate prey for acquiring by the most "practical" means that might be offered, without consideration of scruples or the public interest, is complete without the names of Senator Clark, of Montana; Senator Pettigrew, of South Dakota; and Senator John L. Wilson, of Washington; and that leader of all forest lovers and public-domain worshipers, Senator Guggenheim, of Colorado. These men seemed to actually believe that the quicker these resources were passed into private hands the better it would be for the country, and they were at times animated by sincere and honest purposes, no doubt.

Calling the roll and remembering these facts and noting particularly that John L. Wilson was still a Member of the United States Senate and was under substantial obligations to certain members of the group who desired to end the slow, cumbersome "retail" system and institute a "wholesale" method of acquiring the people's timberlands, they secured Senator Wilson's assistance. He introduced and successfully passed through Congress a bill which made possible the Mount Rainier land grab, concerning which my colleague has attempted to cast discredit upon the Forest Service, and which the Wilson paper—the stand-pat press—and Congressman HUMPHREY all now say was robbery.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has again expired.

Mr. BRYAN. Mr. Speaker, I would like to have a few minutes more. There is a part of this that I would not like to extend without first presenting it in open session of the House.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Washington may have five minutes more.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. GRAHAM] asks unanimous consent that the gentleman from Washington [Mr. BRYAN] may address the House for five minutes more. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. BRYAN. These awful charges having been uttered on the authority of Congressman HUMPHREY, who has made no denial of having made them; these headlines having come back here from the Seattle Post-Intelligencer and the Perkins Press, showing that Congressman HUMPHREY has accused the Forest Service and Gifford Pinchot of these thefts, and no denial having been made by the Congressman that he made any such charges, a brief review of the facts will not be out of place.

CONGRESSMAN HUMPHREY KNOWS THE FOREST SERVICE WAS WITHOUT BLAME.

I would not lay so much stress in this discussion upon this particular instance of loot except for a certain local coloring which the situation bears, through which it is impossible to believe that my colleague when he uttered the charge had any idea that it constituted a reflection on the Forest Service, but to the contrary, knew, as he knows his everyday political experiences, that the Forest Service had nothing to do with it, and that his own former political backer in the State of Washington, the man who, until his death last November, was one of the bosses of the Republican Party of the State of Washington and the proprietor of the Post-Intelligencer—a paper to which my colleague caused his speech to be sent in advance for publication—had engineered the legislative end of the loot through the United States Senate.

THE AUTHOR OF GREAT NORTHERN TIMBERLAND EXCHANGE WELL KNOWN.

I would not say a word in this debate that would hurt the feelings of those who survive one who has been summoned by that call to which we all must respond; but if it is wrong, discourteous, or unchivalrous to mention the name of a deceased citizen of my State in this connection, I lay the blame upon the shoulders of my colleague. He knew that the Mount Rainier lieu-land selections were made by the Northern Pacific Railroad under a statute passed through Congress under the leadership of Senator John L. Wilson, because the matter had been publicly discussed in my State on the stump, and the connection of the late Senator Wilson with this matter was one of the potent causes which led to his defeat by Senator POINDEXTER in 1910, when he sought reelection to the United States Senate. I shall not permit calumny to be wrongfully heaped upon an innocent man, and upon a useful bureau of this Government for a local political purpose in my State, especially when that purpose if successfully carried out will work injury to the public for all time to come. I am not referring to these matters to reflect upon the late Senator Wilson. He may have acted from his best impulses.

The Post-Intelligencer is now owned, unless recent transfer of stock has been made, by the heirs of the late Senator John L. Wilson, and yet my colleague here attempts to bring discredit and disgrace upon and render ineffective a great bureau of this Government which is handling millions upon millions of acres of the people's property by causing to be sent out in advance for publication in the Post-Intelligencer this false, misleading, and insincere charge.

SENATOR JOHN L. WILSON PUTS THROUGH THE MOST LIBERAL PERMIT TO THE NORTHERN PACIFIC.

After repeated attempts Senator Wilson got through the Senate on June 8, 1898, and the bill thus passed through the Senate became a law on March 2, 1899, the third section of which expressly gave to the Northern Pacific Railroad the right to select lands in lieu of land granted by Congress to it. The section of the bill referred to reads as follows:

That upon the execution and filing with the Secretary of the Interior by the Northern Pacific Railroad Co. of the proper deed releasing and conveying to the United States the lands in the reservation hereby created, also the lands in the Pacific Forest Reserve which have heretofore been granted by the United States to the said company, whether surveyed or unsurveyed, and which lie opposite said company's constructive road, said company is hereby authorized to select an equal quantity of nonmineral public land, classified as nonmineral at actual time of Government survey which has been made or shall be made to the United States in reserve and to which no adverse right or claim is or shall have attached or been initiated at time of the making of such selection lying within any State into or through which the railroad of said Northern Pacific Co. runs to the extent of the land so relinquished.

WHOLESALE SYSTEM BEGINS—450,000 ACRES AT A CLIP.

Then began the operation of this wholesale system. Three days after that act passed the Northern Pacific released about 450,000 acres in Rainier National Park, a large portion of which had been cut over or was worthless, and filed upon the most valuable timberland in the State of Washington, which almost immediately was transferred to the Weyerhaeuser interests.

In order to impress the utter fraud of these charges and the inexplicable condition of mind that prompted them it must be remembered that the Forest Service Bureau, against which my colleague and his stand-pat newspapers level their charges, was not in existence at all until March 2, 1901. The wholesale lieu exchanges for the Northern Pacific were made under the Wilson bill, which became a law March 2, 1899, two years before a Forest Service or bureau was born. Even when it was enacted into existence the powers of this bureau were limited to those similar to a bureau of plant industry; it had nothing whatever to do with administering the forests. It was designed purely for scientific investigation. The forests were being administered by Division P of the Interior Department.

ROOSEVELT AND PINCHOT CREATED PRESENT FOREST SERVICE IN 1905.

This Forest Service Bureau did not receive into its nostrils the real breath of life until Theodore Roosevelt and Gifford Pinchot, backed by a determined public opinion, in March, 1905, as soon as Roosevelt was President by his own right, after all lieu-land statutes had been repealed by and through the aid of his big stick, caused the administration of the forests to be transferred from the Interior Department to this bureau in the Department of Agriculture.

Yet we have the Seattle Post-Intelligencer, the Seattle Times, the Perkins Press, carrying as owner the name of Sam A. Perkins, the Republican national committeeman of Washington, who also owns a string of daily papers in western Washington and other reactionary papers in that portion of the State, heartily joining in a chorus of abusive headlines denouncing the Forest Service for these alleged lieu-land robberies, which largely occurred under the guiding spirit of the owner and editor of the Post-Intelligencer about 12 years before the Forest Service was given any power in the premises and two or more years before it was born, these awful charges being uttered on authority of Congressman HUMPHREY of Washington, who has made no denial. The newspapers referred to say my colleague made the charges. If he has been misquoted, he ought to say so.

"JUSTICE TO SETTLERS" USED AS MASK FOR LIEU-LAND LEGISLATION.

A brief statement as to the origin of the lieu-land statutes will not be out of place. In the creation of the reserves it of course became necessary in many cases to include lands that were acquired by entrymen under previous Federal statutes, and railroad and wagon-road grants were also included. In some cases there would be a homesteader in a sparsely settled valley included in the limits of a forest reserve. He was isolated, and to give such a settler relief was obviously the only solution; and to exchange his land for a similar tract outside the reserve was the fair thing to do.

But as is often the case, the just cause of the settlers was used as a mask by certain designing men. The cry made, purporting to come from the settlers, of the terrible hardships inflicted by the forest reserves, even in those days, were heard, much exaggerated, at every hand. To-day it is well known that this clamor for relief was largely manufactured not in the humble cabin of the "settlers" but in a great railroad office in the Middle West.

SENATOR PETTIGREW COMES TO THE RELIEF OF THE "SETTLER."

The lieu-land provision in Mr. Pettigrew's amendment to the sundry civil bill on June 4, 1897, read as follows:

Any person who may have acquired any lawful claim or right to land within any forest reservation, the order of which reservation shall remain in full force and effect, may, if he so desires, relinquish or reconvey the land to the United States and in lieu thereof may select and have patented to him, free of charge, a tract of land of like area, wheresoever there are public lands open for settlement.

This section passed the Senate, but when brought before the House was strongly opposed. It was substituted by an amendment in conference which is the lieu-land clause finally enacted, and which read:

That in cases in which a tract covered by an imperfect bona fide claim or by a patent included within the limits of a public forest reservation, a settler or owner thereof may, if he desires to do so, relinquish the tract to the Government and may select in lieu thereof a tract of vacant land open to settlement not exceeding in area the tract covered by his claim and no charge shall be made in such cases for making the entry of record or issuing the patent to cover the tract selected.

A BAD COMPROMISE, BUT WAS CONSIDERED THE BEST THAT COULD BE DONE.

It will be seen that the lieu-land selection, bad as it was, at that time was a compromise to offset the effort of certain Representatives and Senators to either abolish the forest reservations or to secure a lieu-land amendment, which would let down the bars for a wholesale depletion of the reservation.

The result of the lieu-land clause was soon evident. Mountain peaks, barren hillsides, lava beds, swamp lands, and other valueless holdings of great railway companies were released and the most valuable timber, coal, and oil lands within the States throughout the country, whether surveyed or unsurveyed, were taken upon exchange. Secretary Bliss refused to allow railroad grants to be exchanged, but permitted wagon roads, school, and other grants to be exchanged. However, when Mr. Hitchcock became Secretary of the Interior, he held the lieu-land clause allowed exchange with any "owner." The doors were let down for wholesale fraud and a national scandal resulted. Congress was well aware of this looting, however, right straight along, and the burden of action was certainly upon it.

Failure to repeal the law rests with Congress. As early as 1898 protests began coming into Congress against the law. In 1899 Gifford Pinchot entered the Bureau of Forestry, a bureau for agricultural experimentation, in the Department of Agriculture. It was then a bureau without power over the forests which were being administered in Division P of the Department of the Interior. In that same year in a public address Mr. Pinchot strongly urged the repeal of the lieu-land law, and from that time on actively urged its repeal on numerous occasions. Senator Beveridge, addressing the Senate on this subject on March 1, 1907, said:

I find that it is true, as the Senator from Oregon [Mr. Fulton] described, that large tracts of land in Washington which were worthless had been released and lieu lands taken out in valuable portions of Washington, but what has this bureau (the Forest Service) to do with that? Nobody intends to accuse any man falsely or condemning any man unjustly; the truth is that was done under the construction of the law by the Land Office itself several years ago, and one of the first and strongest objections to it within the Government was made by the Bureau of Forestry, and by Gifford Pinchot personally.

MUCH OF THE BLAME LIES AT THE DOOR OF CONGRESS.

Congress was certainly aware of this looting, because it was becoming notorious throughout the country, and yet on May 31, 1900, Senator Pettigrew offered an amendment to the sundry civil bill purporting to relieve the situation, which would have made the situation worse if it had become a law. It passed the Senate, but fortunately was substituted in the House by this amendment:

That the selection of lands made in lieu of a tract covered by an imperfected bona fide claim or by a patent included within a public forest reserve as provided by the act of June 4, 1897, entitled "An act, etc.," shall be confined to vacant surveyed nonmineral public lands which are subject to homestead entry not exceeding in area the tract covered by such claim or patent, provided nothing herein contained shall be constructed to affect the rights of those who previous to October 1, 1910, shall have delivered to the United States deeds for lands within various reservations and made application for specific tracts of land in lieu thereof.

This amendment was a compromise with the Senate, as the House was obviously in favor of repealing the entire law.

On March 31, 1901, another attempt was made to repeal the lieu-land law in its entirety, but again there was active opposition in Congress, and another compromise was made. In the spring of 1902 President Roosevelt called attention to the situation and suggested that legislation should remedy the situation. On October 22, 1903, the President appointed a Public Land Commission, consisting of W. A. Richards, F. H. Newell, and Gifford Pinchot, to investigate public-land conditions throughout the country, and on March 7 a preliminary report of this commission was sent to Congress, which recommended action on the lieu-land law. In December of this same year President Roosevelt sent a message of Congress, in which he said:

The making of forest reserves within railroad and wagon-road land-grant limits will hereafter, as for the past three years, be so managed as to prevent the issue, under the act of June 4, 1897, of base for exchange or lieu selection (usually called scrip). In all cases where forest reserves in areas covered by land grants appear to be essential to the prosperity of settlers, miners, or others, the Government lands within such proposed forest reserves will, as in the recent past, be withdrawn from sale or entry pending the completion of such negotiations with the owners of the land grants as will prevent the creation of so-called scrip.

ROOSEVELT'S BIG STICK STOPPED THE CROOKED WORK AS SOON AS HE WAS ELECTED.

The President, on February 13, 1905, transmitted to Congress the entire report of the commission, and recommended in part—the right to exchange land in forest reserves for lands outside should be withdrawn. Provision should be made for the purchase of needed private lands inside forest reserves or for the exchange of such lands for specified tracts of like area and value outside the reserves.

In April, 1904, the House reported a bill (H. R. 14622) for the repeal of the lieu-land clause. It passed and went to the Senate. It was not reported by the Senate Public Lands Committee until February, 1905, and contained the following substitute:

That the acts of June 4, 1897; June 6, 1900; March 3, 1901, are hereby repealed so far as they provide for the relinquishment, selection, and patenting of lands in lieu of tracts covered by imperfected bona fide claims of patent within a forest reserve, but the validity of contracts entered into by the Secretary of the Interior shall not be impaired.

This bill passed the Senate, and on March 3, 1905, the following conference report was made, signed by Senators Hansbrough, NELSON, and Barry; Representatives Lacey, MONDELL, and Lind:

Agreed House recede with amendment as follows: "That selections heretofore made in lieu of lands relinquished to the United States may be perfected and patents issued therefor the same as though this act had not been passed, and if for any reason not the fault of the party making same any pending selection is held valid, another selection for a like quantity of land may be made in lieu thereof."

When this bill was before the House Mr. Lind stated that he felt the entire selection should be repealed, but that the conferees could not get the Senate Members to accept this provision.

SEVEN HUNDRED AND FIFTY THOUSAND ACRES ELIMINATED FROM OLYMPIC NATIONAL FOREST FOR THE "SETTLERS."

In 1901 Congressman WESLEY L. JONES, now Senator from Washington, was in the House, and evidently being taken in by the continued importuning of the settlers through Senator Wilson and the repeated editorials and flaming news items of these stand-pat newspapers, took great interest in having eliminated 750,000 acres of heavily timbered lands in the Olympic National Forests of Washington. The cry was made that the lands thus eliminated were valuable for agriculture and should be thrown open to settlers in order to permit the development of western Washington.

I notice in the list of names who profited greatly by the elimination of these lands in the Olympic Forest Reserves several corporations who own large timber interests in Mason County, and in practically every county of the congressional district of my colleague [Mr. JOHNSON], who read the other day a telegram from the postmaster of Shelton, Wash., setting forth that the county of Mason had been loser so far as taxes had been concerned on account of forest reserves.

Ten years afterwards the following "settlers" had secured these lands:

Ten years later only about 600 acres of the entire elimination had been cultivated at all, and title to 523,720 acres had passed into the hands of large owners, with three companies holding 178,000 acres.

MOST VALUABLE LESSONS AFFORDED BY THE DETAILED RECORD OF THIS ELIMINATION.

This elimination of a half million acres of the best virgin timber in the world from the Olympic National Forest, in the State of Washington, the way it was done, and what happened to the timber as soon as it was eliminated is a record well worth reading. This data has been compiled at great expense of time and trouble.

This record shows where the shoe pinches; it shows what the land sharks are longing to do again, what they used to do in the good old days. It shows how the Washington Grand Old Party leaders have been deprived of a means of keeping precinct committeemen active. Is it any wonder Roosevelt received 50,000 majority over Taft in the State of Washington in the last election?

OLYMPIC NATIONAL FOREST—HOW A HALF MILLION ACRES, WORTH $20,000,000, WERE PASSED INTO THE HANDS OF THE BIG TIMBER BARONS.

This forest was established in 1897, with an area of 2,188,800 acres, upon the recommendation of the committee appointed by the National Academy of Sciences to report upon a forest policy for the United States. The great value of the magnificent forests in that region was clearly shown in the report of that committee, which states as follows:

THE OLYMPIC FOREST RESERVE.

This proposed reserve occupies the high and broken Olympic Mountain region in northwestern Washington and contains an estimated area of 2,188,800 acres. This is a region of steep and jagged mountains, their highest peaks clothed with glaciers and with perpetual snow. The forests here, watered by more copious rains than fall on any other part of the United States, are composed of enormous spruces, firs, and cedars, and in productiveness are surpassed in the world only by the redwood forests of the California coast region. Few explorers have penetrated far into this region, which, from the denseness of its forest covering, offers exceptional difficulties to travel, and there is no record that it has been crossed in a north and south direction. This proposed reserve no doubt contains for its area the largest and most valuable body of timber belonging to the Nation; and here is probably the only part of the United States where the forest, unmarked by fire or the ax, still exists over a great area in its primeval splendor. Toward the northwestern borders of the proposed reserve 1,532 quarter sections of land appear to have been entered, principally under the provisions of the timber and stone act; but this entered land can not be readily excluded from the reserve without seriously complicating its boundaries or without omitting a large body of unentered land which should properly belong to it.

There is no agricultural or grazing land whatever in this proposed reserve, and no traces of precious metals have yet been found in it. The character of its forests, which can be made to yield permanently vast quantities of timber, its wildness, the picturesqueness of its surface, and its remoteness make the proposed Olympic Reserve one of the most valuable of all the forest reserves which have been made or proposed.

The following year Mr. Gifford Pinchot made a report to the Secretary of the Interior upon certain of the national forests, which was published as Senate Document No. 189 (55th Cong., 2d sess.), in which he emphasized the importance of this forest, and stated that "changes in the boundaries should be wholly in the nature of an extension." He repeated the fact that "except the redwood belt of California, the Olympic Forest is finer and more productive than that of any other considerable division of the United States, and may be fairly called magnificent"; and he also pointed out that while "the heavily timbered land in the lower valleys of the streams is capable, when cleared, of producing agricultural crops," yet "the labor expended in clearing such land is altogether out of proportion to the results. Merely to fell and burn the standing trees, without extracting their stumps, would often involve an expenditure for labor, if the latter had to be hired, of more than $150 per acre, while the land itself, after clearing, is worth but a fraction of that sum."

Shortly after the establishment of the forest, however, requests and petitions for changes in its boundaries began to pour in upon the Department of the Interior from not only individuals, but from such bodies as the commissioners of Clallam and Jefferson Counties, Wash., and the Chamber of Commerce of Seattle. These petitions were also pressed with great insistence by Senator Foster and Congressman JONES, now Senator JONES.

The petitions claimed that the forest included large areas of agricultural lands, great portions of which had been surveyed and had been entered by bona fide homestead settlers, who had secured patents for them; that to hold these agricultural lands within the boundaries of a national forest was to work immeasurable injury to the settlers by arresting the development of their communities and denying to them the advantage of improved roads, schools, markets, and society, and also to the taxpayers and creditors of the counties affected, by taking from the tax rolls vast quantities of national-forest lands reconveyed to the Government through timber speculators which would otherwise be taxable for the payment of county obligations; and that it was important that the development of the agricultural resources of the counties affected should not be checked, and that Clallam and Jefferson Counties should be unhampered in their endeavor to discharge the large indebtedness incurred by them for public improvements.

The following summary regarding petitions for eliminations will show the "system" worked to get the "settlers" their due in this important case:

September 23, 1898, the county auditor of Clallam County, State of Washington, Mr. Thomas T. Aldwell, addressed a letter to Forest Supt. J. W. Cloes, transmitting a paper entitled:

Official statement from records of Clallam County, Wash., giving figures which demonstrate the great injustice which would be done to Clallam County and its creditors should the boundaries (of the Olympic Forest Reserve) not be changed.

This statement showed, in regard to Clallam County, the total debt and acreage, the acreage both inside and outside of the forest, and acreage of good farming land inside; census of schools and financial statement regarding schools and roads; and official votes cast in precincts located inside of the Clallam County portion of the forest.

On the strength of the figures shown in this statement the county auditor claimed that if the area of the forest was not reduced the portion of Clallam County included in its boundaries would become depopulated, since the people then living on those lands depended upon future growth of population for assistance in maintaining schools, roads, post offices, and so forth, and that if the farming lands included in the forest were not restored they would be unable to meet their financial obligations. He claimed that the vote cast represented "a population of over 1,400 people deriving a living on lands set apart as only fit for a forest reserve."

This showing by the county auditor was referred to Forest Supt. J. W. Cloes for examination and report.

November 2, 1898, Supt. Cloes submitted a report upon his examination of this northern portion of the forest and recommended the elimination of a considerable portion, upon the ground that it was better suited to agriculture than to forest purposes.

March 6, 1899, the Commissioner of the General Land Office made the following report to the Secretary of the Interior:

I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt, by reference from the department, for report thereon, of a letter from the Director of the United States Geological Survey, dated December 1, 1898, transmitting a letter from J. B. Hogg, treasurer of Jefferson County, Wash., in relation to securing the vacation of a part of the Olympic Forest Reserve, viz, townships 27 north, ranges 11, 12, 13, 14, and 15 west; townships 26 north, ranges 12, 13, and 14 west; and townships 24 north, ranges 11, 12, and 13 west, and also transmitting copy of a report made by Mr. Henry Gannett, of the Geological Survey, in relation to these lands.

Mr. Gannett's report shows that the townships in question are covered with heavy forests, and that the region is so remote from railroads or other means of transportation as to be of little value for agricultural purposes, and that "in this request for the relinquishment of lands from the forest reserve the presumption clearly is that the land is wanted not by the settler for agricultural use but by the lumberman."

In view of this statement by the Geological Survey in regard to the forest character of the lands in question I have the honor to report that I am of the opinion that it does not appear advisable to consider any proposal to eliminate the same from the forest reserve.

JOHN L. WILSON ON THE JOB "SINCERELY" WORKING FOR THE "SETTLER."

March 3, 1899, United States Senator John L. Wilson referred to the General Land Office a letter from the register of the local land office at Olympia, Wash., dated February 24, 1899, specifying 12 townships in the southern part of the forest which he thought should be eliminated. He stated:

This land is in many instances settled upon by actual settlers and much of it has been surveyed for many years. Many settlers have applied to this office seeking claims, and the opening up of this land to settlers would be a godsend to many deserving people.

In referring to this letter from the register, Senator Wilson stated:

I sincerely trust that the recommendations made herein can be carried out.

April 18, 1899, the register reported to the General Land Office that this recommendation was made to Senator Wilson in compliance with a personal request from the Senator to be furnished with data regarding the matter.

On March 6 and 29, 1899, respectively, the Commissioner of the General Land Office referred to the Geological Survey Supt. Cloes's report of November 2, 1898, recommending changes in the northern boundaries of the Olympic Forest, and the letter from the register of the Olympia land office, dated February 24, 1899, proposing changes in the southern boundary, and requested that the Geological Survey would consider those recommendations in connection with such information as it might possess respecting the character of the lands in question and submit an expression of views as to the advisability of making the boundaries conform to those recommendations; and also, in event the recommendations were not approved, that the director would furnish a diagram showing what he deemed advisable boundaries.

April 5, 1899, Supt. Cloes was also requested to make a personal examination of the lands which the register of the Olympia land office suggested should be taken out of the forest.

March 31, 1899, the Director of the Geological Survey repored to the Commissioner of the General Land Office as follows:

I beg to acknowledge receipt of your letter of the 29th instant concerning a recommendation made by the local land office at Olympia, Wash., that the southern boundary of the Olympic Forest Reserve be changed.

If this recommendation were carried out it would result in opening to entry or sale 22 townships, more or less, now in the southern part of the reserve.

Most of this land has been examined, and its character and the amount of timber upon it are matters of record in this office. None of this land is suitable for agricultural purposes. It is remote from all means of communication, and is so heavily forested as to preclude its being cleared for agricultural purposes. On the other hand, it is well known to contain vast quantities of valuable timber. Upon 18 of these townships the estimated total stand of timber is 8,608,000,000 feet b. m.

It is apparent that in this case, as in other cases from this region, the purpose is not to make available for settlement agricultural lands, but to obtain for the benefit of the lumber companies and the men employed by them the timber upon these lands, which is precisely what the Government wishes to prevent in setting them off as reserves.

Timber companies are now cutting at Matlock and at other points first south of the present south line of the reserve and shipping their lumber into Shelton by rail. It is not improbable that these companies have originated this movement.

April 13, 1899, Senator A. G. Foster, of Washington, stated in a letter to the Commissioner of the General Land Office as follows:

Re the eliminations from the Olympic Forest Reserve, also my conversations with you and your letter of March 3, inclosing map of the proposed eliminations, I desire to say that I have brought your views to the attention of the people of the section interested and am glad to report that they are well pleased with the proposed plan of elimination. There are a few changes to be suggested—excluding more land for settlers, but not any large amount—but the people believe it will be for their best interest to have the eliminations proposed go into effect at once without taking up the question of further changes at this time.

April 25, 1899, the Director of the Geological Survey forwarded to the General Land Office reports from Mr. Henry Gannett, geographer, and Mr. Gifford Pinchot, Forester, upon the recommendations made by Supt. Cloes on November 2, 1898, for the elimination of lands in the northern part of the forest.

Mr. Gannett's report showed as follows:

Of this region I have maps showing the timbered, burned, and cut areas and the stand of timber. From these maps it appears that the area proposed to be taken from the reserve embraces practically all the land containing merchantable timber, leaving only the high mountains, upon which the timber is inferior in quality and stand. The total amount of timber upon the area thus proposed to be cut out of the reserve is, as derived from estimates of cruisers, 6,900,000,000 feet b. m. Of this, about one-fourth consists of tideland spruce, being probably the finest body of timber of this valuable species in the country. About one-half of it is cedar, of much value for the manufacture of shingles. The remainder consists of red and yellow fir, the staple timber of the northwest coast, and hemlock.

The stand of timber in this region is exceptionally heavy, averaging over the entire area of 450,000 acres not less than 15,000 feet per acre.

The agricultural development of this region must, under the prevalent conditions, be extremely slow, owing to the vast expense incident to clearing the land for farming, from $100 to $200 per acre, and the absolute lack of transportation facilities.

I would suggest, as a means of meeting the needs of the people involved in this matter, that, instead of reducing the area of the reserve, it be provided that all lands which can be shown to be more valuable for agricultural than for other purposes be opened to entry wherever found, the purpose of the Government being to retain the timberlands in its own hands. That purpose would be fully carried out by taking such action and the interests of the settlers will be guarded.

Mr. Pinchot reported as follows:

In accordance with your request of the 11th instant, I have the honor to submit the following statement in relation to the character of the country proposed to be excluded from the Olympic Forest Reserve by Forest Supt. Cloes in his letter to the honorable Commissioner of the General Land Office: Under instructions from the honorable Secretary of the Interior I examined, among others, the Olympic Forest Reserve and reported upon it. In the course of this examination I traversed a large part of, perhaps the larger part of, the route passed over by Mr. Cloes, and made a careful examination touching the most important points which he discusses. Abandonment of claims was at that time in full swing and had been for some time before, for the reason that the immense labor of clearing the enormously heavy forest from the land was out of all proportion to the returns the cleared land was capable of producing. The cost of this clearing is in the neighborhood of $200 per acre, and the cleared land is worth less than a fourth of that sum. Very many of the settlers were able to hold their claims only by leaving them during a large part of the year to earn money elsewhere. With the exception of the prairies referred to by Mr. Cloes, I saw no land of any extent so well suited for agriculture as for forestry. The excessive rainfall over a large part of this region adapts it poorly for farming, while the soil over a considerable part of the area is a poor gravel. The destruction of values which would be caused by the clearing of this land, over and above any possible agricultural return from it, would be very large indeed.

It is to be observed that the rights of all settlers in forest reserves are fully protected under the law, that the President has power to exclude from the reserves any land which may be shown to be more valuable for agriculture than for forestry, and that in other regions, as, for example, in the Black Hills, populations many times greater than that of Clallam County within the reserve are included by reserve boundaries. In the Black Hills, for example, an addition of nearly half a million acres has been made to the reserve since its original proclamation, with the consent and at the request of the people and their Representative in Congress. It is to be feared that the people of Clallam County do not yet thoroughly understand the effect of the law and the regulations governing the forest reserves, as was for some time the case within other reserves. The destruction of the forests which protect the watersheds in the Olympic Range will be followed by great increases in the floods, which are already of the most serious character.

In conclusion, let me say that in my judgment Clallam County will be immensely richer by the wise development of its timber resources under Government supervision than if it should succeed in this attempt to exchange great values in timber for smaller values in agricultural land.

May 11, 1899, Supt. Cloes submitted a report upon his personal examination of the lands proposed to be released in the southern portion of the forest and recommended the elimination of an extensive area. The report went into details in respect to the several townships, regarding the character of the land, the settlers on them, amount of rainfall, and so forth, and finally summarized the conclusions reached as follows:

After due consideration I am of the opinion that the future water and timber supply will always be sufficient for the coming generation. * * *

Taking everything into consideration, the excessive annual rainfall, the numerous streams that have their sources in the higher altitudes, and the impossibility of denuding the remaining portion of the reserve of timber (excepting by fire), on account of being so inaccessible, I would recommend that the above-described portions be eliminated from the Olympic Forest Reserve.

Letters were also received from time to time from settlers remonstrating against the inclusion of various areas, upon the ground that settlement was retarded thereby. One of the settlers, however, in this southern portion of the forest, Mr. R. Le Bar, of Hoods Port, Wash., addressed a letter to the Secretary of the Interior on May 28, 1899, attacking the veracity of Mr. Cloes's report as regards the lands in townships 22 and 23 north, range 5 west.

The wide discrepancies between the statements made by Supt. Cloes and the facts officially reported through the Geological Survey led the Interior Department to place the forest under the care of Supt. D. B. Sheller in May, 1899, to whom all the correspondence, both for and against the proposed eliminations, was turned over for examination of the areas and report thereon.

June 12, 1899, Supt. Sheller forwarded to the General Land Office a petition, signed by 40 settlers, for the exclusion of "all the fine agricultural lands" in the western portion of Jefferson County.

September 7, 1899, the board of county commissioners for Clallam County, Wash., and the county auditor, Thomas T. Aldwell, addressed a petition to the Secretary of the Interior urging that the boundaries of the forest be so modified as to give back the farming lands and restore to the settlers the right to have neighbors come in and assist in supporting schools, building roads, and so forth. The petition inclosed a copy of the official financial statement from records of Clallam County, showing the total debt and facts and figures regarding the schools, roads, bridges, votes, and so forth, which had been previously forwarded by Auditor Aldwell on September 23, 1898.

The petitioners enlarged upon the showing made in this statement and claimed that if the farming lands were not restored the county would be forced into bankruptcy.

This petition was promptly reenforced by the following telegram sent on September 16 by Hon. WESLEY L. JONES (then a Member of Congress, now United States Senator) to the Secretary of the Interior:

I urge modification of Olympic Forest Reserve, to leave out part of Clallam County, as per their petition of September 7.

Two days later than the date of the petition, September 9, 1899, ex-State Senator R. C. Wilson addressed a letter to the commissioner of public lands, Olympia, Wash., fortifying him with facts regarding the region in the forest lying north and west of the Olympic Mountains, along the same general lines as the petition from the board of commissioners for Clallam County, to be laid before the officials of the Interior Department by the commissioner of public lands, in person, upon making a proposed visit to Washington, D. C.

This letter, which inclosed another copy of Auditor Aldwell's statement from the records of Clallam County, in addition to discussing the impending bankruptcy claimed to be threatening Clallam and Jefferson Counties in consequence of the inclusion in the forest of lands alleged to be valuable for settlement, claimed further that the "exchange provision" in the act of June 4, 1897 (30 Stat., 34-36), was resulting in causing a further exodus of settlers. Inclosed were supporting letters and statements from the judge of the superior court of Washington for the counties of Clallam, Jefferson, and Island, the president of a bank in Port Angeles, Wash., a cruiser, locator, and surveyor, and the president of the Washington Fur Co. and certain editorial comments.

SOMETHING MUST BE DONE QUICK FOR THE "SETTLERS."

On the following date, September 10, ex-State Senator R. C. Wilson telegraphed to United States Senator A. G. Foster, at Washington, D. C., as follows:

Delay in reducing Olympic Reserve is working havoc. Settlers expect no relief. Sacrificing everything. Clallam will be utterly ruined. Homesteaders, taxpayers, creditors, politicians, all unite in praying for immediate action reducing, as recommended by Cloes or Sheller, as a starter.

Upon Senator Foster bringing this telegram to the attention of the Commissioner of the General Land Office the commissioner wired Supt. Sheller on September 11 hastening his report, and on September 16 requested the Director of the Geological Survey to have the pending survey of this forest made special, as regards the Clallam County portion, in order to "facilitate the efforts of this office to give immediate relief to the many local interests reported to be suffering through the present inability of this office to take action in the matter."

In making this request, the commissioner stated:

I have been further advised by Senator A. G. Foster in respect to the great urgency that exists for immediate action in regard to determining whether or not the portion of this reserve lying in Clallam County shall be eliminated from the reservation.

September 26, 1899, the Director of the Geological Survey, in replying to this request, stated:

Concerning the representations which are being made, that important local interests are suffering because of the nonadjustment of the lines of this reserve, I beg to state that from information in possession of this office it is apparent that the only interests which are suffering in the slightest degree are those of the lumbermen and millmen, who are desirous, naturally, of having large areas of the best timber land in this reserve set apart from it. There is not an acre of land within the present limits of the reserve which, under existing conditions, is of the slightest value for agriculture.

The information upon which this conclusion is based has been forwarded to your office in connection with applications for the reduction of the reserve.

October 7, 1899, the board of commissioners for Jefferson County, Wash., petitioned the Secretary of the Interior for the elimination of lands in this county, basing their request upon practically the same grounds as had been urged in regard to the case of Clallam County.

On October 4, 1899, a petition, signed by 35 residents of Clallam County, was sent to the President of the United States, praying that portions of the forest where farms and homes had been established might be excluded, on the ground that Clallam County had about 200,000 acres of good farming land.

SEATTLE CHAMBER OF COMMERCE SENDS RESOLUTIONS.

November 16, 1899, the Chamber of Commerce of Seattle, Wash., forwarded to the Secretary of the Interior copy of a resolution by that body, praying that the boundaries of the forest be so modified as to exclude all lands suitable for agriculture, since to leave the boundaries unchanged would work immeasurable injury to the settlers by arresting the development of the communities through checking the growth of schools, markets, roads, and society; and also taking taxpayers and creditors of the counties, by taking from the tax rolls vast quantities of reserve lands reconveyed to the Government through timberland speculators, and which otherwise would be taxable for the county obligations.

November 23, 1899, Supt. Sheller forwarded to the General Land Office his report upon his examination, and recommended that the area of the forest be considerably reduced, and that two slight additions be made.

The submission of this official report in the matter appeared to be the signal for renewed activity on the part of Auditor Aldwell, Senator Foster, and others in bombarding the Interior Department with urgent requests for elimination of lands.

The following letter from Auditor Aldwell to Senator Foster, under date of December 7, 1899, and Senator Foster's indorsement thereon speak for themselves:

I am sending you under this cover some data for your reference on the boundary of the reserve in this county. There are four statements, as follows:

Showing lands on which final counts or patents have issued.
Showing homestead entries not yet proved upon.
Showing State and school lands in reserve.
Total lands in reserve given to State and settlers.

I have attached official certificates to all these, and am also sending you under separate cover a map illustrating these statements in colors. I think these will be useful to you in giving an object lesson to the department. I also inclose, if you require it, a list released back to the United States to November 14, 1899, 26,809 acres.

There is also on file a map with the department, showing all the post offices, roads, etc.; this is a large map and cost $100—it was submitted with Dr. Cloes's report.

For ready reference and to refresh your memory on it, I am inclosing a copy of my letter and statement to the department. I think the data will about cover what you will require. If there is any further way in which I can assist you, please advise me.

If you are successful in getting the department to take action, as I believe and sincerely hope you will be, if you wire me at my expense you will confer a great favor on

Yours, very sincerely, THOS. T. ALDWELL.

December 14, 1899, Senator Foster referred this letter with its inclosures to the Commissioner of the General Land Office indorsed:

For consideration in connection with the urgent demands for immediately releasing the valley lands and foothills from the Olympic Forest Reserve. * * * Also please notify me immediately when action has been taken regarding the subject at issue.

HUNDREDS OF "SETTLERS" WAITING FOR HOMESTEADS.

This was followed by a telegram from Auditor Aldwell to both Senator Foster and Congressman Cushman, as follows:

Hundreds of settlers waiting to file homesteads in reserve. Most advantageous order reducing boundaries would fix date of change three months ahead, and give those who make settlement during that period prior right to file homesteads within 90 days after date of opening, otherwise State selections and corporation scrip will prejudice settlers from whom land was taken and badly retard growth of country.

Senator Foster referred his telegram to the Secretary of the Interior, while Mr. Cushman referred his to the Commissioner of the General Land Office.

Senator Foster's indorsement requested:

That I be informed if it is possible to comply with the suggestions of the auditor of Clallam County, Wash., and the settlers represented by him. Also I desire to urge the absolute necessity of prompt action in this matter of excluding certain lands from the Olympic Reserve in Clallam and Jefferson Counties, in the State of Washington, as per reports of the Geological Survey and the superintendent of forest reserves for the State of Washington.

CERTAIN "NEWSPAPERS" WERE THEN, AS WELL AS NOW, HELPING THE "SETTLERS."

Mr. Cushman, in laying the matter of the telegram before the Commissioner of the General Land Office, requested as follows:

In the first place, it has been stated in the newspapers that a large reduction of the limits of this forestry reserve has been recommended. Please inform me what officers or agents of your department recommended this, when it was recommended, and at what time will your office act definitely on this recommendation?

I also desire to say that the suggestions contained in the above telegram appear to me unusually sound. Please inform me, if possible, what will be the probable action of your department on the prior filing right of settlers and the limit of time so given. Please favor me with an early answer.

On January 2, 1900, the Chamber of Commerce of Port Townsend, Wash., also called the attention of the Secretary of the Interior to the need for modifying the boundaries of this forest.

In the meantime the General Land Office received on December 16, 1899, from the office of the Secretary of the Interior a letter from the Director of the Geological Survey, dated December 13, 1899, inclosing a letter from Mr. Henry Gannett, geographer, transmitting a report from Messrs. Dodwell and Rixon, forest experts, upon the northern portion of the Olympic Forest.

January 31, 1900, the Commissioner of the General Land Office laid before the Secretary of the Interior both the report made by Supt. Sheller on November 23, 1899, and the papers received from the Director of the Geological Survey, under date of December 13, 1899, with all the other papers in the case, and transmitted the draft of a proclamation changing the boundaries of the forest to conform to the recommendation made by Supt. Sheller.

The wide difference, however, in certain respects between Supt. Sheller's report and the report from the Geological Survey led the Secretary of the Interior to personally direct the Commissioner of the General Land Office to call Mr. Sheller's attention to the differences and request an explanation in the matter. This led to the following letter being addressed to Supt. Sheller on February 13, 1900, by the commissioner, paralleling the conflicting statements:

I am in receipt of your report made November 23, 1899, submitting the findings of a personal examination made by you of certain portions of the Olympic Forest Reserve, which you recommend be excluded from the reserve.

These findings appear to be widely at variance with the report received from the United States Geological Survey under date of December 13, 1899, as shown by the following extracts from each of said reports:

REPORT FROM UNITED STATES GEOLOGICAL SURVEY, DECEMBER 13, 1899.

(Pages 158, 876.)

They (Messrs. Dodwell and Rixon) recommend the exclusion of large areas upon the west side of both these counties and on the north in Clallam County. They recommend also slight additions upon the east side of both counties. All these proposed changes are shown upon the map transmitted herewith. In the case of Clallam County the exclusions amount to 455 square miles, and in Jefferson County to 318 square miles, a total of 773 square miles. This comprises nearly all the level country now within the reserve in these two counties. This area is heavily forested, the stand of timber upon it being estimated at 7,281,000,000 feet b. m., of which 464,000,000 feet is fir, 1,921,000,000 feet is cedar, 1,808,000,000 is spruce, and 3,098,000,000 is hemlock. The spruce and cedar timber are of special value, and, indeed, form the finest body of this timber in the State.

In this report Messrs. Dodwell and Rixon appear to define as agricultural land all land which is at all level without any regard to the question whether it is forested or not. Since, according to their statement, it cost $150 per acre to REPORT BY SUPT. D. B. SHELLER, NOVEMBER 23, 1899.

(Pages 154, 174.)

The average of the whole of the western part of the Olympic Reserve, which I examined, can be termed "comparatively level," and, in my opinion, better adapted to farming and grazing than for the timber. The timber is principally hemlock and spruce, and of a knotty and unmerchantable nature, and at present of no commercial value; but when this land is taken up and farmed, the timber removed therefrom, the future benefits derived will be of a greater value than the timber value at the present time. Of the spruce there is very little that can be considered first class. In certain spots it is good, but not of sufficient quantity to be of especial value.

TIMBER.

The greater part is hemlock, and of a stunted growth in comparison to hemlock forests in other parts of the State; especially is this true of that part near the Pacific coast, and in my opinion never could become first class and merchantable. Hemlock trees a foot in diameter in a great many places examined were found to be over 125 to 140 years old. In other localities in this same exam-clear this land for agriculture, being several times as much as the land will be worth when cleared for agricultural purposes, it is at least an open question whether this land should be classed as agricultural land. That these lands are of little value for agriculture, even when cleared, is apparent from the fact that far the greater majority of the holdings have been abandoned, and has been abandoned before this area was included in the forest reserve.

ination the same age of timber was found to be 2 feet in diameter. Along and near the Solduck and Calawa Rivers and in the southern part of the reserve in townships 21, 22, 23, and 24 is the only good first-class merchantable fir timber in the territory examined, all or most of which is patented and no residents now living on the land. This I have invariably found to be the case on all timberlands.

This examination extends to the townships named herein omitting the east half of township 27–11 and townships 27–14, 33–14, 32–14, and north part of 31–15 and 31–16. This I could not examine owing to the condition of the trails, streams, and weather. From the information that I have received in relation to the same, I am disposed to believe that the agricultural land will average with the balance of the land examined, and that the timber can not be of value from the fact of exposure to storms and precipitation in that locality.

SETTLERS.

The settlers now living on their lands took the same with the intention to make permanent homes, and for no other purposes, as their improvements will testify, and from the fact of their living there at the present time.

The class of settlers that took good timber for homesteads have made their final proof and are gone. No settlers remained with speculative intent. A great many have sold out for what they were offered, and most of the land so sold has been returned to the United States, and should this land be reopened for settlement many a homesteader would have an opportunity to again take up these lands that have habitable building in which to make a beginning and at the expense of the settler who sold out.

From inquiry I found that these settlers sold their lands because of the great disturbance which appears to have been created by scrip speculators, there being about 26,500 acres reconveyed to the United States in Clallam County, while I find about 6,500 acres reconveyed to the United States. A portion reconveyed in the northern part and western part is in its natural state, except what has been cleared for agricultural purposes, while the greater part in the southern part of the reserve which has been reconveyed is absolutely worthless for either agricultural or timber, most of it being logged off lands and then fired from what cause I can not at present ascertain.

I could not find a single instance in which a first-class tract of 160 acres of timberland had been reconveyed to the United States. From the topography of the country I find that it will be impossible to incorporate all of the lands better adapted to forest purposes as well as to exclude all of the lands better adapted to farming purposes from the boundaries as recommended. The forest lands will not be injured to any great extent, and the settler will retain his rights. For these reasons, taken in connection with my personal examination and finding land that will in my opinion be more valuable for farming, grazing, and stock raising and giving to the people their just rights, as well as protecting the forests of Washington, I respectfully recommend * * *.

In view of the wide difference in these statements, it is desired that you will submit a report explaining whether the statements made by you are the result simply of a general survey of the region, or whether you made a close personal examination of the size, density, and value of the timber on all townships, and of the nature and value of the soil, accompanied with a careful investigation into the matter of the settlement and other claims.

Report as directed at once.

Very respectfully,

BINGER HERMANN,
Commissioner.

February 20, 1900, Supt. Sheller, in response, made a supplemental report sustaining, in effect, the substance of his report of November 23, 1899.

March 17, 1900, Mr. Henry Gannett, of the Geological Survey, addressed a letter to the Commissioner of the General Land Office, stating as follows:

I am sending to the Secretary by this mail a memorandum of the areas agreed upon for exclusion from the Olympic Forest Reserve of Washington at the conference held March 15, and inclose a duplicate of the memorandum herewith to you.

On March 29, 1900, the Secretary of the Interior returned all the papers in the case and directed that the Commissioner of the General Land Office prepare and submit to the department at his earliest convenience a draft of a proclamation releasing certain specified areas, the tracts specified being, practically, the ones designated in a duplicate memorandum furnished the General Land Office by Mr. Gannett on March 17, 1900.

A second proclamation was accordingly issued, on April 7, 1900, excluding these areas, all of which lay in Clallam County.

In drafting this proclamation the Commissioner of the General Land Office, in accordance with the suggestion received through Senator Foster and Congressman Cushman, inserted a provision to secure parties desiring to make bona fide settlements under the homestead law an opportunity to do so in advance of the lands being covered by State selections or scrip by corporations.

These Clallam County areas were, however, no sooner released than another effort was put on foot to secure also the release of lands in the southern portion of the forest.

On June 1, 1900, Senator Foster wrote a most urgent letter to the Secretary of the Interior for the elimination of Jefferson County lands, basing his request upon the various requests and petitions previously made in behalf of Jefferson County and utilizing the Clallam County exclusions as an argument in favor of similar action in Jefferson County. The letter was so urgent that the Secretary of the Interior, in referring it to the Commissioner of the General Land Office, directed him to "submit a report with recommendation on the subject matter of the letter at an early day."

June 9, 1900, the Commissioner of the General Land Office reported adversely upon this request on the ground that the Secretary of the Interior had all of the correspondence relating to the requested eliminations in Jefferson County before him for consideration when he determined upon the boundaries which were established by the proclamation issued on April 7, 1900.

Further requests followed from time to time from Senator Foster, Congressman JONES, and individuals for changes in the southern boundary; and finally, on February 15, 1901, the board of commissioners for Clallam County addressed a letter to the Secretary of the Interior urging further eliminations in Clallam County, a copy of which was also forwarded to the Commissioner of the General Land Office, on February 16, by Deputy County Auditor Thomas T. Aldwell.

This action was promptly followed up by Senator Foster, who, on February 25, 1901, wrote to the Commissioner of the General Land Office indorsing it, and urging that the whole matter of changes in boundaries not only in Clallam County but in Jefferson and Chehalis Counties as well be taken up and disposed of by issuing a further proclamation for the removal from the forest of the desired farming lands in all three counties.

February 28, 1901, Senator Foster referred to the Secretary of the Interior a petition from the Chamber of Commerce, Port Townsend, Wash., for the restoration of Jefferson County lands, based upon substantially the same grounds as previously urged.

March 11, 1901, Senator Foster requested the Commissioner of the General Land Office to furnish him as speedily as possible, for the purpose of complying with a suggestion made by the Secretary of the Interior, a brief synopsis of all pending applications for eliminations from this and all other forests in the State of Washington; adding that the delegation from the State of Washington expected to appear shortly before the Secretary of the Interior to present arguments in behalf of further eliminations from those forests.

March 13, 1901, the requested data was furnished to Senator Foster.

March 14, 1901, Senator Foster referred to the Commissioner of the General Land Office a letter from the president of the Port Townsend Chamber of Commerce and a petition signed by nearly 100 residents of western Jefferson County, praying for the elimination of that part of the forest.

March 16, 1901, Hon. WESLEY L. JONES, then Member of Congress, now United States Senator, addressed a letter to the Secretary of the Interior stating:

Complying with your personal suggestion and request of a few days ago, I desire to submit to you a statement relative to eliminations of land from forest reserves in the State of Washington.

This statement urged the elimination of the tract in the northwestern part of Clallam County which had been severed from the body of the forest by the proclamation of April 7, 1900, claiming that it was the largest area of bottom land in the county, and was of great value for agricultural purposes.

"WONDERFUL SETTLEMENT" SAYS SENATOR WESLEY L. JONES.

(See list for names of "settlers.")

The result of the elimination made last year in Clallam County has been wonderful. Many settlers have come in, and old settlers have returned, and there is a general feeling of cheerfulness and prosperity. They also wish to eliminate certain other sections and townships which are set out in another petition. They allege there is good bottom land in this portion, and much that can be used for agricultural purposes. The main reason for asking that this land be eliminated, however, seems to be on account of the principal county road running through the territory, and it is desired to have this road run through taxable property as much as possible because of the expense in keeping it up.

The statement also went on to sustain, in effect, the petitions and data filed by the authorities and citizens of Jefferson County in regard to desired elimination of lands in that county.

This letter from Congressman JONES bore the following indorsement:

I concur in the foregoing.

A. G. FOSTER,
United States Senator from Washington.

In referring this statement to the General Land Office for appropriate action the Acting Secretary of the Interior referred also a statement made to the Secretary upon the subject by Senator Foster, under date of March 14, 1901, which again recited at length the facts and circumstances claimed to necessitate the release of the lands in question.

June 18, 1901, the Acting Secretary of the Interior referred to the General Land Office for report thereon a letter from the Director of the Geological Survey, dated April 16, 1901, stating as follows:

The survey and examination of the Olympic Forest Reserve has, after three years of work by a body of cruisers, been completed, and maps and diagrams representing the topography and the stand and distribution of timber have been prepared, together with a manuscript report. In addition to this the Land Office has furnished upon a map of the reserve a statement of the lands within its limits which have been alienated by the Government.

From a study of the data above enumerated I am prepared to make recommendations for the elimination of lands from this reserve. It will be recalled that eliminations were made a year ago from the northern part of this reserve; that is, the portion contained in Clallam County. The present recommendations relate to the areas comprised in the counties of Mason, Chehalis, and Jefferson. These eliminations are, as will be seen by reference to the map, in comparatively level country that is heavily forested which may be of value for agriculture when cleared, although clearing the lands for this purpose is an expensive operation. These areas consist in great part of lands which have been disposed of by the Government.

The letter transmitted a list and map showing the lands recommended for exclusion.

On June 29, 1901, the Commissioner of the General Land Office made the following report upon the matter:

The honorable the SECRETARY OF THE INTERIOR.

SIR: I have the honor to invite attention to a letter addressed by this office to the department under date of January 31, 1900, transmitting a report (see 1899—154, 174) made November 23, 1899, by Forest Supt. D. B. Sheller, recommending changes in the boundaries of the Olympic Forest Reserve in the State of Washington and setting forth urgent reasons for a considerable reduction in the area of the reserve. I transmit herewith a map of said reserve, marked "Exhibit 1," showing the changes recommended by Supt. Sheller.

On April 7, 1900, a second proclamation was issued in this case, eliminating a large portion of the lands so recommended. (See Exhibit 11 herewith.)

Since then petitions and requests have been received from the Washington delegation in Congress and the county officers of Clallam and Jefferson Counties and from others for yet further eliminations, which has resulted in the petitions being forwarded to Supt. Sheller for further report, which report has not yet been received.

I am now, however, in receipt, by reference from the department, on the 18th instant, "for consideration, report, and recommendation, with return of papers," of a letter from the United States Geological Survey, dated April 16, 1901 (97116), submitting a recommendation as to advisable eliminations from the portions of the reserve lying in the counties of Mason, Chehalis, and Jefferson, which proposed eliminations I have indicated upon thee above-mentioned map, marked "Exhibit 11."

A careful study of this recommendation by the Geological Survey, in connection with the above-mentioned recommendation and in the case made by Supt. Sheller, and the various requests for eliminations from the reserve convinces me that the interests of the public demand that undoubtedly a further readjustment should be made of the boundaries of this reserve, with a view of releasing therefrom additional areas which are shown to be more valuable for other purposes than for forest uses, or which contain lands which have, in large part, been disposed of by the Government.

As regards the eliminations suggested by the Geological Survey, they appear to be warranted by both the topography and general character of the country and the status of the lands involved, which have to a great extent been disposed of.

Since to effect these changes will necessitate the issuing of a third proclamation in this case, it would undoubedly be well in so doing to complete all advisable changes in the entire boundary of the reserve, as suggested by Hon. A. G. Foster (U. S. S.) in a letter addressed to this office on February 25, 1901 (31071, herewith), in which he states, in connection with the request from the officers of Clallam County, as follows.

"I am most heartily in favor of further eliminations from the Olympic Reserve, not only in Clallam County but in Jefferson and Chehalis Counties. In my opinion this whole matter should be taken up jointly as regards the desired eliminations in the three counties, with a view to providing an Executive proclamation for the removal of such lands as are suitable for farming purposes and the elimination of which is calculated to result in the further settlement and importance of the district affected."

I accordingly invite attention to the further proposed changes requested by the officers of Clallam County, as indicated on the large map of that county herewith, marked "Exhibit A," Senator A. G. Foster," and also to the elimination of the western portion of Jefferson County requested by the officers of that county and indicated on the blue print inclosed in Senator Foster's letter, herewith, dated February 28, 1901 (36372).

As regards the requested eliminations in Clallam County, I am of opinion as follows:

The tract of land lying in the extreme northwestern corner and detached from the body of the reserve does not appear to be needed as a water conservative, but Supt. Sheller's said report states that from information received regarding the same he is "disposed to believe that the timber can not be of value from the fact of exposure to storms and precipitation in that locality."

In regard to this area Hon. WESLEY L. JONES, in a letter addressed to the department on March 12, 1901 (43408 herewith), which was concurred in by Hon. A. G. Foster (U. S. S.), stated as follows:

"Data has been filed in your department relative to lands in the northwestern corner of Clallam County. This was formerly a part of the Olympic Forest Reserve, but last year your department eliminated quite a large tract of land from the Olympic Reserve, and by such elimination some of the reserve was cut off by itself. At the time it was desired to have this land also eliminated, but you stated you would leave this for further investigation. Further statement relative thereto has been filed with your department, and I feel justified in asking that this land also be eliminated. It is alleged that this is good agricultural land and it is not very heavily timbered. It is the best area of bottom land in the country and will be of great value for agricultural purposes."

The fact that holding this tract in the reserve withdraws from general use a water frontage of fully 20 miles along the Pacific coast and that of the Strait of San Juan de Fuca adds a further reason for not containing it in the reserve.

The need for the eliminations requested in township 29 north, range 11 west, and townships 29 and 30 north, range 12 west, appears to be borne out by Supt. Sheller's said report, on which point Hon. WESLEY L. JONES, in the above-mentioned letter, states as follows:

"The result of the elimination made last year in Clallam County has been wonderful. Many settlers have come in and old settlers have returned, and there is a general feeling of cheerfulness and prosperity. They also wish to eliminate certain other sections and townships which are set out in another petition. They allege that there is good bottom land in this portion and much that can be used for agricultural purposes. The main reason for asking that this land be eliminated, however, seems to be on account of the principal county road running through the territory, and it is desired to have this road run through taxable property as much as possible because of the expense in keeping it up."

As regards the further requested elimination in Clallam County of the small strip of land in township 29 north, range 6 west, the same does not seem to have been examined by Supt. Sheller, but since it is rough, unsurveyed land it does not appear to be of a character calling for its restoration to the public domain, and as it lies directly on the border of the reserve it further appears that no serious injury would result to the settlers thereon by retaining it in the reserve.

As regards the request by the officers of Jefferson County for the elimination of all that portion of the reserve lying west of the range line between ranges 9 and 10 west, I am of the opinion that the extent of territory thus proposed to be released from the reserve is far too great, since it comprises a large extent of high mountainous country. In regard to the same Hon. WESLEY L. JONES, in his said letter, states as follows:

"As I understand it, this reserve takes up about two-thirds of Jefferson County. A great many acres are along streams in the valleys and are good for agricultural purposes, and, in my judgment, should be eliminated. Indebtedness was contracted before the reserve was laid out and to-day bankruptcy threatens the county because of the establishment of the reserve."

As shown above, the eliminations suggested in this region by the Geological Survey should undoubtedly be made; and, after a study of Supt. Sheller's report, I am of the opinion that possibly it would be well to extend the same somewhat with a view to restoring to settlement the valley lands of the Hoh, Clearwater, and Queets Rivers lying west of the Olympic Mountains, and also the whole of township 21 north, range 10 west, and fractional township 21 north, range 11 west. On this point Supt. Sheller's report states:

"The question of conservative water flow should not be taken into consideration on this examination, as the precipitation west of the Olmypic Mountains is always sufficient to guarantee a good water flow, even should the timber along the streams be removed, the origin of these streams being far above where this examination was made."

THE WASHINGTON DELEGATION GETS 480,000 ACRES ELIMINATED FOR THE "SETTLERS" (SEE THE LIST).

In view of all the above-recited facts, I have indicated upon the inclosed map of the Olympic Forest Reserve, which is marked "Exhibit 111," what would seem to be advisable limits for this reserve, which, if adopted, would restore to the public domain all of the lands suggested by the Geological Survey and would further meet the urgent and insistent requests of the Washington delegation and county officers as far as it appears consistent with the public welfare to do so.

The total eliminations from the reserve, as it stands at present, would aggregate approximately 480,000 acres.

This suggested boundary would also add to the reserve two small strips of mountainous land, aggregating 36 sections, or 1 township, lying on the eastern and northern sides of the reserve, in accordance with a recommendation to that effect in Supt. Sheller's report.

The total area of the reserve, as thus modified by these proposed eliminations and additions, would be 1,466,880 acres.

I have prepared, and transmit herewith for the President's signature, the draft of a proclamation readjusting the boundaries of this reserve as above suggested.

In view of the urgency shown for the release of lands in this case, I respectfully recommend early action in this matter.

Very respectfully,

BINGER HERMANN, Commissioner.

The Commissioner of the General Land Office at once advised Senator FOSTER and Congressmen CUSHMAN and JONES by wire of this recommendation to exclude nearly one-half million of acres from the forest.

The proclamation, as thus drafted, was issued on July 15, 1901.

NOW SEE THE "SETTLERS"—THE MILWAUKEE LEADING ON WITH 80,630 ACRES.

(See page 21 of this pamphlet.)

In the meantime the following telegram, dated June 29, was received in the General Land Office from Senator FOSTER:

Please wire immediately townships to be eliminated from Olympic Forest Reserve and time given settlers in which to act.

In response thereto a copy of the draft of the proposed proclamation was mailed to Senator FOSTER on July 1.

July 17 Senator FOSTER again telegraphed, as follows:

Squatters and settlers now going on lands recommended to be eliminated from Olympic Reserve. Has proclamation been signed, and when?

July 19 he was advised in reply, by wire, of the date of issuance of this third proclamation.

The following year requests began to come in to the Interior Department for a further elimination of lands in the Quinlault Valley. Before, however, final action was taken on these requests the charge of national forests was transferred to the Agricultural Department, which resulted in the lands being retained in the forest.

CONGRESSMAN GARDNER, REPUBLICAN LEADER, SAYS MR. HUMPHREY DOES NOT HAVE TO SPEAK FOR PARTY.

No gentleman except my colleague, Mr. JOHNSON, on the floor of this House has expressed himself favorable to the resolution, and the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GARDNER], long a distinguished Member of this body, has most emphatically declared that my colleague [Mr. HUMPHREY] does not represent the Republican Party in his resolution and in his views as expressed on this floor, but, nothing daunted, my colleague brings forth as a witness on behalf of his charges Mr. C. W. H. Heideman, of Bonners Ferry, Idaho. This witness says of himself:

The Bureau of Education of this great Government made their boast that they would get me fired, and they did.

No reasonable, rational person can read this letter, introduced in the RECORD of June 6, from Mr. C. W. H. Heideman without coming to the conclusion that the witness, by his own admissions, passions, and prejudices, absolutely disqualifies himself for consideration or credence. But I want to call the attention of Congress to the fact that when Mr. Pinchot sent out this letter to this Mr. Heideman he at the same time sent out about 2,000 similar letters to others. I have inquired of the National Conservation Association of these facts, and I desire to insert in the RECORD a letter I received from Mr. Pinchot, president of the National Conservation Association, setting forth that 1,510 replies to these letters, being identical copies of the letter mailed to Mr. Heideman, had been received, and that the answers almost unanimously proclaimed in favor of national forests and indorsed the way they were handled on the ground that they gave the small man a chance to make a living rather than a monopoly to a big man in forest matters. The following is the letter received from Mr. Pinchot:

MILFORD, PA., June 9, 1913.

Hon. JAMES W. BRYAN,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR MR. BRYAN: In accordance with your request, which has been communicated to me from Washington, I am very glad to give you the results of a recent effort to determine what the western people think of the national forests as now administered.

It has appeared to me that the most authoritative answer to this question could be had from the national forest users themselves, who are those most directly concerned. Accordingly I wrote last fall to about 2,000 persons living in or near national forests. The object was to make an impartial investigation and to get a really representative expression of public opinion. Very few of the men to whom I wrote are known to me personally. I was careful in my letter, copy of which is attached, merely to invite a frank, definite, and unbiased statement of the facts regarding the national forests as the writer might see them.

So far I have received 1,510 replies. While they still continue to come in, the total is large enough to form a very important guide to what the people who use them most think of the national forests. The replies are from settlers, stockmen, prospectors, miners, loggers, and other users of national-forest resources. While some of them come from the heads of large enterprises, the vast majority are from small men in the sense that they are men of small means. Very often the letters are written with a pen and some of them are written with pencil. Many of them come from men to whom writing is clearly an unaccustomed task. These I value most of all, for they tell what the men think who use the resources of the national forests with their own hands.

Of these 1,510 letters about 90 per cent say in substance that the national forests promote the welfare of those who live in or near them; that they encourage settlement and development; that they are handled so as to give the small man a chance to make a living rather than to give the big man a chance to make a profit; that the forest officers are courteous, zealous, and efficient public servants; and that the national forests, for the best interest of the people who use them, should be kept in Federal ownership.

About 10 per cent of the letters criticize the administration of the national forests in terms more or less severe. It is interesting and significant that the protests are largely typewritten and are in the main from those who represent big interests. It is also noteworthy that they very rarely contain alleged specific examples of maladministration, being in general devoted to broadsides aimed at the policy of national forest conservation in general.

These 1,510 letters comprise the most impressive body of evidence I have ever seen that the men whose welfare and the welfare of whose wives and children depend directly on the national forests are well content. The letters will be made readily available to anyone who may care to see them. I attach copies of a few which I think are fairly representative.

Sincerely, yours, GIFFORD PINCHOT.

The following is a copy of the letter sent out containing the questions:

Every year since it was established, the Forest Service has been vigorously attacked in Congress. During the past session the attack was renewed, and definite statements were made that a strong effort will be made next winter to cripple the service and break up the national forests. In these attacks it is charged that the Forest Service does its work badly, that its regulations and methods are tyrannical and inefficient, and that the people of the West are overwhelmingly opposed to the whole national-forest system. Whether these charges are true, or whether they are merely part of an effort to open the national forests to exploitation by the special interests, they are important. In either case the actual facts ought to be known.

Some of the charges against the national forests are the following:

1. That a national forest is a detriment to the people who live in its neighborhood.
2. That all kinds of natural resources within the national forests are withheld from use.
3. That prospecting is not allowed.
4. That valid mining claims are held up.
5. That the national forests are run so as to favor the big man and not to help the home builder.
6. That homesteads are being taken away from settlers for ranger stations.
7. That the forest officers are overbearing, opposed to the settler, and anxious to keep the country a wilderness by reporting against all claims, whether good or bad.
8. That the forest officers are incompetent eastern theorists, who know nothing about the West.
9. That timber sales are handled in the interest of monopoly for the Lumber Trust.
10. That cattle and sheep barons are given preference over settlers and small owners in range allotments.

The question whether the national forests shall continue to be administered by the National Government or shall be turned over to the States will surely be brought up at the next session of Congress, and the outcome will probably depend upon whether it is shown that the Forest Service is actually administering the national forests efficiently and honestly in the interest of all the people of the West, or that it is not.

Your name has been given to me as a representative citizen and a user of one of the national forests. Would you be willing to give me your plain and straight opinion on each of the charges mentioned above? I am anxious to know also what effect the national forests as now handled have upon your own welfare and that of your neighbors. I hope you will make your letter full and explicit, answering by numbers if more convenient. Please do not confine your answer, however, to the numbered charges if there are other matters which deserve consideration. I should be especially glad if your neighbors who agree with the statements made in your letter would sign it with you.

Sincerely, yours, ——— ———.

I now insert in the RECORD several replies which were received. These replies stand out in contrast with the Heideman letter:

FERN DELL ORCHARD,
Lakeside, Wash., October 21, 1912.

NATIONAL CONSERVATION ASSOCIATION,
Washington, D. C.

GENTLEMEN: Your letter of the 5th instant, asking me for honest opinions to certain charges against the national forests and the actual effects upon myself and neighbors of these reserves as now handled, I have no hesitation in telling all I know of any subject that pertains to the public welfare. I will answer the questions as they come by number.

First. The national forest is a blessing to the people within its borders because it affords, provides, and guarantees a supply of fuel, timber, and pasture or range for every resident. It affords us the best fire protection known. It prevents the forest cover from being destroyed, thus conserving our springs and water supply, and also keeps our steep hill and mountain sides from erosion. The Forest Service has given us roads, trails, and telephones. It is a detriment only to lawless exploitation.

Second. There is not a natural resource within this (Chelan) forest that is not offered for use and is being used as fast as people can make use of them. Logs for lumber, timbers, electric-light and telephone poles, wood, pasture for great bands of sheep, everything that can be used, is used. Only it is now looked after and the resources are sold, not stolen.

Third. This is most too silly to need answer. This forest has been dug over two or three times, and is being gone over all the time.

Fourth. I have never heard of a mining claim being held up in this reserve, although there are some that should be.

Fifth. Timber, fuel, pasture, is given to the poor man free. The big man, big sheep man, steamboat man, sawmill man, etc., pay for their privileges. Giving the lie direct to that charge.

Sixth. At the risk of being tiresome, I must tell you of our situation here. Lake Chelan is nearly 60 miles long. It is one of the most beautiful pieces of water in the world. The climate is such that you can take a blanket and go camping and sleep on the ground for months. No rain nor dew. Thousands avail themselves of this opportunity every summer. Any man, be he ever so poor, can take his wife and kids in a rowboat and spend as long as he has the time along the shores; but the only camping places, owing to the precipitous shores, are at the mouths of the various creeks that empty into the lake. A few people have raised a big howl because they were not allowed to homestead these places. See? A dozen of these homesteads would sew up the whole thing. These places, all together, would not make a garden, but they would sell to some millionaire, and the few men would practically own the lake. We hope these places will be held for the thousands who need them. Aside from this, homesteads are being taken all the time where there is any agricultural land, and the benefit of the doubt is generally given to the applicant.

Seventh. All the forest officers and men that I have come in contact with have been courteous, polite gentlemen. I have eaten and drank with them, and I have fought fire with them, when for 6 days we put in about 16 hours a day, without very much food or water, either. Their work is hard and many times dangerous and their pay is insufficient.

Eighth. I have not met the eastern theorists. The men on the Chelan Forest, from supervisor down, are men raised in this country and have worked up from the bottom in the service here. They know their business, and there are no more sober, honest, and reliable business men in this country. Ask the banks or any business house in this country.

Ninth. The sheep range is the land way back and up that no settler could use. We have all the range we can use at our doors. All our logs for lumber have been sold to a local mill here. There are no other buyers. Wood is sold to the steamboats, given to the settlers, up to a certain amount.

You may get the idea from this letter that my warm espousal of the Forest Service is because I have profited in some way from the handling of same. I will say my home here was homesteaded long before this was a reserve. I have never even received a cord of wood. I have plenty on my own land, but my neighbors have had favors. We all know and appreciate the advantages of being in the reserve, and we don't want any State handling of it. Much better it would go back as open Government land than to let the State have any hand in it.

I am sure this is the opinion of the great majority of the people in this country, especially of those who live in the reserve. Hoping you will be able to head off any adverse legislation and that the good work will go steadily on, and if I can be of any use you will call on me, I am,

Yours, very truly,

EDWARD F. GAINES.

DEAR SIR: In reply to your letter of the 5th, will state—

First. The general belief here is that the national forests will prove a lasting benefit.

Second. The national resources within the national forest are withheld from speculators, but not from parties that have legitimate use for them.

Third. Prospecting is allowed without any interference from forest officers.

Fourth. Title to valid mining claims in some cases have been unnecessarily delayed by overcautious forest officers, but this does not happen in all cases.

Fifth. The national forest is conducted with equal rights to all regardless of wealth.

Sixth. I have not heard of any bona fide homesteaders or settlers being interfered with by forest officers.

Seventh. The forest officers that have been here, with one exception, have been gentlemen in every respect, and a credit to any organization. I have been informed that this one exception was dismissed from the service on very short notice.

Eighth. The foresters are mostly young men, intelligent and capable, and from the work they are doing they will prove a valuable body of men to our Government.

Ninth. The sale of timber is honestly conducted.

Tenth. I know nothing about the arrangements for grazing within the forest.

Very truly, yours,

JOHN MALONEY,
Dealer in General Merchandise.

TONASKET, WASH., November 10, 1912.

GIFFORD PINCHOT,
President National Conservation Association,
Washington, D. C.

SIR: Your letter of October 5th reached me in due season, though my reply has been unnecessarily delayed. I beg to state, however, that I am heartily in sympathy with the Forest Service and have been for some time. I was born and raised in this country and have used the lands now known as forest reserves the greater part of my life and my father used them before me. At the inception of the Forest Service I, with many others who had had free use of this land for many years, was against the proposed change, but from the date at which this change went into effect until now I have had nothing but the fairest treatment, and know of no case where the laws have worked to the detriment of any honest person. It seems to me that it would be almost a crime to turn this over to the State. I have found nothing in my use of the forests or business with the Forest Service officials that appears to me either tyrannical or inefficient. There may be such cases, but they can be found as exceptions in every department of the United States.

A national forest is not a detriment to the people in the neighborhood. Formerly all kinds of stock roamed at will in the forests, and people living adjacent to the reserve, or what is now the reserve, had no peace whatever from the depredations of horses and cattle which were on public range and consequently must not be molested. Their own small bands of cattle had no range near home, where now each settler adjacent to the reserve is allowed to pasture his domestic animals free of charge.

So far as I know the natural resources within the forests are not withheld from the people. Firewood, poles for fencing and other purposes, are all allowed to homesteaders without charge for a reasonable amount. Other resources are generously dealt with as in the cases mentioned.

I have prospected a good deal in the forest and find that aid is rendered rather than that prospectors are hindered in their efforts. Valid mining claims are not held up to my knowledge. There are several in the immediate vicinity.

So far as I am able to judge, the national forests are not run for the benefit of the big man but rather to help the home builder. In apportioning range for big bands of sheep or cattle on the reserves which I use, the fairest dealing is granted the small man with 10 or 20 head of cattle, and the big man is apportioned a part of the range far distant from that used by the home builder. My band of sheep have this year been ranged from 75 to 100 miles from the beginning of the reserve, on land which has not been ranged over before for some time, leaving the range nearer home to the homesteaders in the immediate vicinity who needed it for milch cows, etc.

I have never known of land being taken from homesteaders for ranger stations. In this forest the ranger stations are far from settlements and on land which has never been homesteaded and probably never would be.

The forest officials connected with the Colville Reserve are all gentlemen anxious to do all possible to assist me in my business with them, and equally anxious to please the settlers. The forest officers here are men who have either been raised in the West or have lived here long enough to see things from the western standpoint, and are not in any manner theorists. The officials in charge of the Colville Reservation are an exceptional lot of friendly gentlemen.

Little timber is sold here, and what is sold is mostly sold to small mills or to settlers adjacent to the reserve. This is so obviously ahead of the manner of treating the forests before the reserves were created that it is a great improvement. We who have spent our lives here have, times uncounted, seen the finest timber in the forests culled out and left to die and rot because of no mills to cut it, the work of timber hogs who thought it might be possible to cut it and who meant to have the best the forests held. Many million feet of logs have been wasted in this manner over this State.

I do not think cattle and sheep barons are given preference over settlers and small owners in allotments of range. I wish it understood that I am only a small sheep owner, my band numbering about sixteen or seventeen hundred head, but I have not suffered either from the officials or from complaints by homesteaders. As I explained previously, my summer range this year has been miles from home and miles from any point which could have been used by small owners of cattle, sheep, or horses. This was not a convenience to me but it was a fair deal to all and I had no complaints to make whatever. I know that the majority of citizens in this country feel as I do in this matter. We hear very few complaints, none whatever from the settler and homesteader in the vicinity of the forests and very few from any other person, unless it may be some one with a desire to grab more of this land for speculation than he is allowed to do. I sincerely hope that nothing may be done to handicap the Forest Service further, and that the management of the forests be left where it now is and where it truly belongs.

Respectfully, yours,

CLAY FRUIT.

SEATTLE, WASH., January 14, 1913.

Mr. GIFFORD PINCHOT,
President National Conservation Association,
Colorado Building, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: In reply to your favor of October 5, 1912, I desire to say:

1. In my opinion a national forest is a benefit rather than a detriment to people living in its vicinity, because it conserves for use what they otherwise ofttimes recklessly waste.

2. As far as I know national resources are not withheld from legitimate uses, but are withheld justly from those who desire to obtain something which is not theirs by right for nothing.

3. Prospecting is allowed.

4. Valid mining claims are carefully scrutinized and improper mining claims which are intended to cover pretty nearly everything except mines are held up and very properly.

5. I have never heard in this country from those who are in close touch enough to know a statement that the forests are run in favor of the big man as against the homebuilder.

6. I know of homesteads being used as ranger stations, but I understand some of these were bought from the settlers, and I know that some were taken because the settler had no proper title. This latter fact sometimes gives rise to unwarranted criticism by the other settlers, who sympathize with their neighbors.

7. The forest officers are uniformly courteous to and generous with the settler. They are anxious to have the forest settled wherever there is land for settlement, on the ground that the settlers are of value as fire fighters and otherwise. They do not hesitate to report their honest opinion on all claims. Some of the people of the Northwest have had something for nothing for so long a time that they think any kind of a claim, good or bad, should be allowed. Certainly this is not fair.

8. The Forest Service is building up a splendid personnel, even though we sometimes here get supervisors to whom the timber of this country is new and strange, yet the chances are that no one here would be more satisfactory.

9. It is a pity that the salaries are not large enough to hold the good men that they have, but when these go to universities or other schools their influence is probably further reaching for good.

10. Timber sales are handled favorably to everyone, whether he be big or little.

11. My experience is limited in regard to range allotments, but from what I do know the settlers and owners are given a very fair chance at the range.

There is some talk in this State in regard to having the forests broken up and given to the States, but this is not by any means as strong a report as the newspapers make out, and the belief of myself and friends is that such a division would be little less than a calamity to this State and to the country at large

It is a matter of regret to me that the appropriations for the Forest Service are not larger than they are.

It will be for the good of the service, were it possible, that claims, prospects, etc., so far as they affect the Forest Service, be acted upon very promptly This, I fear, has not always been done.

I have been in every national forest from the Columbia River west to the Pacific Ocean, and also along the Columbia River both in Oregon and Washington. The above statements are based on the experience and knowledge gained in these travels. I have been and still am proud of the Forest Service.

Yours, very truly.

OGALALLA, NEBR., October 16, 1912.

Hon. GIFFORD PINCHOT,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: Yours of the 5th received regarding the forest reserve in which I am located. This reserve, as you probably know, is composed of sand hills and is a grazing proposition only.

No. 1. All the desirable land in the reserve was homesteaded long ago, before the reserve was set aside. The part which goes to make up the reserve was subject to homestead entry all those years and not filed on, as the people could not make a living on that class of land. When the reserve was created it enabled the small cattle owners to maintain drift fences and put in suitable watering places and get the use of the grass. Before this was permitted cattle roamed at large, and in a dry season drifted in large bunches and practically destroyed the watering places. Now, under forest supervision, the users of the reserve are compelled to maintain watering places and enough of them that all the grass is utilized. In my opinion the reserve is maintaining for summer at least twenty times as many cattle as before the reserve was created. All the small or large cattlemen that were located in or adjacent to the reserve have tracts allotted to them, and there is no complaint, as far as I have ever heard; every man has had good and fair treatment by the supervisors and those in charge of the reserve. My observations are that the small man has been protected at all times. In fact, there is a clause in each lease that class A men have a preference over all. That refers to homesteaders.

Nos. 2, 3, and 4 do not apply to this reserve.

No. 5. The reserve I am located in has always been run so that the small cattlemen are looked after more carefully than the large ones, as the supervisors seem to think that the large man will look after his own interests.

No. 6. On the west and south boundary of the reserve all land next to the reserve has been taken up under what is known as the Kinkaid Act. Most of this land was taken up six years ago. I find an average of only one settler in six staying on his land after proving up. This indicates to me that the land is not suitable for farming, and the class of people taking these claims are not financially able to buy and keep stock. Those men that have stayed after proving up are those men that were able to buy small herds of cattle; and in all cases where they had enough stock to need additional grass the supervisors have allotted them a tract in the reserve and had the lessees move their fences to accommodate this class of settlers. In my opinion, the agitation about the North Platte National Reserve has been caused for advertisement purposes by politicians. I am informed that the reserve in question is to be classified. If this is accomplished it will determine the nature and class of the land located in the reserve. Where the land is such that a settler can not make a living by farming, as is proven from the fact that 80 or 90 per cent of the settlers leave their places as soon as they get title from the Government, it would seem that the land in question is put to the use it is most suitable for and is used to advantage to the most people. Again, the homesteaders around the reserve could not exist if it were not for the work furnished by the stockmen located in the reserve. The present shortage of beef and the high cost of same would indicate the necessity of encouraging the production of all the beef possible. Doing away with the national reserves would probably cut down the production one-third.

No. 7. I have found the forest officers courteous at all times, and have seen them making surveys at different times to determine the nature of the soil in different parts of the reserve.

No. 8. At present we have as acting forester of this reserve a western man who is familiar with grazing conditions. Also I have talked with the men in charge at Denver and find them fully posted as to conditions, and always willing to listen and give information.

No. 9. Does not apply to this reserve.

No. 10. I think I have already answered in full.

Respectfully submitted.

SHAINKO, OREG., October 31, 1912.

GIFFORD PINCHOT,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: Regarding the questions sent me relating to the forest reserves, will say that I do not agree with any of them.

1. The national forests are not a detriment to the neighborhood in which they are located in, but are a benefit.

2. Not true. All the resources of the national forests are not withheld from the people. The grazing lands are given to the stock raisers to graze their stock on for a resonable fee.

Timber is sold to who might want it. Poles and wood are given to raisers to graze their stock on for a reasonable fee.

Irrigation ditches are taken out from the reserves and the water used for irrigating.

I know of small farmers taking out water as well as the big ones. The small farmer does not have any trouble to get the same treatment as a bigger one. Anyone has the right to hunt and fish in the reserves under the same conditions as they have on any Government land.

Hotels and summer homes are built in the reserves.

Trappers trap, prospectors prospect, and miners mine the same as out of the reserves.

4. Never heard of a valid mining claim being held up.

5. Not in the reserves in Oregon. A small man has a better chance than a big one. A home builder gets everything he wants from the forest free, and some of them were born and raised within 50 miles of the forests and are fairly educated.

9. The Government sells timber.

10. Untrue. The big stock men have been cut down and the little ones have increased.

I honestly believe that the national forests in Oregon are administered efficiently and honestly in the interest of the people of this State and for generations to come.

They are a benefit to the State and will be a greater benefit in years to come.

Do not believe in turning the forests over to the States. The National Government can run them at less expense and honestly. The State of Oregon could not run a forest reserve on the square and give a poor little man the same show as a big rich one.

J. W. FISHER, Shainko, Oreg.

CHIRICAHUA, ARIZ.

MR. GIFFORD PINCHOT,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: Yours of October 5 received. Note what you say in regard to the attack that will be made against Forest Service in Congress this winter. In answer to your questions as to what I know about the forest and its service.

First. That the national forest is a detriment to the people. As to myself, I think it is the greatest thing we have to-day. Were it not for the preservation of our timberlands, I can not see what the coming generation would do, and I do believe without the Forest Service in 10 years there would not be a stick of timber large enough for a fence post.

Second. That all kinds of natural resources are withheld from use is not the case in the Chiricahua National Forest nor the Pocatello Reserve, of which I am acquainted.

Third. That prospecting is not allowed is not the case on the Chiricahua nor the Paloncillo National Reserve.

Fourth. That valid mining claims are held up is not the case here.

Fifth. That the national forests are run so as to favor the big man and not the home builder is not the case here.

Sixth. That homesteads are being taken away from the settlers for ranger stations is not the case here.

Seventh. That forest officers are overbearing and opposed to settlers is not the case, but is encouraged.

Eighth. All forest officers it has been our lot to have have been western men, who have been in the West long enough to know the wants and ways of the western people.

Ninth. That timber sales are handled in the interest of monopoly, for lumber trusts, is not the case on those reserves.

Tenth. That cattle and sheep growers are given preference over small owners is not the case. If it had been so, myself, with a number of others too numerous to mention, would have been crowded off literally by the big cattle companies and goat men—as there are no sheep in this immediate vicinity, but a great many goats, which are a thousand times worse than sheep in destroying all growth of any description.

In conclusion I would say there are some little changes that could be made, but as the service is making these changes from time to time I believe everything will right itself.

Yours for the preservation of the national forest,

T. P. BLEVINS,
CHARLES JOHNSON,
J. O. FIELDMAN,
F. KLASS,
W. N. PATY.

HYANNIS, NEBR., October 31, 1912.

MR. GIFFORD PINCHOT,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: Yours received and noted. With regard to the national forests, would say my observation has been that they are a benefit to the people in general, and that the forest is not a detriment to those who live near it, but a benefit. In the national forests the looters can no longer take what they please. There is a limit now.

In my observation the national forests are producing more for the people than ever before, and they are not run to favor the big man, but the small man. And I know from personal experience that homesteads are not taken away from the settlers for rangers' stations—at least in Nebraska.

I also know that the forest officers as a whole are able and courteous gentlemen and generally efficient. I can recall but one exception since the starting of the Nebraska forests, and that did not last long; and from general observation the small cattle man is given preference over the large operations. I believe I can see a great future in the proper control of the national forests. Our children's children will thank and praise us for the conservation of the great natural resources and the benefits we are trying to bring about by reforestation.

There may be modification in areas needed. I can not say as to that; but from personal observation in Nebraska we should have had larger areas set out for reforestation than is now in use for that purpose.

Yours, very truly,

E. E. LOWE.

DURANGO, COLO., November 4, 1912.

HON. GIFFORD PINCHOT,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: Replying to your valued favor of the 5th ulto., am happy to say that it affords me much pleasure to answer all questions propounded in said communication.

First. That a national forest is a detriment to the people who live in this neighborhood.

To this I can answer most emphatically that instead of being a detriment it is a decided benefit.

Second. That all kinds of national resources within the national forests are withheld from use.

This is not true in this section of the country.

Third. That prospecting is not allowed.

Not true here.

Fourth. That valid mining claims are held up.

Not true here.

Fifth. That the national forests are run so as to favor the big man and not to help the home builder.

I have never heard such complaint, if anything along this line; and we have some of the larger owners of both cattle and sheep complain that they are restricted in increasing herds, while smaller herds are allowed to increase, which seems to me is the proper thing to do.

Sixth. That homesteads are being taken away from settlers for ranger stations.

Nothing of this kind, as far as I have ever heard. All bosh.

Seventh. That the forest officers are overbearing, opposed to the settler, and anxious to keep the country a wilderness by reporting against all claims, whether good or bad.

Instead of forest officers being overbearing all of those with whom I have come in contact are most gentlemanly, courteous, and obliging, ready at all times to render any service within their power beneficial to those who occupy any portion of the reservation; and I can say personally that in my case I am under lasting obligations to many rangers who have located cattle in out-of-the-way places, especially in the late fall, thereby giving us a chance to get them out before winter sets in. It may be possible that this section has been blessed with a peculiarly high class of foresters, but the writer has never mingled with a more obliging and gentlemanly class of men.

I have had some knowledge of claims coming up for foresters to report on and must say that so far as I know or have heard about these reports there never has been a single complaint bordering on criticism.

Eighth. That the forest officers are incompetent eastern theorists, who know nothing about the West.

Again I must say that we are in luck with our officers, as all of our foresters are practical men, and, so far as I know, all of them are typical western men, familiar with every phase of this work, and have and do make good on all questions coming up.

Ninth. That timber sales are handled in the interest of monopoly for the Lumber Trust.

Sale of timber I am not familiar with, as I am in the stock business.

Tenth. The cattle and sheep barons are given preference over settlers and small owners in range allotments. I can only speak as a small owner of cattle and will simply say that I have no complaint whatever on this charge, as I think small owners are given preference over large owners; in fact, this is decidedly the condition existing here.

Now, as a general proposition, let me say that peace has reigned here between owners of cattle and sheep since the Forest Service has been in vogue, when before all was strife and bitterness, with some gun plays and some lives sacrificed.

And again, under the service we breed our stock, especially cattle, as we can not get the exclusive use of pure-bred bulls if we elect to purchase the same. In our community this has been largely done. For instance, say a half dozen or more owners who occupy a certain range club together and agree to purchase so many pure-bred bulls for a series of years, and have so done; and now I notice a very marked improvement in young cattle. This is very pronounced in this locality.

Again, under the old free grazing system, all ranges were overstocked and grass eaten out so much that no fat cattle left this locality for eastern markets. Now, this season plenty of beef has gone to eastern markets, and in one instance a train of cattle went from here this season and sold for the highest price grass cattle ever sold for on Kansas City market from Colorado.

It seems to me that this forest question is one sided indeed, and admits of no argument whereby the old system could be reinstated without disaster following thick and fast.

Sincerely, yours,

G. W. MELVILLE.

PLATORA, NEV., November 15, 1912.

Mr. GIFFORD PINCHOT, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: Your letter of October 5 is received:

As a user and a home builder on a national forest I shall be glad to give you my candid opinion on such topics mentioned in your letter as I am familiar with.

1. Prior to the creation of the national forest on which I reside citizens and property holders were compelled to dispose of a good portion of their stock from the fact that noncitizens and transient sheep owners crowded our range and practically starved us out.

During the first year the forest was administered under the service something like 30,000 head of these sheep were removed from the range; every citizen and person owning property on or near the forest was given range for his stock.

I do not know of one person in this neighborhood but what will say with me that the creation of the national forest has been the salvation of our business.

2. I know of no natural resources being withheld from the public.

3. Prospecting goes on as before without any restriction whatever.

4. I do not know of any claims being held up in this vicinity.

5. I am what would be termed "one of the small-home builders," but, as far as I have been able to observe during the past two years of administration by the Forest Service, I have received quite as good if not better attention and help than have my neighbors who have larger holdings.

6. There are within a radius of 3 miles from my homestead six possessary or squatters' claims; three of these are within the boundary of the national forest; the other three adjoin the boundary. Either of these would have made an ideal ranger station, all having some improvements upon them, but the supervisor chose a vacant tract of land covered with sagebrush and with not even a tree on it for shade.

The possessary claimants are now acquiring title to their land under the forest-homestead law or act of June 11, 1906.

7. Forest officers have proven to be very considerate, and have given me every encouragement possible, and have, to the best of my knowledge, reported favorably on every claim applied for in this neighborhood.

8. Of the five officers on this forest four are western men and western educated and, in my judgment, quite competent to handle western business.

9. I will leave this question for some of my friends to answer who live where larger timber grows, as we have no saw timber on this forest.

10. I have a small band of sheep. My allotment was in the very best part of the range, and I had plenty of feed, and I consider that I fared quite as well as any other permittee.

In closing, will say that I am thoroughly satisfied with the Forest Service and its officers.

Yours, sincerely,

ALBERT REMUSAT.

ELK CREEK, October 29, 1912.

Mr. GIFFORD PINCHOT.

DEAR SIR: In answer to your letter of the 5th instant will say I am a man of moderate means and have been grazing cattle on the California National Forest ever since it was formed. I used the same range that I am now using before the California National Forest was formed. I am perfectly satisfied. You say some of the charges against the national forest are the following:

First. That the national forest is a detriment to those who live in its neighborhood.

It is not.

That all kinds of natural resources within the forests are withheld from use. They are not.

That prospecting is not allowed. I know that miners are allowed to go in the California National Forest and prospect, and are not molested by forest officers. I have never heard of a valuable mining claim being held up.

The little man is shown as much consideration as the big man.

Several homesteaders seeing that they had not fulfilled the law, relinquished their claims. Others contested and were given a fair chance and a fair trial. They were usually beaten. I do not think the national-forest officers are to blame.

That the forest officers are overbearing and opposed to the settlers and anxious to keep the wilderness by reporting against all claims, whether good or bad. I find all the officers very courteous. When I say officers I mean the gentlemen attached to the supervisor's office and the rangers.

The officers seem very well informed in regard to conditions in the West. Most of the rangers are men raised near the California National Forest.

Timber sales are handled in the interest of monopoly for the Lumber Trusts. I know of several small owners that have bought lumber from the national forest and are perfectly satisfied with the treatment they received.

That cattle and sheep barons are given preference over settlers and small owners in range allotment. I have never heard of that. Mr. Godwin, our forest supervisor, and all the rangers working under him seem very desirous of making all the settlers and the users of the forest satisfied. I used the range I am now using some eight or nine years before the California National Forest was formed and was troubled by goat and sheep men coming in on my range when the forage got short on their range. Since the national forest has been formed every man is supposed to keep his stock on the range allotted to him. I feel that the national forest is a good thing for me and every other man.

I have met and did business with Mr. Godwin, the supervisor, and find him a perfect gentleman. I am personally acquainted with Roy Walkup, chief ranger of the district where my range is situated. I find him seeking to try and satisfy the users of the forest as well as working in the interest of the national forests.

Respectfully,

C. A. LUCAS.

QUEEN, N. MEX., October 28, 1912.

Mr. GIFFORD PINCHOT.

President National Conservation Association.

DEAR SIR: I have received the letter which you wrote my father, and as he is away from home I shall endeavor to answer as I am sure he would answer.

I shall answer your questions as you have numbered them.

First. Instead of a detriment, the forest reserve has been a great help to the people of the Alamo National Forest; this is the only one in which I have had any experience.

Second. I know of no natural resources that have been withheld from use by the forest.

Third. I know of some prospecting here in the past few months which the service has not interfered with.

Fourth. I know of no valid mining claims that have been held up, although mining is very rare in our neighborhood.

Fifth. With regard to the national forests being run so as to favor the big man, can say this is absolutely false in our district.

When a man has too many cattle for his amount of range he sells the surplus, and they are not allowed to graze on other people's ranges.

Before the reservation was established the "big" cattlemen on the outside of what is now the reserve could bring their cattle, or many of them at least, on our range during the summer months, which was a great imposition on us. Now we are protected against all such proceedings.

Sixth. I have heard no complaints in regard to homesteads being taken for ranger stations.

Seventh. Our forest officers have never been overbearing in any manner, and those with whom we have had experience have tried to the best of their ability to please the people and enforce the regulations in a satisfactory manner.

Eighth. The forest officers are also practical, competent western men.

Ninth. In regard to timber sales being handled in the interest of monopoly for the Lumber Trust, we have no large timber here; therefore we have no experience of that kind.

Tenth. That cattle and sheep men are given the preference over settlers and small owners in range allotments.

That certainly can be contradicted, because one of the greatest advantages of the Forest Service is that every man has his allotted range, and no man is allowed to monopolize the country.

Now, I am sure I have voiced the sentiments of the majority of the people on the forest. Of course, there are a few who oppose it, but that class consists of two kinds—first, men who want to monopolize everything, and, second, men who have nothing whatever and are only chronic "kickers."

When the national forest was first established it was met with disapproval by many, and it was several months before the rules and regulations were fully adjusted to circumstances. Now our country is in better condition than it has been for many years, principally because the cattle have been cut down to the proper number, and every man knows his allotment and furnishes sufficient water for same.

I have shown your letter to some of the leading stockmen here and told them what I have written in reply, and they approve of this reply.

I will be glad to give any further information that I am able to give.

I saw Mr. Ares to-day, and he said he would get the people to sign his answer to your letter to him, so it will not be necessary to get them to sign this one.

Yours, very truly,

LEWIS MEANS.

EDIE, IDAHO, October 18, 1912.

Hon. GIFFORD PINCHOT.

DEAR SIR: In answer to your letter will say that the people around here are mostly engaged in stock raising. We have a forest reserve on the timber and higher hills, and the valleys and lower foothills are free range. There is always trouble on the free range, but none on the reserve. The sheepmen drive their sheep among our cattle on the free range, which we have used for cattle for years, and trample out the grass; but when we get on the reserve there is no trouble. Their range is given to them, and they stay where they belong. The forest officers are not overbearing and opposed to the small settler, at least in our district. I am well acquainted with our supervisor, Mr. Huddle. He is always courteous and anxious to give us all a square deal. I know six of his assistants, and they are like him—always obliging and eager to help and encourage the small settler. Perhaps they came from the East; but if they did, they soon learned western ways.

I do not know about mining claims nor timber sales, as we have no mines nor timber sales around here.

This reserve is not run to help the big man, but rather to help the small man. I have never heard of a homestead being taken from a settler for a ranger station. Cattle and sheep barons do not get the preference in this district.

We are mostly small cattle owners on this creek, and we have no complaint with the forest officers.

But what we hope Congress will do is to make the Forest Service a branch of the Interior Department and give the forest officers control of all the public lands, to handle as they do the forest reserves at present. The forest officers could handle all the public lands easier and with not much more expense than they can small pieces here and there. It would also stop range wars between sheep and cattle men. It would also give all a square deal. At present some people pay for range; others have free range. But it will be a sad day for small settlers if the public lands are turned over to the States. Big stockmen and grafting State officers will rake everything, and the small rancher had better get out of business. Writing for others and myself, we earnestly hope you will fight hard to increase the forest reserves and keep them under national control.

Yours, sincerely,

GEO. B. EDIE.

Austin, Colo., October 25, 1912.

MR. GIFFORD PINCHOT,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: Your letter of the 5th instant at hand. My experience with the National Forest Reserve is limited to the Battlement Reserve, Delta County, Colo., where I run several hundred cattle. None of the charges cited in your letter are true so far as my observation goes.

The supervisor is an experienced western man. The rangers are the same; all of them most considerate of the rights and conveniences of those using the forest.

Those who have known the Battlement Reserve for years all agree that the feed and general conditions are much better to-day than at any time since the very early days when, of course, there was abundant room for every one.

I have seen no discrimination in favor of the large cattle owner. Quite the contrary, the small owner has always been given his limit of cattle (50 head) before the older settler and larger owner was given permit. The lumber business and prospecting I know nothing about. There is a sawmill near me, a small affair, which I understand is successful and doing better than before the days of restriction.

The only thing about the management of the forest that I could suggest is in the division of district which, I think, should in the cattle country conform as much as possible to the natural range of cattle. The districts being divided by natural barriers rather than to be arbitrarily divided; this, however, bears in no way upon the policy of administration. Under State supervision the forest reserve would be a failure for most of us at least, and I hope that such a misfortune is not going to befall us. The chief objection that I hear to the forest as a whole comes from old settlers who despise any kind of restriction and most of the complaints are sentimental rather than real. I consider that the protection given the grass and watershed tributary to our ranch adds at least 25 per cent to the value of our valley land, where we have abundant water to raise feed for the cattle that run on the forest during the summer.

If I can be of any service in maintaining the present conditions, I hope that you will call upon me.

Sincerely, yours,

F. GILPIN.

P. S.—The protection of game and fish here is not good. I should take interest in seeing this improved.

MONUMENT, GRANT COUNTY, OREG.,

MR. GIFFORD PINCHOT,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: Your letter of October 5 is received, and will try and answer your questions by numbers to the best of my knowledge.

No. 1. It's the best thing that ever happened for the small settler.

No. 2. As far as my knowledge goes it is false, as we can get all the building material and wood we want by asking for it.

No. 3. Do not know.

No. 5. It is wrong, as far as this community is concerned; it favors the little man in his place.

No. 6. It has not occurred here.

No. 7. I have not found that the case here; our forest ranger is the most obliging man.

No. 8. Not to my knowledge.

No. 9. Am not in position to say.

No. 10. The cattle and sheep barons are cut down to give the small holder a chance to build up.

I hope the forest reserve will continue, as it is the only thing that saved the little man from being frozen out by the sheepmen, who are all opposed to the reserve; until it was created, I used to begin to feed some of my cattle in October to keep them alive. Now I can go on the range any time up to Christmas and get a beef.

I remain, dear sir,

Yours, respectfully,

THOMAS HAYWARD.

NATIONAL CONSERVATION ASSOCIATION,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: I have lived in the Arkansas National Forests ever since it became a law; I will answer the questions as to what I know about the forest.

1. The national forest has been a help to me.

2. I am using the forest range as I always used them; I know the national forest is a good thing; I can get a permit to get timber for my own use.

3. As to prospecting, there hasn't been any objections made; it goes on as same as it always did.

4. There are no mining claims held up here.

5. The national forest has been run so as to favor the small man here; we can get as small amount of timber as we want; that favors the small man and helps the home builder.

6. No homesteads have ever been taken away from anyone in this part of the forest.

7. The forest officers have treated the people right here; they have offered everything in their power to help build up this part of the forest.

8. The forest officers, I think, have used good judgment in this part of the forest.

9. The timber sales have been in the poor man's interest here.

10. People here have free use of the range, as they always did.

The national forest is a great help to me in several respects; it has kept the fire out of the range; I think it is a good thing for the people of the West.

Yours, truly,

TOM L. JOHNSON.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Washington has again expired.

Mr. BRYAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask for one more minute.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Washington asks for one more minute. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. BRYAN. I now close my remarks with this suggestion, upon which a book might be written: I believe the real purpose underlying this agitation against the Forest Service at this time, whether my colleague is aware of it or not, is a conspiracy to transfer to private ownership the vast coal deposits of the Government in Alaska and the water-power privileges of inestimable value in the Western States.

We have come upon a period of public ownership. One may call it paternalism, socialism, or what you will, but the people are not going to give up their remaining timber holdings, their coal lands, their water-power sites, as they have done in the past.

The people of the West want to own and operate their own railways, especially municipal railways, and they want these power sites retained in the hands of the people. They are not going to permit them to be transferred perpetually and without consideration from their hands to men of great wealth and representatives of the great interests. [Applause.]

[NOTE.—During the course of these remarks the gentleman from Montana [Mr. EVANS] suggested that I was in error about the date of the activity of Senator Clark, of Montana. I promised to correct if I was in error. Upon investigation I find that Senator Clark, while in the Senate during the greater portion of the time mentioned and always aiding the efforts against conservation, as stated, was not an actual Member of the Senate until January 28, 1899. He resigned on May 11, 1900, after a resolution had been reported on April 23, 1900, declaring his election void. He was reelected, however, in November, 1900, and renewed his activities on behalf of the "settlers."]

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to print in the RECORD a letter from President Finley, of the Southern Railway, in connection with this debate.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection?

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Reserving the right to object, I believe the gentleman stated that his request was for the purpose of printing a letter in the RECORD.

Mr. AUSTIN. Yes.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. With that statement, I have no objection.

Mr. AUSTIN. President Finley's name has been mentioned in this discussion.

The letter referred to is as follows:

SOUTHERN RAILWAY CO.,
Washington, D. C., June 14, 1913.

HON. R. W. AUSTIN,
United States House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR MR. AUSTIN: Absence from Washington has delayed my reply to your letter of the 7th instant, calling my attention to speeches made by Representative HUMPHREY of Washington on Forest Service on the 5th and 6th instant, in which my name was used.

I thank you very much for bringing these speeches to my attention, and also for what you said with reference to Mr. HUMPHREY'S mention of me. As you know, a large proportion of the available timber of the United States is in the Southeastern States. I have believed it to be to the best interest of our section that the southeastern forests should so be managed as to insure a perpetual supply of raw materials for southeastern woodworking industries. I have absolutely no personal interest in timber lands anywhere, and the only interest of the Southern Railway Co. in the matter is in the adoption by forest owners in the Southeast of such forestry practice as may tend to advance the general prosperity of the territory along the company's lines.

With sincere regards and best wishes, I am,

Yours, truly,

W. W. FINLEY, President.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 1 o'clock and 41 minutes p. m.) the House, under the order previously made, adjourned until Friday, June 20, 1913, at 12 o'clock noon.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, the following executive communications were taken from the Speaker's table and referred by the Speaker as follows:

1. A letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting supplemental estimates of appropriations required by the various departments for the service of the fiscal year ending June 30, 1914, and deficiencies in appropriations for prior years (H. Doc. No. 88); to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

2. A letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting a communication from the Acting Secretary of Commerce and Labor of March 3, 1913, submitting a sworn statement of Allan Simanson, seaman, of the value of his personal effects lost by the wrecking of the lighthouse tender Armeria, May 20, 1912

(H. Doc. No. 86); to the Committee on Claims and ordered to be printed.

3. A letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting a copy of a letter dated March 18, 1912, transmitting a draft of a bill providing for the disposition of effects of deceased patients of the Public Health and Marine-Hospital Service and of certain deceased officers and men connected with the Army (H. Doc. No. 87); so much as relates to the Public Health and Marine-Hospital Service, to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, and so much as relates to the Army, to the Committee on Military Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

4. A letter from the Acting Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting a memorial from the Legislature of Alaska relative to certain deficiency appropriations for the mileage of members of the Territorial legislature (H. Doc. No. 90); to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

5. A letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, relative to the erection of an immigration station at Boston, Mass. (H. Doc. No. 91); to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

6. A letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting a statement relative to the deficiency estimates for public-building work and the Office of the Supervising Architect (H. Doc. No. 92); to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

7. A letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, relative to the construction of a new assay office building in New York City (H. Doc. No. 93); to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN, from the Committee on Public Lands, to which was referred the bill (S. 533) to consolidate certain forest lands in the Ochoco National Forest, Oreg., reported it with an amendment and submitted a report (No. 66) thereon.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I am directed by the Committee on Public Lands, to which was referred the bill (S. 1929) for the relief of Jesus Silva, jr., to report it adversely, and I submit a report (No. 68) thereon. I ask that the bill be postponed indefinitely, as the act approved July 31, 1912, is in identically the same terms.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be postponed indefinitely.

Mr. JOHNSTON of Alabama, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to which was referred the bill (S. 103) authorizing the Secretary of War to grant permission for the erection of a hotel on the Fort Huachuca Military Reservation in Arizona, reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 67) thereon.

Mr. SHAFROTH, from the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, to which was referred Senate resolution 103 to annul Senate resolution adopted February 20, 1885, providing for furnishing to Senators pamphlet printed copies of the decisions of the Supreme Court of the United States, submitted by himself on the 5th instant, reported it without amendment.

BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTIONS INTRODUCED.

The VICE PRESIDENT. There are on the Secretary's desk certain bills and joint resolutions which have been read the first time. They will be read a second time and referred.

The bills and joint resolutions were read a second time by title and referred as indicated.

By Mr. TOWNSEND:

A bill (S. 2543) to place Michael James McCormack upon the active list of the Navy; to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

A bill (S. 2544) for the relief of John K. Steedman (with accompanying paper); to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. STERLING:

A bill (S. 2545) authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to cancel the allotment of Irene Lydia Simmons; to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

By Mr. SMOOT:

A bill (S. 2546) to authorize the Secretary of the Treasury to use, at his discretion, surplus moneys in the Treasury in the purchase or redemption of the outstanding interest-bearing obligations of the United States; to the Committee on Finance.

By Mr. McCUMBER:

A bill (S. 2547) authorizing the reconveyance of certain lands to the United States and authorizing the parties making such conveyance to file entry on other public lands; to the Committee on Public Lands.

By Mr. SMITH of Arizona:

A bill (S. 2548) to create an additional land district in the State of Arizona (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Public Lands.

By Mr. ASHURST:

A bill (S. 2549) to provide for an enlarged homestead entry in Arizona where sufficient water suitable for domestic purposes is not obtainable upon the lands; to the Committee on Public Lands.

By Mr. THOMPSON:

A bill (S. 2550) to correct the military record of Jacob Scott; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. NELSON:

A bill (S. 2551) to authorize the adjustment of the accounts of Army officers in certain cases, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. LA FOLLETTE:

A bill (S. 2552) to further protect trade and commerce against unlawful restraints and monopolies; to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

By Mr. THORNTON:

A bill (S. 2553) to provide for the relief of certain enlisted men in the United States Navy (with accompanying paper); to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

By Mr. MYERS:

A joint resolution (S. J. Res. 41) authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to sell or lease certain public lands to the Republic Coal Co., a corporation; to the Committee on Public Lands.

By Mr. DILLINGHAM:

A joint resolution (S. J. Res. 42) authorizing the Commissioners of the District of Columbia to provide a public recreation center in square No. 534, District of Columbia, and for other purposes; to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Certain bills and joint resolutions on the Secretary's desk which have been noted for introduction will be read a first time.

The SECRETARY. By Mr. GALLINGER, a bill (S. 2554) granting an increase of pension to Caroline M. Wallace; and

A bill (S. 2555) relative to the carrying or displaying of certain flags within the District of Columbia.

The bills and joint resolutions were read a second time by title and referred as indicated:

By Mr. GALLINGER:

A bill (S. 2554) granting an increase of pension to Caroline M. Wallace (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Pensions.

A bill (S. 2555) relative to the carrying or displaying of certain flags within the District of Columbia; to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

By Mr. BRISTOW:

A bill (S. 2556) granting a pension to William C. Cashell;

A bill (S. 2557) granting an increase of pension to Daniel M. Freeman; and

A bill (S. 2558) granting a pension to Daisy D. Knox; to the Committee on Pensions.

A bill (S. 2559) to authorize the enlargement of the site of the public building at Ottawa, Kans., and to make an appropriation therefor; to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

A bill (S. 2560) authorizing the Secretary of War to donate to the Grand Army of the Republic Post No. 45, of Smith Center, Kans., two cannon or fieldpieces; and

A bill (S. 2561) authorizing the Secretary of War to donate to the city of Hays, Kans., one cannon or fieldpiece; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

A bill (S. 2562) for the relief of Peter Carroll and others, lately laborers employed by the United States military authorities in and about Fort Leavenworth, Kans.; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. TOWNSEND:

A bill (S. 2563) for the relief of Rebecca C. Pepper; to the Committee on Public Lands.

By Mr. SMITH of Arizona (by request):

A bill (S. 2564) to amend chapter 18 of the Code of Law for the District of Columbia; to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

By Mr. GORE:

A bill (S. 2565) for the appointment by the President of a commissioner to the Five Civilized Tribes of Indians; to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

By Mr. BANKHEAD:

A bill (S. 2566) granting an increase of pension to Mary E. McAuley; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. GOFF:

A bill (S. 2567) granting a pension to Taylor Garrison; and

A bill (S. 2568) granting an increase of pension to Oakaley Randall; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. KERN:

A bill (S. 2569) granting an increase of pension to Nathan Long (with accompanying papers); and

A bill (S. 2570) granting an increase of pension to Malinda Skinner (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Pensions.

A bill (S. 2571) for the relief of Jefferson Tongate (with accompanying papers); and

A bill (S. 2572) for the relief of William H. Kline (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. DILLINGHAM:

A joint resolution (S. J. Res. 44) transferring office furniture, equipment, etc., heretofore used by the Immigration Commission to the Department of Labor; to the Committee on Immigration.

By Mr. GORE:

A joint resolution (S. J. Res. 45) to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to employ an accountant to report on the fiscal affairs of the Five Civilized Tribes of Indians in Oklahoma; to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

EXPORTATION OF ARMS, ETC.

By Mr. FALL:

A joint resolution (S. J. Res. 43) to repeal the joint resolution of March 14, 1912, authorizing the President to prohibit the exportation of arms, etc.

Mr. FALL. I would ask, if there is no objection, that the joint resolution might be read in full for information, printed, and lie on the table.

The VICE PRESIDENT. If there is no objection, that action will be taken, and the Secretary will read the joint resolution. The Chair hears no objection.

The joint resolution was read at length, as follows:

Whereas the provisions of the joint resolution of March 14, 1912, authorizing the President to prohibit the exportation of arms and munitions of war under certain circumstances, and the proclamation of the President of the United States, issued on the 14th day of March, in the year 1912, under the authority of said resolution, have been and are now being so construed by the authorities charged with the enforcement of the same as to prohibit the exportation of arms and munitions of war to one or more of the contending factions in the Republic of Mexico, and to authorize and permit such exportation of arms and munitions to one or more of such contending factions; and

Whereas there has been for more than two years last past continuous strife and armed conflict between various contending factions within the Republic of Mexico and the different States thereof; and

Whereas the enforcement of such law and the proclamation putting same in effect has, as is shown by the evidence taken by the Senate committee under Senate resolution No. 335, Sixty-second Congress, second session, caused attacks upon American citizens residing or temporarily being in Mexico, the destruction of the property of such American citizens, the holding of such citizens for ransom, and has resulted in engendering between such and other American citizens and the great mass of Mexicans feelings of antagonism and distrust, and is destroying the traditional friendship between the people of the two countries; and

Whereas it is the desire of the Government of the United States to remain entirely neutral and to take no part directly or indirectly in the internal affairs of the Republic of Mexico, and to restore and maintain the friendship and good feeling heretofore existing between the citizens of the two countries: Therefore

Resolved, etc., That the joint resolution of March 14, 1912, amending the joint resolution of April 22, 1898, authorizing the President to prohibit the exportation of arms and material of war, etc., be, and the same is hereby, repealed.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The joint resolution will be printed and lie on the table.

THE TARIFF.

Mr. WORKS submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (H. R. 3321) to reduce tariff duties and provide revenue for the Government, and for other purposes, which was referred to the Committee on Finance and ordered to be printed.

UNION PACIFIC AND SOUTHERN PACIFIC RAILROAD COS.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, I submit a resolution that I ask be read at the Secretary's desk.

The resolution (S. Res. 114) was read, as follows:

Resolved, That the subcommittee of the Committee on the Judiciary of the United States Senate appointed pursuant to Senate resolution 92, Sixty-third Congress, first session, being a resolution instructing the Committee on the Judiciary of the United States Senate to investigate the charge that a lobby is maintained to influence legislation pending in the Senate, be, and is hereby, instructed to subpœna and bring before it Robert S. Lovett, the president and the chairman of the executive committee of the Union Pacific Railroad Co., to give testimony before said committee relative to the charges and statements contained in his published statement issued in New York City on June 17, 1913, wherein said Robert S. Lovett charges that he and his associates have been approached by emissaries claiming to be able to exert great influence over Congress and public officials in connection with the suit involving the dissolution and proposed reorganization of the Union Pacific and Southern Pacific Railroad Cos. heretofore and now pending in the Supreme Court of the United States; and that said committee be, and is hereby, further instructed to subpœna before it any and all persons whose testimony, in its judgment, may be necessary to fully and completely expose all persons and influences claiming to exercise power and control over the settlement and adjudication of said litigation.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, several years ago the Attorney General began a suit in the United States court having for its object the dissolution of the Southern Pacific and Union Pacific Railway Cos. This suit finally reached the Supreme Court of the United States, and the position taken by the Government was sustained. The dissolution was ordered. Since that time various plans of reorganization have been proposed by the railroad company, some of them, I think, objected to by the Attorney General; and the case now stands, as I understand it, in that condition, with a reorganization plan submitted and not yet acted upon.

Judge Lovett, the president of the Union Pacific, or, at least, the chairman of its board of directors, gave out a statement in New York City recently in which he charged that various persons had approached him and his associates at various times, and were continually approaching them, suggesting that if they would employ the right kind of attorneys here in Washington they would have no difficulty in bringing about almost any kind of a reorganization that they wanted to bring about.

The committee now investigating the lobby, it seems to me, is peculiarly authorized to investigate this particular subject. In this connection, I send to the Secretary's desk and ask to have read a statement which appears this morning in the morning papers, publishing the statement issued by Mr. Lovett in connection with this charge. I ask the Secretary to read it.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the Secretary will read as requested.

The Secretary read as follows from the Washington Post of Wednesday, June 18, 1913, page 4:

ROADS SCORNED LOBBY—NEWSPAPER RUMORS FOLLOWED, SAYS PACIFIC HEAD—SCOUTS CONTROL BY BANKERS—JUDGE LOVETT ISSUES STATEMENT DECLARING EMISSARIES HAVE PROMISED TO EXERT INFLUENCE IN CONGRESS, PROVIDED CERTAIN LAWYERS WERE EMPLOYED—NO DESIRE TO DOMINATE BALTIMORE & OHIO.

NEW YORK, June 17.

Judge Robert S. Lovett, chairman of the Union Pacific Co., issued a long statement in New York this afternoon, saying in effect that the Union Pacific and Southern Pacific authorities have been approached by various persons unnamed professing to have influence which they would bring to bear in the matter of the Union Pacific-Southern Pacific dissolution proceedings provided the railroad people employed certain lawyers.

He added that these offers were invariably rejected, as the result of which presumably many rumors were circulated reflecting on the Union Pacific-Southern Pacific management and motives.

"GREAT INFLUENCE" PROMISED.

"Every time that we have had any plan connected with Union-Southern Pacific dissolution," said Judge Lovett, "I think that without a single exception we have had calls from parties purporting to be able to exert great influence with Congress and in other places.

"All sorts of emissaries have come to me with the story that they could accomplish all sorts of things for us if we would employ certain lawyers.

"I have refused to see any of these parties, and I do not believe a single word they have said about what they can accomplish for us. Following these communications there was generally some sort of a rumor appearing in the press which I could not help but connect with these parties."

NO DESIRE TO CONTROL BALTIMORE & OHIO.

With reference to the proposed deal with the Pennsylvania Railroad whereby the Union Pacific was to trade $38,000,000 of Southern Pacific stock in return for stock of the Baltimore & Ohio Railroad of substantially the same value, Judge Lovett explained that there was "no desire on the part of the Union Pacific to control the Baltimore & Ohio," adding that if such control resulted it would be "merely incidental." The exchange, if consummated, he said, would give the Union Pacific about 38 per cent of Baltimore & Ohio stock.

Judge Lovett scouted the idea that the proposed deal with the Pennsylvania was a forerunner to bringing that road, the Union Pacific, the Southern Pacific, and the Baltimore & Ohio under the control of one banking house.

THINKS STORY PREPOSTEROUS.

"So far as Union Pacific is concerned," he said, "Kuhn, Loeb & Co. is interested to a large degree, but I can not imagine anything more preposterous than the story that this is a scheme to get all these roads under the control of one banking house."

He added that at present there were no negotiations under way for the disposal of any more Southern Pacific stock to any other railroad system, although he would not commit himself as to what might be done in the future. He had no recent communication from the Attorney General, he said, as to whether he approved exchange of Southern Pacific stock for Baltimore & Ohio.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, these charges apply directly to Members of Congress and to other Government officials who have to do with the pending suit in the Supreme Court for the dissolution and reorganization of these great railroad companies. If it be true that people are representing to the interested litigants in that suit that they are able to bring about a settlement satisfactory to them through their influence with Congress or through their influence with members of the Cabinet, then it seems to me it is the worst and most disreputable and dishonorable kind of lobby that can possibly exist, and the committee now investigating the subject could not do better than to go to the bottom of these charges, ascertain who it is that is making these representations, and what power and what influence they claim to possess.

You will notice also, Mr. President, that Judge Lovett says that whenever these men approach him and make these representations various articles appear in the newspapers about the same time relating to the subject matter; so that it seems these persons have some control, at least sufficient to gain publicity in the newspapers. It is something which the Senate can not pass over lightly, and, inasmuch as it is investigating the question of lobbying, here is an opportunity, it strikes me, for the right kind of an investigation. I ask, Mr. President, unanimous consent for the present consideration of the resolution.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Nebraska asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of the resolution. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the resolution.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, I want to ask the Senator from Nebraska whether the committee has not already full power to investigate this phase of the question? As I understood, when we armed the committee with whatever authority it now has we undoubtedly intended that it should have authority to look into all questions of alleged corrupt or corrupting influence upon legislation.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, I think the Senator from Mississippi is correct. I believe the committee now has the authority, but I desire by this resolution expressly to instruct the committee to investigate this particular charge.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I have no objection to the resolution, except that it struck me we were doing rather an unnecessary thing. Still, whether unnecessary or not, it will not be harmful; it will be merely carrying out the intentions of Congress already expressed.

Mr. NORRIS. I think it is carrying out the intention of Congress, but if we do not pass the resolution the committee would not be required to investigate the subject. With this resolution passed, of course it will be their duty to investigate the matter.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, my attention was called to that article this morning, and my idea was to have action in this matter without a resolution. Of course, we should like to have the resolution passed, but if we are to extend the scope of the present investigation there is no telling where it is all going to end. There is lobbying galore in this country. We have not yet finished with the sugar lobby. We have been sitting from 10 o'clock in the morning until 6 in the evening, and in many instances from 8 to 10 at night. But if the Senate desires us to go fully into this matter they will have to extend the time allowed the committee to report beyond the 28th of June. We are doing all we can. It is a very interesting subject, and much information is now being developed which will astonish the country. If this resolution is passed, of course, as I have said, we will have to have an extension of time within which to report.

I desire to say that the idea which the Senator has embraced in his resolution has indirectly been suggested by some letters which have been presented in another matter.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, I would be very glad that the committee should have all the time they think is necessary to make the investigation; but I believe the Senator from North Carolina will agree with me when I state that if the charges which are made by Mr. Lovett, the head of the Union Pacific Railway Co., are true, they present a matter that is as serious as any proposition that has come or can come before the committee.

Mr. OVERMAN. I fully agree with the Senator. Not only that, but there are other matters which probably the committee ought to pursue, and I know this is one of them. The committee, however, is subject to the orders of the Senate. We were instructed to report by the 28th of June, and I do not see how it will be possible to do so under the circumstances.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Mr. President, I am not sure whether I fully understand the resolution or not. I understand it to be based on an alleged interview given by Judge Lovett, the president of the Union Pacific Railroad Co., in regard to the proposed reorganization of the railroad. I do not understand that that is a matter now pending before Congress.

Mr. NORRIS. No.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Hence, if it is not a matter now pending before Congress, my view would be that a resolution of this kind or something like it would be necessary to give the committee jurisdiction, notwithstanding what the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. OVERMAN] has said.

Mr. NORRIS. I should like to say to the Senator from Wyoming that this interview specifically charges that these emissaries claim to have influence with Congress.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Exactly.

Mr. NORRIS. And the case is pending in the Supreme Court of the United States.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. I am for the Senator's resolution.

Mr. NORRIS. Certainly; I understand that.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. But I think this resolution is necessary, and that the chairman of the committee is somewhat in error as to the authority granted under the original resolution.

Mr. OVERMAN. If the Senator will allow me to interrupt him, I did not hear the resolution read, but I thought it did extend our authority beyond that granted in the original resolution, and that is the reason I said I was in favor of it.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. It does; but I was called to my feet by the remark of the Senator that the committee were going into that investigation, whether or not this resolution was passed.

Mr. OVERMAN. The Senator misunderstood me. I said it occurred to me after reading the article this morning that we ought to go into that matter; that it ought to be considered and probably we would consider it, and that if we thought any such lobbying as that was going on in the present Congress it was our duty to look into it.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. No; I shall have to differ from the Senator there. My understanding of the original resolution is this: It provides in so many words that the committee are—

To investigate the charge that a lobby is being maintained in Washington or elsewhere to influence proposed legislation now pending before the Senate.

There is no legislation pending before the Senate upon the subject matter to which the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS] has called attention; and, hence, if the committee is to have authority to act, it must be given authority under some such resolution as that proposed by the Senator from Nebraska.

Mr. OVERMAN. If there is any person attempting to influence legislation, or if there is a railroad lobby in regard to any bill pending—not this special bill but any bill pending—the committee could investigate it.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. But there is no bill pending.

Mr. OVERMAN. I do not know whether there is or not; there are legislative matters pending here.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. There is no legislative matter pending regarding the reorganization of the Union Pacific Railroad.

Mr. OVERMAN. But there is railroad legislation pending.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. But this refers specifically to this one particular matter. If the Senator's committee does not want this added authority, I am perfectly content.

Mr. OVERMAN. I especially said I wanted the resolution passed.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Mr. President, the question of the dissolution of the consolidation accomplished by the Union Pacific Railroad, embracing as it did the Southern Pacific Railroad with its subsidiaries, is a matter of so much importance to the State which I in part represent that I can not let this opportunity pass without saying a few words regarding it. Many years after this consolidation was accomplished an action was brought by the Attorney General to dissolve this union into its constituent parts. A suit was therefore brought under the Sherman Antitrust Act to annul this consolidation and to separate the Southern Pacific system from the Union Pacific system, upon the contention that the Union Pacific lines and the Southern Pacific lines constituted parallel competing lines, and that any union accomplished by those systems would be in violation of the Sherman Antitrust Act. The court has decreed that the combination was in violation of that act, and is now engaged in the difficult task of "unscrambling the eggs," as Mr. Morgan so aptly phrased it. We find that work accompanied by great difficulty. So far as the Southern Pacific road itself is concerned that would not be difficult, but the Southern Pacific system has purchased the control of the Central Pacific system, which is to the north of the Southern Pacific system and which was originally designed as a part of a through transcontinental line from the Missouri, of which the Union Pacific was to be another part, under legislation which contemplated a final union of those two roads into one transcontinental road.

The question has arisen before the court as to what disposition shall be made of the Southern Pacific stock; whether that stock, or any part of it, can be acquired in any way by the stockholders of the Union Pacific, or whether the Central Pacific system can be acquired by the Union Pacific Railroad, thus carrying out the original intention of Congress.

Mr. President, so far as I am concerned, I have always thought that it would be to the advantage of my State if the Central Pacific Railroad were joined to the Union Pacific Railroad, thus constituting a through line from the Missouri to the Pacific; and I had hoped that in time some road to the East would be acquired, either the New York Central or the Pennsylvania system or the Baltimore & Ohio Railroad system, so that we would eventually have a through transcontinental line from coast to coast. I favored some form of national organization, either through a national incorporation act or through a national holding-company act, under which consecutive, not competing, lines from coast to coast could be organized under one corporate control, and thus we would have a system in the North, embracing the Northern Pacific and possibly the New York Central; a system farther south, embracing the Central Pacific, the Union Pacific, and the Pennsylvania; a system farther south, embracing the Atchison, Topeka & Santa Fe, and the Baltimore & Ohio; and a system farther to the south, embracing the Southern Pacific Railway and the Southern Railway Co., of the Southern States; so that in this way eventually we would have four great transcontinental lines from coast to coast, each with its branch lines reaching out into each other's territory, and thus securing not only an efficient through service from ocean to ocean, but an admirable competitive service between these giant systems

I must confess that recently my view as to where the Central Pacific system should be placed in this readjustment of lines has been somewhat affected by the approaching completion of the Panama Canal. The Panama Canal will make San Francisco the great distributing point of the western coast, and it is a question whether the interest of Nevada does not lie rather in maintaining the Central Pacific system as a part of the Southern Pacific system, thus giving that system a radial distribution toward the east from San Francisco, rather than in connecting it with the Union Pacific system, which involves absentee control far off in New York instead of practical home rule through the Southern Pacific system, which has its home office at San Francisco.

I mention this matter now because I wish it brought to the attention of the people of my State, so that they may hold counsel with each other as to where their interest lies and whether they should unite with the railroad commission of California in their insistence that the Central Pacific shall remain a part of the Southern Pacific system. I am inclined to think that the future development of Nevada will come from San Francisco rather than from eastern centers. I believe that the opening of the Panama Canal will establish a tide of immigration that will settle that entire coast and will embrace Nevada within its scope. I believe that it will open up lines of freight transportation that will be of vast advantage to that coast and that Nevada and Arizona will, so far as their economic future is concerned, be more nearly allied to San Francisco and its energies, stimulated as they will be by the Panama Canal, than with the eastern interests in control in New York. I am desirous of accentuating this matter now, so that the people of my State may reflect upon it and come to a wise conclusion as to which arrangement they will favor.

Right here I may say the inquiry might be made as to what Nevada has to do with this question. It is now pending before a court between parties of whom Nevada is not one. My answer is that I regard the methods now existing for the determination of these questions by the courts as most ineffective. I believe that ultimately we shall be compelled to throw the adjustment of these dissolutions and reorganizations into the hands of the Interstate Commerce Commission, and that legislation will be required which will enable the Interstate Commerce Commission to act in aid of the courts not only as experts in ascertaining the facts, but as experts in indicating what lines of dissolution and reorganization the decree should take.

Mr. President, experience has shown that the courts are not organized for this kind of work. Under the Sherman Antitrust Act the people have secured triumphant decisions declaring that great combinations, such as the Oil Trust and the Tobacco Trust, are in violation of the Sherman antitrust law, and the courts have rendered sweeping decisions decreeing the dissolution of those trusts. They have heard evidence relating to the form and the manner of those dissolutions, but the dissolutions have been accomplished without satisfaction to the American people and without securing relief from the burdens under which the American people have suffered. We all know that the courts themselves have been subjected to criticism; that the Attorney General's office has been subjected to criticism; and yet we all know that it is utterly impossible for a body of men trained as lawyers, trained in the law, not experts in all these intricacies and industries and businesses, to undertake the great work of restoring to their original elements these enormous combinations, embracing numerous corporations and enormous capitalizations, so interwoven that it is almost impossible to separate them.

Mr. President, for a long time I have been an advocate of the creation of an interstate trade commission, with a view to their making all the preliminary inquiries that are now made by the Attorney General's office with reference to the existence of trusts and combinations, and with a view to their summoning recalcitrant corporations before them and ordering them to dissolve their combinations upon certain practical lines which experts in commerce can lay down; then, if they fail to do it, carrying the matter into the courts, and, after securing a decree of dissolution, aiding the courts in dismembering these great corporations. Thus we will have the courts moving hand in hand with a trained commission of experts—experts when they take office, experts by reason of the experience which they acquire in office—who can secure a dissolution of these great trusts and combinations in a businesslike way that will satisfy the public and relieve the public from existing burdens.

It seems to me that principle should be applied to the cases that are now pending in the courts for the dissolution of the combination of railway systems under the Sherman Antitrust Act. We have to-day an Interstate Commerce Commission consisting of nine men, all of them of long experience and training in all the problems that relate to transportation. All we lack is legislation which will enable them to act in aid of the Supreme Court or of the circuit courts in the dissolution of the combination formed by the Union Pacific road and the reorganization in lawful form of their constituent parts. Their powers would be advisory. The matter would be referred to such a commission as it would be to a master in chancery. Their views would be given to the court in the shape of a report. Then the court itself, after hearing counsel upon both sides, could either accept or reject the report or modify it as it saw fit.

We are now having an interminable controversy over the dissolution of the Union Pacific system. The court itself must be in doubt. The Attorney General himself must be in doubt, for I do not think he claims to be an expert in transportation. The roads themselves are all in confusion as to what should be done, the Union Pacific on the one hand claiming that the original contemplation of this legislation should be carried out, and that the Union Pacific and the Central Pacific should be united in one system, the Southern Pacific on the other hand claiming that the Central Pacific is a valuable portion of its system, and will enable it, with a radial system stretching north and south and east from San Francisco, to meet the great transportation requirements of that region to its entire satisfaction. In this contention the California Railroad Commission sustains the Southern Pacific.

So far as I am concerned, from my knowledge of the transportation of that region, I am in doubt, though I am inclined to think that we of Nevada should change the view which we once entertained that the Central Pacific ought to be united with the Union Pacific and that the considerations which the building of the Panama Canal now present to us should be carefully weighed.

I hope that some time during the session we shall be able to take up this great question, first, of giving the Interstate Commerce Commission power to aid the courts in the dissolution of these great railway systems where a dissolution is decreed by the courts to be necessary; second, giving that commission the preliminary power of inquiring into the question as to whether these great systems have violated the Sherman Act and, without litigation, requiring them to make adjustments that will relieve them from the charge of an unlawful conspiracy in restraint of trade; then, if the corporation should still remain recalcitrant, itself bringing suit in court and conducting the case there as an ally of the Attorney General and as an equal of the Attorney General's office in the administration of the law.

So far as interstate trade is concerned, I hope we shall organize a great commission of experts analogous to the Interstate Commerce Commission that will inquire into the problems of interstate trade just as that commission has inquired into all the problems of interstate transportation, and that, without the power to fix prices, can inquire into practices that are in restraint of trade, and, without the clumsy procedure of the courts, give prompt relief to the people of the country, thus bringing the corporations of the country into line with the law without the tedious process of suits in court, and without the failures of justice which thus far, without attaching responsibility to anyone, simply by reason of conditions that were difficult of control, have resulted in decrees that were without satisfaction either to the parties concerned or to the American people.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I would not halt the favorable consideration of this resolution if I could. Yet I can not help wondering where we are going to end in this investigation if we undertake to chase down every newspaper interview and newspaper rumor that comes to our attention. Perhaps it is well to let the dance go merrily on and engage the attention of the Senate during the summer months in a matter that a committee now has under consideration.

I notice that Judge Lovett says that he has not seen any of these men and that he does not believe they could have done what it is represented they said to somebody they could do. I apprehend that when Judge Lovett is brought before this committee it will be found that some irresponsible men have said to some other irresponsible men that there was somebody in Washington who could do great things for this corporation if he was only engaged to do them. That is my notion about what the result will be so far as summoning Judge Lovett before this committee is concerned.

It is very probable that to-morrow there will be another newspaper interview stating that somebody has said to somebody else that there is a lobby in Washington that can do something for some other enterprise, good or bad; and, of course, we will send that to this committee, which is working so assiduously and honestly to ferret out the evil doings on the part of the so-called lobby in Washington. I fear that if we continue along those lines, instead of accomplishing a great good we may bring this whole matter into disrepute.

As I said in the beginning, I have no objection to the passage of the resolution. Indeed, having been offered, it ought to pass; and there is a bare possibility that some information may be obtained that will be of value to us. But the fact is that at the present time there is nothing before the Senate relating to the reorganization of the Union Pacific Railroad. There is not even a resolution, and it is a rare thing for us to be without a resolution on some subject. There is not a proposition of any kind here relating to it; and I can not help seriously thinking that we are chasing something the result of which will not be of any great importance either to the Senate or to the people of the country.

If it be true that certain men have been engaged in this business so far as this great corporation is concerned, it is of some interest to the country to know that fact; and yet I can not, for the life of me, understand precisely what we can do about it if we ascertain that to be the case. If they have made these propositions to Judge Lovett, or through other parties to him, concerning this matter, they must relate to some prior occurrence or some prior condition; because, as I have said, at the present time there is nothing at all before the Senate concerning the subject.

That is all I care to say about this matter, Mr. President. I really hope we will be careful in loading down this committee with so much extraneous matter that they will find it utterly impossible to accomplish the task which was first given to them to do. Already the chairman says we must extend the time for the hearings, and of course we will do that if the committee asks for it; but it seems to me we ought to keep the matter within reasonably circumscribed lines and try to ascertain the facts that were first called to the attention of the Senate by the Chief Executive, and determine whether or not the suggestions made were well grounded.

I shall vote for the resolution, but I am somewhat fearful that Judge Lovett may disclaim his interview. That very often happens. I presume the Senator from Nebraska, who is a very diligent Senator and a very frank Senator, has not taken the trouble to ascertain whether or not Judge Lovett admits that he gave out the interview. We have had so many interviews in the newspapers one morning to be denied the next that I am somewhat afraid that when we come to investigate this matter we will find that the interview is a newspaper "fake." It may not be so. If it is not, of course no harm can come from getting all the information that is possible; but I can not see that very much good will come from it in any event.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, I am really surprised that the Senator from New Hampshire should take the view that he does and belittle the proposed investigation. This is not a rumor of some man telling some other man something. We have pending in the Supreme Court of the United States a suit perhaps as important, and involving as much money and as many people, as any case that ever was brought to that court, in which the reorganization of two of the greatest railroad companies in the world is involved. That suit is now pending there.

The president of the Union Pacific Railroad Co. makes this statement and this charge. It is not any ordinary charge, picked up on the street, as the Senator from New Hampshire would have us believe. If it be true that this sort of thing is going on, involving the settlement of that great litigation, involving the honor of Members of Congress and of members of the Cabinet, and particularly the Attorney General's office that has direct connection with this litigation, then it seems that whether we can do anything or not we ought to know what the truth is, and the country ought to be given an opportunity to know all there is in it. When we know what there is in it, it will be time enough to decide whether we can or whether we want to do anything. Perhaps publicity will be sufficient. That is the greatest cure of all, after all.

I should like to say to the Senator from New Hampshire that I have had no direct communication with Mr. Lovett. If it had not been that we had a committee now appointed that it seemed to me was peculiarly equipped for this investigation, I, perhaps, would have communicated with him before I introduced the resolution. But this statement is couched in language inclosed in quotation marks, and purports to give the exact language of Mr. Lovett and the charges that he makes. If an investigation should show certain conditions, the matter might, perhaps, become a subject of inquiry by the Supreme Court of the United States. I take it that if the things are true that are charged by Mr. Lovett, it may develop that the parties guilty of them are guilty also of contempt of the highest tribunal in the land.

It seemed to me that there was only one thing for the Senate to do when it had a committee now investigating this question, and that was immediately to inquire into this charge, which, in my judgment, is more severe and more important than anything that so far has been brought to the attention of the committee or that has been charged in connection with the investigation.

Personally I shall be glad if it shall develop that there is nothing in it. For the honor of our country and our fellow citizens I would rather there were no truth in the charge; so I shall not be displeased if it develops that such is the case. But the Senate, with a committee now investigating lobbyists, can not afford to let pass this particular charge, coming from the source that it does, the president of a great railroad company now involved in litigation in our own Supreme Court.

Mr. WORKS obtained the floor.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, if the Senator will permit me a word——

Mr. WORKS. Certainly; I yield to the Senator from New Hampshire.

Mr. GALLINGER. I simply want to assure the Senator from Nebraska that I have no disposition to belittle this matter at all. If the Senate wants to investigate this newspaper allegation, certainly I, as I said in the beginning, have no objection to the passage of the resolution.

The Senator calls attention to the fact that this matter is before the Supreme Court of the United States. The Senator surely does not believe that any man would approach the head of a great railroad corporation with the suggestion that if he employed certain men the decision of the judges of the Supreme Court could be in any way influenced in determining a great case?

Mr. NORRIS. Will the Senator yield to me there?

Mr. GALLINGER. Certainly.

Mr. NORRIS. I do not think that at all; but the Senator must remember that the Attorney General of the United States represents the United States in that litigation.

Mr. GALLINGER. Certainly.

Mr. NORRIS. I take it that if the Attorney General agreed to a proposition of reorganization by the railroad companies the court itself would agree to it, and would enter the proper order. So I presume that if there is anything in this charge, it means that the people have influence, either directly or indirectly, with the Attorney General or those attorneys representing the Government in the suit. Since it speaks of Congressmen, I suppose they expect to reach other officials through Members of the Senate or House of Representatives.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I recall the fact that a good many years ago it was said of a certain gentleman that he took contracts to deliver the votes of Senators on certain bills. He sat in the gallery and had a contingent fee in the voting of a particular Senator. If the Senator chanced to vote his way, he got the fee, and if he did not he did not lose anything; but he never communicated with the Senator. We can readily see how that might happen.

The present Attorney General has made a great reputation for himself. He is a great lawyer, and, as I have read his accomplishments before the courts, he has never failed to do his duty in the cases that have come before him before he became Attorney General. I think it would be rather love's labor lost for anybody to undertake to influence that gentleman's views on a great question of this kind through some local attorney, who perhaps was gambling on the decision that might be reached in this case.

Mr. NORRIS. Will the Senator allow me?

Mr. GALLINGER. Certainly; I yield to the Senator.

Mr. NORRIS. I do not believe it is a question as to whether the Attorney General could be influenced. That is not the real gist of this investigation, as I understand it. I am not claiming that he could be influenced. If there are people who are making propositions of that kind, that they can influence public men, even though all the claims be without foundation, their conduct is even more detestable, in my judgment, than that of the man who can make good his representation.

Mr. GALLINGER. I quite agree with the Senator on that point, Mr. President, and I agree with the Senator that every rascal ought to be hunted down and punished, but it is a great big task when we undertake to accomplish that result.

I content myself, Mr. President, by simply adding that I have no disposition to obstruct or defeat this resolution, but I felt like uttering a warning word as to the path we are entering upon and expressing a little wonderment as to precisely where we are going to come out at the end of the journey.

Mr. WORKS. Mr. President——

Mr. STONE. Mr. President, I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator will state it.

Mr. STONE. I desire to know what question is before the Senate.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The resolution offered by the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS].

Mr. STONE. Is that under consideration?

The VICE PRESIDENT. It is under consideration by unanimous consent.

Mr. WORKS. Mr. President, we have entered upon this investigation, and I think it should be made thorough and complete. But I agree with the Senator from New Hampshire that we ought to be careful and not load down the investigation by running out after newspaper reports of what may have occurred. I do not regard this particular matter as seriously as the Senator from Nebraska seems to do. There is no intimation in the interview which took place on the part of Judge Lovett that any effort had been made to influence Congress or the Department of Justice. It is a mere statement that some people he had not been willing even to see had pretended to him that they had influence in certain directions. Still I have no objection to entering upon that matter to find out what the fact is with respect to it.

But, Mr. President, I have never believed that the courts of this country should have taken upon themselves the duty or obligation of reorganizing these corporations after they have been declared to exist in violation of law. I do not believe that that responsibility should be placed in the first instance upon the Attorney General. I do not believe that the Supreme Court of the United States should be called upon to determine how these corporations shall be reorganized or that they should take upon themselves that responsibility. In my judgment, when these combinations are decreed to have existed in violation of law and a decree dissolving them has been entered by the court, they should be left to reorganize themselves, and if they fail to do it the decree will stand against them as declaring that they are exercising their powers in violation of law.

When this course is taken, and the Attorney General, acting in a capacity that I do not believe he ought to act in at all, consents that these corporations may reorganize, and that consent is accepted by the Supreme Court of the United States, the result is that we have a corporation or a number of corporations organized in such a way that nobody can inquire in the future as to the legality of the combination as authorized by the decree of the Supreme Court of the United States. I believe it is a great mistake.

Why should the Supreme Court of the United States help to organize corporations that it has held are acting in violation of law? But, Mr. President, we have entered upon that course, mistakenly I think. Some may have claimed that they have some influence with the Attorney General in order to bring about a reorganization satisfactory to the railroad companies. If so, I think it is entirely proper to inquire into that question.

There is nothing now before Congress relating to that subject, but there may be. I think it is quite possible that in view of the course taken by the Supreme Court of the United States it may be necessary for Congress to legislate with respect to this very question. And it is a very important one.

I agree thoroughly with the Senator from Nebraska that the subject matter of the interview on the part of Judge Lovett is a very serious and important one. But what has been said by him with respect to it does not seem to me to be of very much consequence. Yet I am not going to enter any opposition to the resolution, because as it has been introduced I think it should be followed up and the investigation made.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the adoption of the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

PRICE OF OIL IN OKLAHOMA.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair lays before the Senate a resolution coming over from a previous day, which will be read.

The Secretary read Senate resolution 109, submitted by Mr. OWEN on the 17th instant, as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of Commerce is directed to make a thorough investigation into the price of oil in Oklahoma and report to the Senate whether or not the price is artificially fixed below the general market level in the United States, quality and transportation considered; and if so, by whom such prices are fixed and the method by which it is done.

Mr. OWEN. I ask for the adoption of the resolution.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the adoption of the resolution.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I should like to ask the Senator from Oklahoma on what theory he thinks the Department of Commerce should inquire into the price of oil within the State. It does not seem to me, as I gathered the sense of the resolution, that it applies to commerce between the States, but only as to the price within the State of Oklahoma.

Mr. OWEN. Mr. President, the State of Oklahoma has a large oil field and gas field, an extension of the great field discovered in Kansas, and which has since then extended to Texas. There are three pipe lines running from that field to the seacoast—one to the Gulf near Beaumont, one to New Orleans, and one to Bayonne, N. J., by way of Whiting, Ind. The price of oil in Oklahoma has been as low as 32 cents a barrel and then 40 cents a barrel. Recently it has increased. It is now selling approximately at 88 cents a barrel, while oil of like quality is selling for almost a dollar a barrel more in Pennsylvania. The transportation by pipe lines is very cheap. It is perfectly obvious that there is some mysterious power fixing the price of that oil regardless of the question of quality and the cost of transportation. It is of great interest to the people of the United States in dealing with this oil. It is an interstate commodity which is being shipped by these pipe lines across the States of Oklahoma, Texas, and other States to the seaboard. It is of great importance to the people who use oil to know why it is that this price is artificially fixed and by what method.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. The question I wanted the Senator to answer was whether or not the oil from the wells in question is being transported from the State of Oklahoma to other States.

Mr. OWEN. By interstate pipe lines. It is an interstate commodity by pipe lines going out of our wells to the seaboard.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Then I can see some foundation for it.

Mr. OWEN. The Department of Commerce have the machinery by which this inquiry can be easily and economically made. I thought that was the proper place where the inquiry should be made.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I have no objection to the resolution whatever if the article is being transported from the State of Oklahoma to another State.

Mr. OWEN. It passes right out of these wells by three interstate pipe lines to the seaboard.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. When the Senator speaks of the price of oil does he refer to the price paid by the owners of pipe lines to the owners of the oil wells?

Mr. OWEN. Yes, sir; as well as to the prices paid by anyone in the field for crude oil.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Not to any retail price which may exist in the State of Oklahoma?

Mr. OWEN. No; the wholesale price only.

Mr. GALLINGER. I will ask the Senator if he will not agree to amend the resolution so as to have it read:

The price of oil in Oklahoma which enters into interstate commerce.

Mr. OWEN. I have no objection.

Mr. GALLINGER. So that we might not have it appear that we are investigating a State matter. If the Senator will accept that amendment, I will offer it.

Mr. OWEN. Let it read "transported by interstate pipe lines."

Mr. GALLINGER. Very well.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will so modify the resolution.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I will say that my only anxiety was that we should not set a precedent for examining purely a State matter.

Mr. OWEN. In line 3, after the word "Oklahoma," insert "transported by interstate pipe lines."

Mr. STONE. Question!

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the adoption of the resolution as modified.

The resolution as modified was agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of Commerce is directed to make a thorough investigation into the price of oil in Oklahoma transported by interstate pipe lines and report to the Senate whether or not the price is artificially fixed below the general market level in the United States, quality and transportation considered; and if so, by whom such prices are fixed and the method by which it is done.

INVESTIGATION OF ATTEMPTS TO INFLUENCE LEGISLATION.

Mr. BRISTOW. I should like to call up Senate resolution 102.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Kansas asks unanimous consent to call up and dispose of Senate resolution 102. The Secretary will read it.

Mr. STONE. When was this resolution presented?

The VICE PRESIDENT. It is on the calendar.

Mr. BRISTOW. I should like to say to the Senator from Missouri that the resolution provides for the expenses of the lobbying committee. There has been no provision made yet for paying the expenses, and the financial clerk can not pay any of them until the resolution is passed.

Mr. STONE. I have no objection to the passage of the resolution, but we have just had up one resolution which ought to have been passed in a minute, and it took an hour of useless discussion.

Mr. BRISTOW. I think this resolution will pass in half a minute, if the Senator will allow it to be considered.

Mr. STONE. I am afraid if the Senator gets up the resolution we will have another hour expended in that way, and I want to go on with the appropriation bill. Can not the Senator from Kansas let it go over until to-morrow?

Mr. BRISTOW. If it leads to any discussion I will withdraw it. I think it could have been passed by this time. There is no objection to it that I know of.

Mr. STONE. Very well.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read the resolution.

The Secretary read Senate resolution 102, reported by Mr. WILLIAMS from the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate on the 10th instant, as follows:

Resolved, That the expenses of the investigation of the charge of a "lobby being maintained in Washington," ordered by the Senate under resolution of May 29, 1913, be paid out of the miscellaneous items of the contingent fund of the Senate upon vouchers to be approved by the chairman of the Committee on the Judiciary or the chairman of the subcommittee thereof.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment of the committee will be stated.

The SECRETARY. The committee proposes to add at the end of the resolution the words:

To employ a stenographer at a compensation of not to exceed $1 per printed page.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BRISTOW. I move to amend the resolution by striking out in line 5 the words "miscellaneous items of the."

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. In line 5, before the words "contingent fund," strike out the words "miscellaneous items of the."

Mr. SMOOT. I merely wish to ask the Senator a question. Is not that language usually in such resolutions? Such resolutions generally provide that the money shall be paid out of the miscellaneous items of the contingent fund.

Mr. BRISTOW. The financial clerk advised me that it was unusual, and that the words ought to be stricken out. I simply moved the amendment at his suggestion, so that the resolution might be in the usual form.

Mr. SMOOT. I thought the resolution was in the usual form. I may be mistaken, however.

Mr. BRISTOW. No; it is not in the usual form.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment submitted by the Senator from Kansas.

The amendment was agreed to.

The resolution as amended was agreed to.

AMBASSADOR TO SPAIN.

Mr. O'GORMAN. I ask unanimous consent for the consideration of the bill (S. 2319) authorizing the appointment of an ambassador to Spain. It is an emergency bill. It simply provides for raising the legation in Spain to an embassy. It was reported unanimously by the Committee on Foreign Relations.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be read for the information of the Senate.

The Secretary read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the President is hereby authorized to appoint, as the representative of the United States, an ambassador to Spain, who shall receive as his compensation the sum of $17,500 per annum.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the bill was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

INDIAN APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. STONE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Indian appropriation bill be now laid before the Senate.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 1917) making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Bureau of Indian Affairs, for fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes, and for other purposes, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1914.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The pending amendment is that offered by the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. STERLING] to the amendment of the committee on page 57. The amendment to the amendment will be stated by the Secretary.

The SECRETARY. On page 57, at the end of the proposed committee amendment at the bottom of the page, it is proposed to insert:

Provided, That the foregoing provision shall not apply to contracts made with or services rendered any Indian who is a citizen of the United States, has severed his tribal relations, and has been or is the owner in fee of lands under grant from the Government of the United States.

Mr. STERLING. Mr. President, the reading of the amendment proposed by the Committee on Indian Affairs will disclose the sweeping and drastic nature of its provisions. It reads:

No contract made with any Indian, where such contract relates to the tribal funds or property in the hands of the United States, shall be valid, nor shall any payment for services rendered in relation thereto be made unless the consent of the United States has previously been given.

We know something of what is meant by the term "Indian" as used in the statutes relating to Indians and the Indian service or Indian affairs, and we thus know who will be included within the sweeping provisions of this amendment. Depending somewhat upon conditions, as I understand, any person having any trace of Indian blood in his veins is an Indian within the meaning of the Federal Statutes. Of course tribal relations and the question of adoption into an Indian tribe sometimes determine, indeed, whether one having a small trace of Indian blood in his veins is in fact an Indian; but I think it is generally conceded that all those who have one-fourth Indian blood in their veins are Indians under all statutes and decisions, State or Federal.

Among the part-blood Indians and, I may say, among those that are full-blood Indians there are men who are most intelligent and well qualified to enter into any contract respecting their individual property or respecting any tribal funds or property over which the Government has control. Many Indians, as we know, have occupied the highest positions; their presence has graced the Chamber of the Senate as well as that of the House of Representatives. Yet under the sweeping provisions of this amendment no Indian can make a contract relative to any tribal fund or any tribal property. It makes no difference what his necessities are, what his qualifications are, or what would suit his convenience, he is unable to make a contract in regard to that property unless he has the consent of the United States.

Mr. President, by reference to section 2103 of the Revised Statutes, we find the most sweeping provisions in regard to contracts made with Indian tribes or with Indians who are not citizens of the United States. Section 2103 provides:

SEC. 2103. No agreement shall be made by any person with any tribe of Indians, or individual Indians not citizens of the United States, for the payment or delivery of any money or other thing of value, in present or in prospective, or for the granting or procuring any privilege to him, or any other person in consideration of services for said Indians relative to their lands, or to any claims growing out of or in reference to annuities, installments, or other moneys, claims, demands, or thing, under laws or treaties with the United States, or official acts of any officers thereof, or in any way connected with or due from the United States, unless such contract or agreement be executed and approved as follows:

The statute then provides that the contract shall be executed in writing and in duplicate; that it shall be executed before a judge of a court of record and bear the approval of the Secretary of the Interior and Commissioner of Indian Affairs. It further provides—that it shall contain the names of all parties in interest, their residence, and occupation; and if made with a tribe, by their tribal authorities, the scope of authority and the reason for exercising that authority shall be given specifically; that the contract shall have a fixed limited time to run, which shall be distinctly stated.

The judge before whom such contract or agreement is executed shall certify officially the time when and place where such contract or agreement was executed, and that it was in his presence, and who are the interested parties thereto, as stated to him at the time—

And so forth.

And then provision is made that any contract made in violation of the provisions of this statute shall be null and void. So, then, in any action by an attorney, for example, upon a contract made with an Indian not a citizen, the showing that the statute had not been complied with would be a complete bar in any court to the action thus brought. Any excess which may have been paid on an unauthorized contract over and above the amount approved by the Secretary and commissioner can be recovered back. Besides this, any person receiving money from an Indian contrary to the statute is liable to criminal prosecution. So we see that here is ample protection given all Indians not citizens of the United States. Nothing could give them greater protection than this statute.

With reference to Indians who are citizens of the United States the amendment which I have proposed reads:

Provided, The foregoing provision shall not apply to contracts made with or services rendered any Indian who is a citizen of the United States, has severed his tribal relations, and has been or is the owner in fee of lands under grant from the Government of the United States.

This proposed amendment to the committee amendment goes further than to simply provide that Indian citizens of the United States may be able to enter into such contracts. It provides that before the citizen may make such a contract he shall be the owner in fee of lands under grant from the United States.

I submit, Mr. President, that when a patent has been issued first in trust to an Indian for a period of 20 or 25 years, he not to receive the patent in fee for all that length of time, unless the Secretary of the Interior shall within that time find him a competent Indian and, in his discretion, issue the patent to him before the expiration of 20 or 25 years, that when he has thus proven his qualifications to receive a patent he has also proved himself competent to make and enter into a contract affecting his interest in tribal funds or tribal property.

It may be asked, Mr. President, what the objection is to requiring that the consent of the United States be previously given? Suppose, for example, it is an adverse claim against the United States, an attempt upon the part of some Indian to establish his rights in an allotment or to tribal funds, he must get the consent of the adverse party before he can make a contract with an attorney to institute the proceeding against the United States to enforce his rights.

How shall the consent of the United States be given? Shall it be given by an act of Congress, or is the consent of the Secretary of the Interior to be deemed the consent of the United States? The amendment as proposed by the committee does not say in what way the consent of the United States shall be obtained. An emergency may arise, and the necessity for immediate or speedy action exist on the part of this qualified Indian to make a contract with an attorney to institute proceedings in his behalf, and yet under the committee amendment no proceedings can be instituted until the matter has been presented to the Secretary of the Interior, and perhaps a hearing had before he will determine whether or not to give his consent to the making of a contract or an agreement.

It may be claimed, Mr. President, that this is not meant to guard the rights of qualified and competent Indians, but only to guard the rights of those who are citizens of the United States, but who are incompetent to make a contract. There may be now and then an Indian not competent to safely contract, but I think, Mr. President, in regard to contracts of this kind that public sentiment now has something to do and will in the future have something to do in Oklahoma, in South Dakota, and in other States of the Union where there are Indians in regard to the kind of a contract that any attorney or agent may make with the Indians, and public sentiment itself will have much to do in preventing contracts that work oppression and hardship upon the Indians. I believe that in a comparatively short time this matter will take care of itself, especially in the limited class of cases to which my amendment applies, and that in these it will be a rare thing to hear of an unjust contract made in relation to Indian funds or property.

So, Mr. President, here is a simple amendment providing that any Indian who is a citizen of the United States and has severed tribal relations, who has a home of his own, of course, and has received a patent to Government land may be enabled to enter into a contract. While now and then the amendment proposed by the committee may protect some one, yet it will work or is apt to work an injustice to a great number of Indians. We do not educate, we do not ennoble the Indian by always saying that he is irresponsible and that he must be under a condition of tutelage or wardship to the Government. The way to ennoble and educate the Indian is to make him feel his responsibility and put him more fully on his own resources, and surely when he is qualified and competent after 20 or 25 years at any rate to receive a patent to Government land under the supervision of the Secretary of the Interior he should then be given the right that any other citizen possesses—the right to make and enter into a contract in regard to his property, be it property in the custody of the Nation or property aside from that.

So, Mr. President, after reading section 2103 of the Revised Statutes and sections following and seeing how all Indians not citizens and how all tribes are there protected, and then noting the safeguard here in regard to Indian contracts and the qualifications that must be possessed by any Indian before he can enter into any contract with relation to his tribal property, I can not help but think that this amendment should prevail.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from South Dakota to the amendment reported by the committee.

Mr. FALL. Mr. President, I have no desire to take up any time in further argument of this matter, but I do desire to correct one or two statements which are in the RECORD of yesterday. For instance, during the course of my remarks I referred to a tax case recently decided by the Supreme Court of the United States, and it seemed to be the impression of one of the Senators from Oklahoma that the regular tribal attorneys were responsible for the result in that case. I hold in my hand the decision of the Supreme Court of the United States in the October term, 1911, in the case of Choate and others against Trapp, secretary of the State board of equalization, and others. I merely desire to call attention to this case, Mr. President, for the purpose of showing that it was brought under a contract by the celebrated lobbyist, McMurray, and put through the Supreme Court of the United States. The case to which the Senator from Oklahoma referred was one of limited character, affecting taxes on homesteads alone, which was, however, passed upon in the Choate case and went off on an opinion of five or six lines of the Supreme Court of the United States.

I made the statement as to how this case was won, and I said that something like $21,000,000 were saved to the Indians by the services of this lobbyist. I desire to call attention to the Supreme Court decision in the case for the purpose of verifying my statement.

I made a statement also that the fees paid to certain lobbyists which were spoken of as so enormous had been passed upon by more than one tribunal. In the case of McLish against Shaw and others in the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia the matter of the fees was passed upon. It was not necessary for the decision in the case, but nevertheless the judge in rendering the decision in that case did refer to the services which had been performed and passed upon the amount of the fee as being reasonable.

The statement made by myself in the RECORD that less than 9 per cent was paid to the attorneys was incorrect in that the percentage was approximately 4½ per cent of the value of the property saved by the attorneys. Judge Anderson, in his decision, says:

So far as the reasonableness of this compensation is concerned, I agree with the Assistant Attorney General that this is not a matter before this court. If it were, and I were called upon to pass upon that question, either as a court or as a juror sitting to try that question, I do not hesitate to say that in the light of the facts now before the court I would have no difficulty in concluding that the fees allowed were in every way reasonable.

I have here, Mr. President, a report of a statement made by Gov. D. H. Johnston, of the Chickasaw Nation, to the Treaty Rights Association of the Chickasaw and Choctaw Nations last year. I am not inclined to take up the time of the Senate, and unless I can have consent to have this statement published I regret to say that there is no other method of getting it before the public. It should be made public, because if it were read by Senators or if they would listen to the reading of this statement by Gov. Johnston concerning the actual necessities of the case, why they seek to employ attorneys, the limitation on their compensation, what services these contracts provide shall be performed and for which payment is made, no sensible man, unless he was governed by some motive of personal antagonism rather than by his duty as a Senator, would, in my judgment, find any earthly cause of complaint.

I asked the Senator from Arizona [Mr. ASHURST] on yesterday if it were not his opinion that not one cent of money could be paid out upon these contracts or any similar Indian contracts without an act of Congress. He seemed to be in doubt upon that subject. I desire to call his attention to the provisions in the general deficiency appropriation act approved June 25, 1910 (36 Stat. L., 808), the Indian appropriation act approved March 3, 1911, and the Indian appropriation act approved August 24, 1912, and to the fact that there are in this bill now exactly similar words to those contained in the provisions of the acts referred to. Under the terms of every one of these separate acts it is impossible for any attorney to get out of these tribal funds a single dollar of all this great, wonderful wealth that they speak of without direct action of Congress.

That is all I have to say, Mr. President, except that I should like to ask unanimous consent that this statement of Gov. Johnston, who is an official representative of his people, may be printed in the RECORD as part of my remarks.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the matter will be printed in the RECORD.

The matter referred to is as follows:

To the Members of the Treaty Rights Association of the Chickasaw and Choctaw Nations:

As chairman of the permanent organization known as the Treaty Rights Association of the Chickasaw and Choctaw Nations (and also as governor of the Chickasaw Nation) I have called you together in mass convention to consider and act upon important matters vitally affecting the rights and interests of the Chickasaw Nation and people at this time.

Under conditions heretofore existing, since the removal of our people to their western home more than three generations ago our legislative body assembled each year at our capital to not only pass laws but to make known to our guardian, the great Government of the United States, the wishes of the Chickasaws relative to the administration and disposition of their trust property and moneys.

During the whole term of my service as governor, until very recent years, the responsibility of taking necessary action for the protection of our nation and people when their rights and interests have been assailed from within and from without has been shared with our legislative body. This responsibility our legislative body shared with a degree of courage, patriotism, and statesmanship not excelled by a like body of any State; and whatever credit is due for what has been accomplished throughout this most strenuous and thrilling period of our tribal history should be generously divided among those devoted members who saw service for many long years upon the firing lines and open fields of our nation's battles.

Now, however, this body no longer has legal existence. It is not for us to now question the justness or fairness of the changes recent years have brought about in our tribal affairs. When the Government of the United States in its wisdom saw fit to practically abolish our tribal government, it was doubtless in the belief that the passing of tribal autonomy would witness an actual closing up of tribal affairs and a distribution per capita of tribal properties and moneys.

Events have shown this belief not to have been well founded. Millions upon millions of dollars in value of tribal property remain undivided and undisposed of. We are still being attacked from many quarters by those who would wrongfully share in this property when disposition and division finally comes. There still remain unconsidered and unsettled claims and controversies running into aggregate sums of money almost beyond the belief of those not familiar with the history of our affairs. Some of these matters are now pending and some are still to be presented to the courts, the executive departments, and to Congress.

If the rights and interests of the Chickasaws are to be adequately protected, constant and devoted service upon the part of the accredited representatives of the tribe is required.

I am not willing to bear these responsibilities alone when they may be shared with those who are vitally and individually affected, and I know of no better plan than to call together in mass convention the leading citizens of the tribe.

I shall in this communication lay before you such information as I have upon the subjects requiring consideration and action at your hands, together with my suggestions and recommendations, and in whatever action you may take I am confident that you will be moved by sentiments of the loftiest patriotism and devotion to the best interests of the Chickasaw Nation and people.

REMOVAL OF RESTRICTIONS.

The interests of our people demand that there be a revision of the laws relating to the removal of restrictions upon the alienation of Indian lands.

Under existing law there are three classes of citizens, in so far as alienation of lands is concerned—the unrestricted, the semirestricted, and the restricted.

Those of less than one-half Indian blood are unrestricted, and may alienate their lands without supervision. Those of one-half Indian blood are semirestricted. They may sell their surplus land without supervision, and their homestead allotments, if found competent by the Secretary of the Interior. Those having more than one-half Indian blood are wholly restricted, as regards the alienation of their lands. They may sell no part of their allotments without the approval of the Secretary of the Interior.

The present system is not effective. The laws are complicated and difficult of application. The facilities of the Interior Department are neither adequate nor sufficient for the administration of these laws.

I believe that all the lands of those having less than three-fourths Indian blood should be made alienable at once and that there should be an immediate distribution of all moneys due them now held by the Government.

This view is justified when we consider that the matter of the competency or incompetency of an individual having less than three-fourths Indian blood is not dependent upon the fact of Indian blood. If competent, there can be no objection to the removal of restrictions. If incompetent, such incompetency undoubtedly arises out of causes other than Indian blood, and the status of such person would parallel before the laws of the land that of all other races similarly situated.

I believe all will concede that those of three-fourths or more of Indian blood should be surrounded with proper safeguards and restrictions upon the alienation of their lands. Such persons are full bloods for all practical purposes, and their lack of familiarity with business conditions and the language and customs of the white man gives rise to the necessity for adequate protection of their property rights.

I know of no better plan than a practical continuance of the present system of supervision by local agents of the Interior Department. These officials are on the ground, can personally know of the competency of the Indian and the value of the property sought to be disposed of, and are also free from local political influence, so harmful in many instances to the discharge of their official duty. These agents can only be efficient and of benefit to those whom it is their duty to serve under the law if given proper facilities. I think we should urge that Congress make sufficient appropriation for this purpose.

LEASED DISTRICT.

No matter now pending approaches in magnitude and importance the claim of the Chickasaws and Choctaws for compensation for those western lands known as the "leased district."

For many years other matters then pressing demanded the undivided efforts before Congress and the departments of the representatives of the tribes. I have special reference to the settlement of citizenship claims, the suit for compensation for lands allotted Chickasaw freedmen, and the suit to prevent the taxation of Indian lands made nontaxable by treaty provisions.

I have always realized the justice of the demand of the Chickasaws and Choctaws for compensation for the "leased district" land and the magnitude of the sum of money to which the members of the tribes were entitled upon a fair settlement of the claim, and the time is now at hand for the Chickasaws and Choctaws to make known their appeal in dignified and solemn terms for such a settlement of this great claim as in equity and justice should be accorded a helpless ward by a strong and powerful guardian.

Under the treaty of 1866 the Chickasaws and Choctaws "ceded" these western lands to the United States for certain specific purposes. These purposes were, among other things, for the settlement of friendly Indians, for the removal of the Chickasaw and Choctaw freedmen, and also for the settlement of such members of the tribes as might desire to remove thereto. The treaty also provided for a fund of $300,000, which was to be held in trust by the United States pending the removal or adoption of the freedmen. It was provided that the Chickasaw and Choctaw freedmen were to be removed if the tribes failed to adopt them within two years, in which event the $300,000 was to be used for such removal. If the tribes adopted such freedmen within the time specified, they were to have the benefit of the $300,000.

The Chickasaw freedmen were never adopted. That tribe has never claimed nor has it ever received any part of the consideration. As to whether the Choctaw freedmen were legally adopted has always been a question, and that question has no bearing upon our present claim.

Certain friendly Indians were settled on these lands under the provisions of the treaty. The right of the Choctaws and Chickasaws to additional compensation for the land so used has been established by the action of Congress in its direct appropriation of money for the payment of same to the tribes. This money was paid out per capita in 1893, and is referred to as the "leased district" payment. The lands for which compensation is now asked were comprised in the same area. These lands aggregate some 6,000,000 acres (a part of the same area "ceded" in 1866 for the same specific purposes). They are included in the State of Oklahoma, and were disposed of by the United States to settlers upon the public domain for many millions of dollars.

In the case of The Choctaw and Chickasaw Nations v. The United States and the Wichitas and affiliated bands of Indians the meaning of the treaty of 1866 in "ceding" these lands to the United States was passed upon by the Court of Claims and the Supreme Court of the United States. The decision of the Court of Claims was in favor of the tribes. It held that the treaty of 1866 constituted a lease, and that when the United States ceased to use the land for the specific purposes therein set forth title reverted to the tribes. Upon appeal the Supreme Court of the United States reversed the Court of Claims and held that the cession in the treaty of 1866 was a conveyance, and that the tribes had no legal title to the land.

The Supreme Court, however, stated that any equitable claim for compensation on behalf of the tribes should be presented to Congress. It was certainly in the mind of the Supreme Court that there was an equity in favor of the Indians worthy of the substantial consideration of Congress. The Supreme Court does not use language idly and without meaning. Its view undoubtedly was our view at this time: The word "cede" has a definite legal meaning which the Supreme Court could not avoid, that the parties did not intend to convey title or to receive title; that the employment of the word "cede" was unfortunate and not expressive of the intentions of the parties, and that a duty rests upon Congress to make reparation by paying a fair value for the lands so taken.

In view of this decision our claim is based on equity, and we only ask such a settlement as any court in the civilized world would require a powerful guardian to make with its helpless ward.

The arguments in support of our claim for compensation for these lands would appear to be irresistible. The Indians say they understood the treaty to be a lease and not a conveyance. The Court of Claims, in an able and exhaustive opinion, sustained this view. The Supreme Court held to the contrary. These two great courts differed. The language of the treaty was sufficiently uncertain to support conflicting opinions of two great courts.

The whole line of decisions of the Supreme Court of the United States from the famous case of the Cherokee Nation v. Georgia down to the tax decision in our favor of only a few months ago, holds that Indian treaties must be construed as the Indians understood them, and that any doubtful meanings must be construed in their favor.

Did the United States mean to acquire title and did the Indians mean to convey it? The Supreme Court has said that the language employed amounts to a conveyance, but it appears to be clear that the parties intended a lease and not a conveyance. If it had intended to take title the United States would have permitted no conditions, as to use, to encumber the title. It would not have agreed to use the land for certain definite purposes. The Choctaws and Chickasaws were leasing their land for a nominal consideration for the accomplishment of certain things desirable to them, to wit, the settlement of friendly Indians as a protection against the wild and warlike tribes to the west, and to be relieved of their freedmen. This very treaty under which these lands were "ceded" also provided that any Choctaws or Chickasaws desiring to do so might remove to and settle on these lands. If the Indians were selling and the United States buying these lands, would this privilege have been required by the tribes or granted by the United States?

The whole series of transactions attending the making of the treaty and up to the present day tend to show that the Indians did not mean to part with the title and that the United States did not mean to acquire it, but that these lands, then far removed from civilization, were being used for the convenience of both the United States and the Choctaws and Chickasaws, and that the matter of title did not enter into the plans of either one of the parties to the treaty.

After all of this the only question now arising is: What final settlement is the United States, as guardian, willing to make with its wards, the Choctaws and Chickasaws? If both parties were properly before a court of justice, what settlement, under all the facts and transactions, would the United States be required, in equity and good conscience, to make?

That is the basis of our claim. The Government of the United States is made up of an aggregate of individuals, having human experiences and actuated by sentiments of fairness and justice; and I have perfect confidence in our ability to secure such a settlement of this claim as will be fair and just, both to the Government of the United States and to the Choctaws and Chickasaws.

MINOR CHOCTAW FREEDMEN.

In 1906, upon the request of the Chickasaws and Choctaws, the citizenship rolls were reopened for the enrollment of "new-born" children of regularly enrolled citizens and members.

The "supplementary agreement" of 1902 (sec. 3) definitely defines the terms "citizens and members" as follows:

"The word 'member' or 'members' and 'citizen' or 'citizens' shall be held to mean members or citizens of the Choctaw or Chickasaw Tribe of Indians in Indian Territory, not including freedmen."

Notwithstanding the use of these terms in the act of 1906 and its definition by the treaty of 1902, the Government of the United States saw fit to hold that the "new-born" children of Choctaw freedmen were entitled to enrollment; and accordingly approximately 500 have been enrolled and given 40-acre allotments. These allotments aggregate in value several hundred thousand dollars. The law is so plain and the rights of the Chickasaws and Choctaws have been so clearly violated that I have no doubt of our ability to reach a fair adjustment of the controversy when properly presented and considered.

CONCLUSION.

It is with distinct pleasure that I call your attention to the sentiments and harmony and friendship existing between the citizens of our tribe (who are also citizens of the great State of Oklahoma) and the other citizens of the State. This you already know more fully than I can here set forth.

With the passing of the tax litigation there are now no matters, either of sentiment or of property rights, over which differences could properly arise. That controversy was merely a difference of opinion in the construction of laws and treaties. This association authorized the institution of litigation testing the question as to the legal right of the State to impose taxes upon Indian lands exempted from taxation by treaty provisions. That litigation is now ended, and the decision of the Supreme Court of the United States sustaining the contentions of the Indians causes the whole matter to pass into history.

If the measures now so earnestly advocated by us are carried into laws and made effective, we will not only be directly benefited, but every citizen of the State will likewise be benefited. I refer to the early sale of all surplus and unallotted lands, the removal of restrictions upon the alienation of the lands of those competent to manage their own affairs, the collection from the United States of just claims now pending, and the distribution, per capita, among the Chickasaw people of all moneys due them.

The direct benefit to the State will be the placing upon the tax rolls of a vast acreage of land not now taxable and the distribution throughout the State of a vast volume of money, amounting to many millions of dollars now useless and idle in the hands of the United States Government.

I say these conditions of common interest lead to harmony and friendship between the Indian citizens and the white citizens. These conditions have already led to these relations. Many of our most prominent Indian citizens hold responsible official positions, from township to State government, and also in the Congress and the Senate of the United States. Our children attend side by side with the children of our white fellow citizens the schools of the State, from neighborhood school districts to the highest institutions of learning; and the relations thus formed have already led, are now leading, and will lead in the future to a mutual understanding and regard of great advantage to both races and the whole State.

I now suggest, in conclusion, that you proceed to the organization of this convention by the election of necessary and proper officers, and that after organization you proceed to consider and act upon the matters presented to you in this communication and such other matters affecting the rights and interests of our Nation and people as may properly come before you to the end that I, in my official capacity as governor, may usefully and effectively represent you.

Respectfully submitted.

D. H. JOHNSTON,
Governor of the Chickasaw Nation and
Chairman of the Treaty Rights
Association of the Chickasaw and Choctaw Nations.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is upon the adoption of the amendment offered by the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. STERLING] to the amendment of the committee.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Mr. President, I am quite in sympathy with the purpose of the proposed amendment. I served on the Indian Affairs Committee for a good many years, and my experience and observation there convinced me that restrictions of some sort ought to be thrown about the making of contracts with these Indians. I desire, however, to ask the chairman of the committee whether or not he thinks it is wise to provide in the amendment that the contract shall be void unless it receives the consent of the United States. That, if I understand correctly, would mean that it would be necessary in every case to procure an act of Congress. I do not know how frequently it may be necessary to make contracts with Indians; but I can conceive that there may be contracts of a perfectly legitimate character that ought to be made in the interest of the Indians themselves, and that there ought to be some easier way of determining whether the contract is a proper one than that of coming to Congress and procuring an act of Congress.

Mr. STONE. Mr. President, the amendment proposed by the Senate committee relates to tribal funds or property in the hands of the United States, and the limitation or restriction put upon the right of contract concerns only such trust funds or property in the hands of the United States.

It was thought by the committee that where the Government held a large sum of money, for example, belonging to a given tribe of Indians, which it was bound in good faith to administer and distribute in accordance with treaties or statutory requirements, it would not only be unnecessary that attorneys should be employed to importune the Government to perform its duties and exact large compensation for that supposed service, but in a way it would be an impeachment of the good faith of the administration.

The committee thought—I do not speak for myself, but I speak for the committee—that this particular class of property and these particular funds should be so hedged about as to make the making of such contracts with regard to them practically impossible. In my opinion an Indian who is a citizen in the full enjoyment of all his rights has a constitutional right to make contracts, and I am not so sure that he could not make a contract with reference to funds of this character. Nevertheless, the abridgment relates to these particular funds, as a matter of public policy.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. The Senator thinks the rights of the Indians would not be sufficiently safeguarded if the law should provide that the consent should be given by the Secretary of the Interior?

Mr. STONE. For myself, I should have no objection to having the consent of the United States expressed in that way, through the Secretary of the Interior.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Unless there are some special or peculiar reasons why this other course should be adopted, it seems to me it would be quite sufficient to provide that the contract shall receive the assent of an executive officer of that character.

Mr. STONE. I will say to the Senator that the committee thought there ought not to be any contract made.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. If that is true, then we should provide in express terms that no contract of that kind should be valid.

Mr. STONE. That might be done; but the committee thought that possibly some peculiar case might arise that would be exceptional.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. STERLING] to the amendment of the committee. [Putting the question.] The Chair is in doubt.

Mr. CATRON. I call for a division.

There were, upon a division—ayes 8, noes 18.

The VICE PRESIDENT. No quorum has voted. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Fall	Lippitt	Smith, Ga.
Bacon	Fletcher	McLean	Smith, Md.
Bankhead	Gallinger	Myers	Smith, S. C.
Bradley	Goff	Norris	Smoot
Brady	Gore	Owen	Sterling
Brandegee	Gronna	Perkins	Stone
Bristow	Hitchcock	Pittman	Sutherland
Bryan	Hollis	Poindexter	Thomas
Catron	Hughes	Pomerene	Thompson
Chamberlain	James	Robinson	Thornton
Chilton	Johnston, Ala.	Shafroth	Tillman
Clapp	Jones	Sheppard	Vardaman
Clark, Wyo.	Kern	Sherman	Williams
Colt	La Follette	Shively	Works
Crawford	Lane	Simmons
Dillingham	Lea	Smith, Ariz.

Mr. DILLINGHAM (when Mr. PAGE's name was called). I desire to announce that my colleague [Mr. PAGE] is unavoidably absent from the Chamber.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming (when Mr. WARREN's name was called). My colleague [Mr. WARREN] is unavoidably absent from the city.

Mr. CLAPP. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry. I understood that awhile ago there was a rule adopted here that after the first call of the roll a Senator could not explain the absence of a colleague until a second call. I observe that the Secretary is about to report the result of the call. If I am in order, I desire to state that my colleague [Mr. NELSON] is unavoidably detained from the Chamber upon business of the Senate. I wish this announcement to stand for all the roll calls of the day.

Mr. GALLINGER. I take the liberty of announcing that the junior Senator from Maine [Mr. BURLEIGH] is detained from the Senate by protracted illness.

Mr. SHEPPARD. My colleague, the senior Senator from Texas [Mr. CULBERSON], is unavoidably absent. He is paired with the Senator from Delaware [Mr. DU PONT]. I wish this statement to stand for the day.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Sixty-two Senators have answered to the roll call. A quorum of the Senate is present. The question is upon agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. STERLING] to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment to the amendment was rejected.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question now recurs upon the amendment of the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. OWEN. I offer an amendment, to follow line 24, page 57, which I had printed in the RECORD yesterday, on page 2047:

> And no contract made with any person claiming citizenship in any Indian tribe, where such contract affects the tribal funds or property in the hands of the United States, or the fee is to be paid from the claimant's portion of tribal funds or property, shall be valid, nor shall any payment for services rendered in relation thereto be made unless the consent of the United States has previously been given.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. The amendment of the committee was adopted?

Mr. OWEN. Yes.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. This is proposed as a substitute for the amendment?

Mr. OWEN. No, sir; as an addition to it.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. I desire to ask the chairman of the committee whether it would not be well to consider the committee amendments first?

Mr. STONE. I made that suggestion some time ago, and we have proceeded on that theory. I suppose it would be just as agreeable to everyone.

Mr. OWEN. I would just as soon defer offering my amendment until after the committee amendments have been disposed of, but while attention was on this subject I thought I would dispose of it.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. My only purpose was that I thought there were one or two committee amendments that might be disposed of, while this one might perhaps cause some discussion.

Mr. STONE. I should prefer to go on.

Mr. OWEN. Very well; go ahead. I will withdraw my amendment for the present.

Mr. CRAWFORD. I could not hear the conversation that just took place, and I am not able to understand just what the program is at present. Is it to act simply upon the committee amendments at this time?

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Yes; and to defer the presentation of others until the committee amendments have been disposed of.

Mr. STONE. The suggestion that I made, which seems to have been generally concurred in, was that we proceed first with the committee amendments, until we reach the end of the bill.

Mr. CRAWFORD. After the committee amendments have been acted upon, the bill from the first part through will be open to such amendments as Senators may desire to offer?

Mr. STONE. Yes.

The VICE PRESIDENT. It will. The Secretary will continue the reading of the bill.

The reading of the bill was resumed, beginning with line 1, page 58.

The next amendment of the Committee on Indian Affairs was, on page 59, after line 4, to insert:

> That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized to make a per capita payment to the Choctaw and Chickasaw Indians entitled thereto of $100 each, and to the Cherokee citizens entitled thereto of $15 each, out of the tribal funds of said nations now on hand, and to cover the expense of making said payment the said Secretary is authorized to use not to exceed $10,000 out of the interest which has accrued from the funds of said tribes on deposit in the State and national banks of the State of Oklahoma.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I wish to make a point of order against that paragraph.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Mississippi will state his point of order.

Mr. WILLIAMS. It is that it is general and new legislation upon an appropriation bill.

Mr. OWEN. Before the Chair passes upon that matter——

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Oklahoma is recognized.

Mr. OWEN. I do not think that this item of the bill can be properly construed to be general legislation. I call attention to the precedent on page 54 of Gilfry's Precedents, published by the Senate:

> The Century Dictionary says:
> "General legislation, that legislation which is applicable throughout the State generally, as distinguished from special legislation, which affects only particular persons or localities.
> "Local legislation, local statute, such legislation or statute as is in terms applicable not to the State at large, but only to some district or locality and to the people therein."
> Bouvier (vol. 1, p. 877): "General law (legislation), laws which apply to and operate uniformly upon all members of any class of persons, places, or things, requiring legislation peculiar to themselves in the matters covered by the laws." "Statutes which relate to persons and things as a class. Laws that are framed in general terms, restricted to no locality, and operating equally upon all of a group of objects which, having regard to the purpose of the legislation, are distinguished by characteristics sufficiently marked and important to make them a class by themselves. * * *
> "'General,' with reference to the subject matter of the statute, is synonymous with 'public' and opposed to 'private,' but with reference to the extent of territory over which it is to operate, is opposed to 'local' * * * and means that the statute to which it applies operates throughout the whole of the territory subject to the legislative jurisdiction." * * * "Further, when used in antithesis to 'special' it means relating to all of a class instead of to men only of that class." * * * "In deciding whether or not a given law is general, the purpose of the act and the objects on which it operates must be looked to. If these objects possess sufficient characteristics peculiar to themselves and the purpose of the legislation is germane thereto, they will be considered as a separate class and legislation affecting them will be general, but if the distinctive characteristics of the class have no relation to that purpose of the legislature, or if objects which would approximately belong to the same class have been excluded, the classification is faulty and the law not 'general.' The effect, not the form of the law, determines its character."

In this case this proposed appropriation is of moneys which have been pledged to these people by the statutes of the United States, which agreed to pay to them the proceeds of certain property held by the United States in trust for them for distribution. This amendment, therefore, is "carrying out previous existing law." It is not changing existing law, but carrying out existing law. It is not general legislation, but it is special, belonging only to this particular group of people, paying to them that which is confessedly due to them by the United States, and due to them under a treaty agreement.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, I do not think it is necessary to argue the point. The Century Dictionary and Bouvier's Law Dictionary do not establish the rules of the Senate. This is general legislation on an appropriation bill. It applies to the Choctaw and the Chickasaw Indians, the Cherokee Indians, and all the Indians in the State of Oklahoma, and it is new legislation which is not a part of the appropriations for the support of the Indians in any sense.

That is all I desire to say.

Mr. OWEN. Mr. President, I should like to have inserted in the RECORD a statement of the attorneys representing the Choctaws and Chickasaws in regard to this matter.

The matter referred to is as follows:

> The Atoka agreement between the Choctaw and Chickasaw Tribes of Indians and the United States is found in section 29 of the act of Congress, approved June 28, 1898 (30 Stat. L., 495–513).

In regard to the tribal funds in the hands of the United States held in trust for these Indians it provides as follows:

"It is further agreed that all of the funds invested, in lieu of investment, treaty funds, or otherwise, now held by the United States in trust for the Choctaw and Chickasaw Tribes, shall be capitalized within one year after the tribal governments shall cease, so far as the same may legally be done, and be appropriated and paid, by some officer of the United States appointed for the purpose, to the Choctaws and Chickasaws (freedmen excepted) per capita, to aid and assist them in improving their homes and lands."

By the same act the tribal governments of the Choctaw and Chickasaw Nations were continued for eight years from March 4, 1898.

The act of July 1, 1902 (32 Stat. L., 641), is the supplemental agreement entered into between the Choctaw and Chickasaw Nations and the United States, which was approved and ratified by the tribes on September 25, 1902. This agreement was negotiated with the tribes by the Dawes Commission for the purpose of providing a comprehensive scheme for the enrollment of their members, the allotment of their lands to them in severalty, and the final winding up of their tribal affairs. Sections 27 to 44 of this agreement provide specifically how the rolls of citizens shall be made. Section 35 provides that:

"No person whose name does not appear upon the rolls prepared as herein specified shall be entitled to in any manner participate in the distribution of the common property of the Choctaw and Chickasaw Tribes, and those whose names appear thereon shall participate in the manner set forth in this agreement."

Section 14 makes provision for the disposition of the surplus tribal property and provides how it shall be distributed. This section is as follows:

"14. When allotments as herein provided have been to all citizens and freedmen, the residue of lands not herein reserved or otherwise disposed of, if any there be, shall be sold at public auction under rules and regulations and on terms to be prescribed by the Secretary of the Interior, and so much of the proceeds as may be necessary for equalizing allotments shall be used for that purpose, and the balance shall be paid into the Treasury of the United States to the credit of the Choctaws and Chickasaws and distributed per capita as other funds of the tribes."

The Atoka agreement and the supplemental agreement, while providing the exact manner in which the rolls of citizenship of these two tribes should be made, did not provide a time for the completion of this work. It, of course, was necessary that some definite date be fixed for the completion of these rolls in order that the remaining tribal property undistributed could be disposed of and the proceeds paid over to the Indians whose names appeared on these rolls. Accordingly, the act of Congress, approved April 26, 1906 (34 Stat. L., 137), was passed. It is entitled "An act to provide for the final disposition of the affairs of the Five Civilized Tribes in the Indian Territory, and for other purposes." Section 2 of this act set a time for the completion of the rolls of citizenship, which provision is as follows:

"Provided, That the rolls of the tribes affected by this act shall be fully completed on or before the 4th day of March, 1907, and the Secretary of the Interior shall have no jurisdiction to approve the enrollment of any person after said date."

The act further provided for the disposition of all of the tribal property of the Choctaw and Chickasaw Tribes, except the coal and asphalt segregation, which was reserved from sale until further action by Congress, largely on account of conditions existing at that time, which seemed to make the sale of this segregation unwise for business reasons.

Section 16 provided "that when allotments as provided for by this and other acts of Congress have been made to all members and freedmen of the Choctaw, Chickasaw, Cherokee, Creek, and Seminole Tribes, the residue of lands in each of said nations not reserved or otherwise disposed of shall be sold by the Secretary of the Interior under rules and regulations to be prescribed by him, and the proceeds of such sales deposited in the United States Treasury to the credit of the respective tribes."

Section 17 provided "that when the unallotted lands and other property belonging to the Choctaw, Chickasaw, Cherokee, Creek, and Seminole Tribes of Indians have been sold and the moneys arising from such sales or from any other source whatever have been paid into the United States Treasury to the credit of such tribes, respectively, and when all the just charges against the funds of the respective tribes have been deducted therefrom, any remaining funds shall be distributed per capita to the members then living and the heirs of deceased members whose names appear upon the finally approved rolls of the respective tribes, such distribution to be made under rules and regulations to be prescribed by the Secretary of the Interior."

There was great delay in carrying out the provisions of this act as to the disposition of the tribal property of the several tribes. However, at this time nearly all of the unallotted lands of the Choctaw and Chickasaw Tribes have been sold, with the exception of the so-called timber segregation, which was reserved from allotment by Executive order, embracing about 1,300,000 acres, and the coal and asphalt segregation, embracing about 450,000 acres, the latter of which can not be sold until further action by Congress.

From the time of the passage of the act of July 1, 1902, which was the supplemental agreement with the Choctaw and Chickasaw Tribes, these Indians have been led to hope that their tribal affairs would be speedily wound up and the money derived from their tribal property would be paid over to them for the purpose of improving their allotments, as promised by the Atoka agreement. That Congress had the same idea, i. e., that the tribal affairs of these Indians should be speedily wound up, is evidenced by the appropriation act for the year 1908 (35 Stat., 91), where, in making an appropriation for this work, it provided as follows:

"For the completion of the work heretofore required by law to be done by the Commission to the Five Civilized Tribes, $143,410, said appropriation to be disbursed under the control of the Secretary of the Interior, and the Secretary of the Interior is directed to so disburse this appropriation as to complete said work by July 1, 1909."

A similar provision was placed in the appropriation act for the year 1909 (35 Stat., 804), which is as follows:

"For the completion of the work heretofore required by law to be done by the Commission to the Five Civilized Tribes, $140,000, said appropriation to be disbursed under the control of the Secretary of the Interior, and the Secretary of the Interior is directed to so disburse this appropriation as to complete said work by July 1, 1910."

Notwithstanding these express provisions of Congress directing the completion of this work, the sale of the unallotted tribal lands of the Choctaw and Chickasaw Tribes was not completed until the spring of this year, and the timber reserve and coal and asphalt segregation, embracing lands worth many millions of dollars, are still withheld from sale.

In the appropriation act for the year 1911 (36 Stats., 1070), it was provided:

"That the net receipts from the sales of surplus and unallotted lands and other tribal property belonging to any of the Five Civilized Tribes, after deducting the necessary expenses of advertising and sale, may be deposited in national or State banks of the State of Oklahoma, in the discretion of the Secretary of the Interior, such depositories to be designated by him and under such rules and regulations governing the rate of interest thereon, the time of deposit and withdrawal thereof, and the security therefor as he may prescribe. The interest accruing on such funds may be used to defray the expenses of the per capita payments of such funds."

The members of the Choctaw and Chickasaw Tribes have never objected to depositing this money in banks, as provided by this law, but they think that it ought only to be left in the banks while it is in process of being collected, and that as soon as a sufficient amount is on hand it should be paid out to the Indians entitled thereto. This provision is quoted principally for the purpose of showing by the last clause thereof that it was the intention of Congress that it should be paid out per capita as soon as a sufficient amount was on hand to warrant doing so.

The funds belonging to the Choctaw and Chickasaw Indians now in the hands of the United States Government are as follows:

CHICKASAW.
In the Treasury	$603,460.06
On deposit in State and national banks	852,939.88
Total	1,456,399.94
CHOCTAW.
In the Treasury	1,918,798.69
On deposit in State and national banks	2,274,439.19
Total	4,193,237.88
Grand total	5,649,637.82

The unallotted lands of these two nations which has been sold during the last two years brought a total of $10,137,094.85, of which there has been paid by the purchasers $4,891,310, leaving a balance due on deferred payments of $5,245,784.85.

In the hearings before the Senate Committee on Indian Affairs, Sixty-second Congress, third session, on H. R. 26874, pages 313 and 314, J. George Wright, Commissioner of the Five Civilized Tribes, February 8, 1913, testified that the property of the Choctaw and Chickasaw Tribes undisposed of was worth approximately as follows:

Sale of surface of coal and asphalt lands	$4,000,000
Value of mineral deposits in coal and asphalt segregation	12,000,000
Value of timber reserve	3,500,000
Total	19,500,000

Adding to this the total cash now on hand, $5,649,637.82, and the deferred payments still due on the sale of the unallotted lands, amounting to $5,245,784.85, makes the total tribal property of these two tribes amount to $30,395,422.67.

At the same hearing Mr. Wright testified that it required yearly for the tribal government and schools of the Choctaw and Chickasaws the following amounts:

CHOCTAW.
Tribal officers and attorneys	$25,000
Tribal schools	85,000
CHICKASAW.
Tribal officers and attorneys	20,000
Tribal schools	32,000
Total	162,000

There are about 27,000 persons enrolled as citizens of the Choctaw and Chickasaw Tribes entitled to share in these funds, and a payment of $100 per capita, as provided by the present Indian appropriation bill, will amount to approximately $2,700,000. If this payment is authorized, there will still remain over $27,500,000 worth of tribal property yet undisposed of.

The deferred payments on the unallotted lands are all due and payable not later than November 15, 1914.

Since 1902, when the supplemental agreement was entered into, and in which the promise was made that a speedy settlement would be made with these Indians, the following per capita payments have been made to them:

	Per capita.
1904, town-site money	$40
1906, town-site money	35
1908, town-site money	20
1911, from general funds	50

Mr. OWEN. I will not detain the Senate further than to read the language of the previous statute to which I referred—Thirtieth Statutes at Large, page 495—in regard to the tribal funds in the hands of the United States held in trust for these Indians. It provides:

It is further agreed that all the funds invested, in lieu of investment, treaty funds, or otherwise, now held by the United States in trust for the Choctaw and Chickasaw Tribes, shall be capitalized within one year after the tribal government shall cease, so far as the same may legally be done, and be appropriated and paid by some officer of the United States appointed for the purpose to the Choctaws and Chickasaws (freedmen excepted), per capita to aid and assist them in improving their homes and lands.

So this appropriation is in pursuance of existing law, and is just as much a proper part of this bill as any of the appropriations in the Indian appropriation bill carrying out existing treaties with other tribes.

Mr. WILLIAMS. The title of the bill is "An act making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Bureau of Indian Affairs, for fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes, and for other purposes, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1914." I do not think there is any doubt about the point of order.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I am very strongly opposed to this provision in the bill. If it shall be determined that the point of order lies, I shall have nothing to say about it. If, on the contrary, it is ruled that the point of order does not lie, then I will take the privilege of discussing the proposition at some length.

I will call the attention of the Chair and the Senate to the fact that last year a similar point of order was made against a similar provision. It was made by the senior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE]. That point of order was debated at considerable length, and the then Vice President suggested that in view of the fact that there was such a wide difference of opinion on the part of the Senate he would avail himself of the privilege to submit the matter to the Senate. This he did, and by a small majority the Senate decided that the point of order was well taken, and the provision went out of the bill last year.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry. Is the point of order being made to the amendment that is printed in the bill, or is it a point of order made against an amendment now offered by the Senator from Oklahoma?

Mr. WILLIAMS. No; it is made to the amendment of the committee inserted in the bill.

Mr. STONE. On page 59.

Mr. WILLIAMS. In this connection I wish to say just a word in explanation. I would have no objection to this legislation if it were fair and included all the people who ought to be entitled to share in this fund. I should vote for a bill to do that very readily and very quickly; but the committee has left out of all consideration, in my opinion with great injustice, some thousand or more Choctaws in the State of Mississippi, who by the fourteenth article of the Dancing Rabbit treaty of 1830 were guaranteed their rights to every privilege of the Choctaw Nation, except a share in the annuities. The treaty expressly provides that if they still remain in the State of Mississippi they shall be members of the Choctaw Nation and share in every privilege except that.

Persons who claim under this article—

I read a part of the fourteenth article—

shall not lose the privilege of Choctaw citizens, but if they ever remove they shall not be entitled to any portion of the Choctaw annuity.

That is the only exception. Now, no act of Congress can abridge that treaty right nor has the Choctaw Nation ever asked that it should be abridged. Nothing except a new treaty between the United States and the Choctaw Nation would have any effect upon this question. The tribe has never attempted to abridge or change in any way the Dancing Rabbit treaty, which was effected under Andrew Jackson's régime.

Congress has already treated these people very unfairly. I secured some legislation in the House some years ago, and under that legislation Congress went some distance to do them justice, but it required that they should move to the Indian Territory, as it was at that time, in order to be entitled to their rights as citizens of the Choctaw Nation.

Not only is it true, Mr. President, that the treaty expressly reserved to them their rights as citizens of the Choctaw Nation, but if there had been no treaty to that effect it is a general principle of law that citizenship in barbarous or semibarbarous tribes, as they were at that time, is a matter of blood relationship and not a matter of geographical boundary. That has been the case at all times. After some rights had been given these people Congress took the matter up later. The first statute passed was this:

Said commission shall have authority to determine and identify the Choctaw Indians claiming rights in the Choctaw lands under article 14 of the treaty between the United States and the Choctaw Nation, September 27, 1830, and make report to the Secretary of the Interior.

That was in 1893, I believe; it was in my first or second term in Congress I know.

Then later on, in 1902, Congress passed some other provision and, amongst other things, used this language:

The application of no person for identification as a Mississippi Choctaw shall be received by said commission after six months subsequent to the date of the final ratification of this agreement, and in the disposition of such application all full-blood Mississippi Choctaw Indians and the descendants of any Mississippi Choctaw Indians, whether of full or mixed blood, who receive a patent to land under the said fourteenth article of the treaty of 1830, who had not moved to and made bona fide settlement in the Choctaw-Chickasaw country prior—to June 28, 1898, shall be deemed to be Mississippi Choctaws entitled to benefits under article 14 of the said treaty of September 27, 1830, and to identification as such by said commission, but this direction or provision shall be deemed to be only a rule of evidence and shall not be invoked by or operate to the advantage of any applicant who is not a Mississippi Choctaw of the full blood, etc.

This act of Congress said that no person should be enrolled "whose ancestors had not received a patent from the Federal Government." The Dancing Rabbit treaty entitled these people upon certain proof to receive a patent. A man by the name of Ward was sent down there. It was a notorious scandal at the time, so much so that the Congress of the United States subsequently acted upon the matter. A commission was sent down to investigate what this man had done, and it was reported that his action was in every way discreditable and wrong. He remained drunk all the time, and after he had made up a file of the people who were entitled to entries of 160 acres of land on loose foolscap paper he used a great deal of it for shaving paper later or tore it up. It was a regular scandal.

Now, then, this cunning law with the language which I did not notice at the time, put upon the statute books at the instance and under the approbation of a noted law firm in the State of Oklahoma—the Indian Territory it was at that time—thus confined the Mississippi Choctaws to the descendants of only 143 Mississippi Choctaws. This man Ward had managed to lose or destroy or drunkenly misplace the names of all except 143 of them, and those 143 or the descendants of them are now the only ones who can apply under that law as it was.

We tried to get in the Indian Affairs Committee an amendment to this amendment so as to include these people. I did not draw it up there, but left it to be worded, and it was worded in a bill introduced by the Representative from the sixth district of the State of Mississippi, Mr. HARRISON. That, if it came in here at all, would come in at about this place.

On page 59, line 7, after the word "Indians," I would put in something like I suggest, and if the committee would do that I would be very glad to withdraw the point of order, but otherwise we are in this fix.

Here you are distributing the dividends of a concern without permitting a part of the stockholders to be entered upon the list as stockholders and to receive their share of the dividends. If you begin it, you will go through with it little by little until there will be nothing left, and then the Mississippi Choctaws could get no relief at all, unless they got it by going back and disturbing the allotments in the Territory, because they would have to sell the lands that have been allotted in order to get the money for them. So it is in the interest of the Indians there as well as of the Mississippi Choctaws that their rights should be considered before this is passed upon. The language that I would put in at the place designated would be this:

Including such Mississippi Choctaws as have established or may prior to January 1 next establish their right to be registered or listed as Choctaws; and the Secretary of the Interior shall make rules and regulations whereby evidence may be taken within that time to determine what persons in Mississippi are by blood entitled to be enrolled as Choctaws under article 14 of the treaty of 1830 between the United States and the Choctaw Nation.

I thought it due to myself to explain why I made the point of order, because I do not want to be understood as objecting to the distribution of this Indian fund among the Indians, provided that everybody who is entitled to a part of the distribution shall have a proper day in court.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Will the Senator from Mississippi permit me a question?

Mr. WILLIAMS. Yes, sir.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Are there a number of these Choctaws in the State of Mississippi related to these Oklahoma people and do they not enjoy any Government aid or participate in any way in the tribal fund?

Mr. WILLIAMS. None.

Mr. CRAWFORD. I ask for information.

Mr. WILLIAMS. And they are all blood Choctaws; and, by the way, they are a very interesting and a very honest folk. I was telling the committee the other day that if you send a white man or a negro to split rails for you you have got to count your rails before you pay for them; but you never have to count the rails made by a Mississippi Choctaw. They are the most honest people I know of, and they deserve a great deal of sympathy.

Mr. CRAWFORD. I ask the Senator how many of these Choctaws are in the Senator's State?

Mr. WILLIAMS. I am informed there are about 1,600 of them; but I do not know.

Mr. CRAWFORD. They have no reservation there?

Mr. WILLIAMS. No; they have no reservation. I will state to the Senator that Andrew Jackson was very anxious to get all the Indians west of the Mississippi River. The United States Government sent people down there, who used money and who used whisky and who used everything else, until a majority of the Choctaw Nation agreed to go west of the Mississippi River; but they lived in the Yiogehnougheny, the Leaf, and the Pearl River bottoms, where almost the best fishing and the best hunting in the world was, and a great many of them would not go. They could not get this treaty through without putting on it the fourteenth article, permitting those who did not want to go to remain in the State of Mississippi. That treaty never could have been effected unless the fourteenth article had been adopted; and here is the way it reads:

Each Choctaw head of a family, being desirous to remain and become a citizen of the States, shall be permitted to do so by signifying his intention—

By the way, they never did become citizens of the State, because Mississippi never made them citizens; they were inhabitants. It reads:

Each Choctaw head of a family, being desirous to remain and become a citizen of the States, shall be permitted to do so by signifying his intention to the agent within six months of the ratification of this treaty, and he or she shall thereupon be entitled to a reservation of one section of 640 acres of land, to be bounded by sectional lines of survey; in like manner shall be entitled to one-half that quantity for each unmarried child which is living with him, over 10 years of age, to join the location of the parent. If they reside upon such lands intending to become citizens of the States for five years after the ratification of this treaty, in that case a grant in fee simple shall issue. Said reservation shall include the present improvement of the head of the family, or a portion of it. Persons who claim under this article shall not lose the privilege of Choctaw citizens, but if they ever remove they shall not be entitled to any portion of the Choctaw annuity.

Now, that is the treaty.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. May I interrupt the Senator, Mr. President?

Mr. WILLIAMS. Certainly.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I would like to know if those who remained in Mississippi took advantage of the grant made under the fourteenth article of the treaty?

Mr. WILLIAMS. Very few of them did so. This man Ward was sent down there. Then the United States Government, hearing of this agent's action, sent a board of commissioners to investigate. Here is a part of their report:

From the great mass of proof offered to the board, there can be no doubt of the entire unfitness of the agent for the station. His conduct on many occasions was marked by a degree of hostility to the claims calculated to deter the claimants from making application to him. His manner to the Indians coming before him for registration was often arbitrary, tyrannical, and insulting, and evidently intended to drive them west of the Mississippi against their will and in violation of the letter and spirit of the treaty.

The agent of the Government, Col. Ward, unfortunately so managed this business that it is left almost entirely to oral testimony to prove the names of those who applied for registration within the six months and the signification of their intention to remain and become citizens of the States. That he kept a book, about foolscap size, containing two or three quires of paper, and which was almost filled with the names of persons registered, is proved, and it is also proved that this book was afterwards partially torn up and used as shaving paper, etc.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. President——

Mr. WILLIAMS. One word further. I want to get the date when this commission made its examination. The agent was sent down there in 1831. I thought I had the date when the commission made its examination.

After making these investigations Congress passed a law in 1842 allowing such Mississippi Choctaws as wanted to go out West scrip and things of that sort to be used in locating land, showing that Congress recognized the injustice. The act passed in 1902 was most shrewdly worded. I was in Congress at the time, and I did not then see any joker in it, but the joker came to the front after a while. Every Mississippi Choctaw thought that after he was enrolled by the Dawes Commission he would be entitled to final enrollment. Then along comes the act of 1902 and knocks the ground out from under him entirely. I am informed, though of that I am not certain—I am told by one of my colleagues in the other House that the act which contained these jokers probably was prepared, and if not, it was submitted to and approved, by the man who was employed to keep the Mississippi Choctaws from being enrolled.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. President, will the Senator permit me to interrupt him now?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Mississippi yield to the Senator from South Dakota?

Mr. WILLIAMS. I do.

Mr. CRAWFORD. I have some curiosity to know as to the sixteen hundred and odd Choctaws in Mississippi, who apparently have never received any aid, have not participated in the tribal funds, and have not inherited any of the Oklahoma grants, in what condition they are. Are they self-sustaining to-day? Have they made any progress, or are they paupers?

Mr. WILLIAMS. Some of them own their little homes, and some of them are tenant farmers. A great many of them do job work of various kinds. They get out shingles, get out boards, and get out rails, but they do not do any regular work. I repeat that a great many of them own their little homes and have owned them for quite a long while, but only 143 of them out of over 4,000 in Mississippi at that time who remained in Mississippi because of the action of this man Ward, ever came into their right to 640 acres of land. Congress long afterwards had the matter investigated and found that it was by the fault of this man, but the rolls were so confused that the wrong could not be remedied.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Mississippi yield to the Senator from New Hampshire?

Mr. WILLIAMS. Certainly.

Mr. GALLINGER. The Senator from Mississippi is giving us information concerning the Mississippi Choctaws. Has the Senator looked into the question as to whether or not the Cherokee Indians who are not on the roll, who are likewise named in this amendment, have a large number of children who will be deprived of their rights?

Mr. WILLIAMS. I know nothing about that. The Dancing Rabbit treaty applies only to the Choctaws. The Chickasaws, the Seminoles, and the Creeks have nothing to do with that, nor were any of those people in my State. So I know nothing about them.

Mr. GALLINGER. I think an investigation will determine——

Mr. WILLIAMS. There were only two tribes of Indians in Mississippi—the Chickasaws, who lived up in the northern part of the State, and the Choctaws, who lived in the southern and eastern part of the State. The Chickasaws went West upon a different treaty, and they all went. Those who left, at any rate, had no treaty rights.

Mr. OWEN. Mr. President, not only did the act of June 20, 1898, confirming the agreement between the Choctaws, the Chickasaws, and the United States provide that the proceeds of these lands might be made per capita, but under the treaty of July 1, 1902 (32 Stats., p. 641), it is provided——

Mr. WILLIAMS. Is the treaty to which the Senator is now referring the so-called McMurray treaty?

Mr. OWEN. I do not know of any McMurray treaty.

Mr. WILLIAMS. It was referred to in the other House. What is the date—1902?

Mr. OWEN. July 1, 1902.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Yes; that is the act I said was so cunningly worded.

Mr. OWEN. Mr. President, it is the agreement of 1902 pledging a per capita—I am not referring to the Mississippi Choctaws' case at present, but only to the treaty pledge of a per capita.

Mr. WILLIAMS. No; the Senator is referring to a treaty and not to an act of Congress.

Mr. OWEN. I am referring to a treaty between the Choctaws and the Chickasaws and the United States, enacted by Congress in a statute and then ratified by a vote of the Choctaws and Chickasaws. It appears on the statute books, approved July 1, 1902, from which the Senator made a quotation a while ago; but the quotation which I desire to make has no reference to his discussion. I am merely pointing out that that agreement by its terms in article 14 provided that the proceeds of this property should be paid to the Choctaws and Chickasaws per capita as of the roll. The language is this:

And the balance shall be paid into the Treasury of the United States to the credit of the Choctaws and Chickasaws and distributed per capita as other funds of the tribes.

This so-called Indian appropriation bill on its face and in its caption provides that it is "a bill making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Bureau of Indian Affairs, for fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes," and so forth.

This amendment, therefore, is germane; it is for carrying out existing law; it is not general legislation; and the point of order is not well taken.

The Mississippi Choctaws, for whom the Senator from Mississippi pleads, by the same act of July 1, 1902, in sections 41, 42, 43, and 44, I believe, were recognized in a limited way; that is to say, they were permitted, under certain conditions, to be identified and enrolled for participation in the distribution of these funds. The history, in brief, of the Mississippi Choctaws, is this: These original Indians had the right, under the fourteenth article of the treaty of 1830, to membership in the Choctaw Tribe if they should remove west, but they did not move to the Choctaw country west, and all the original parties of 1830 are dead. The present claimants are claiming as the descendants of Mississippi Choctaws who did not move west.

Seventeen years ago the Congress of the United States determined to close these tribal governments and distribute the property. Congress then passed an act providing for the making up of the rolls of the Five Tribes.

It was provided that it should be done by the Dawes Commission, headed by the Hon. Henry L. Dawes, of Massachusetts, a man of great ability and high character, who was much respected by the Indian people because of his friendship for them. They began making these rolls and worked at them for 10 years, and finally, after 11 years, they concluded the making of the rolls in 1907.

Six years ago, March 4, 1907, the rolls were concluded by act of Congress approved April 26, 1906. After having been a matter of very tedious discussion, and appeal after appeal for 11 long years, Congress closed the rolls, because it was believed that the 100,000 Indian citizens of that country had a right to their peace at some time; and it took 11 years before the rolls were closed. When the Choctaw-Chickasaw agreement of 1902 was passed it was found that the Mississippi Choctaws not having any English patronymics, having no names as in white families, but each individual having an Indian name, keeping no proper record or registry of births or deaths and no proper family record, the full-blood Mississippi Choctaws, descendants of the Choctaw ancestors of 1830, were unable to furnish any proof adequate to convince the commission that they were actually entitled to enrollment; but, as a matter of grace and as a matter of compromise, the agreement of July 1, 1902, provided that those who were full-blood Choctaw Indians, upon proof of that fact, might be enrolled for allotment if they would within a limited time comply with the conditions of this agreement and move to the Choctaw and Chickasaw country west.

I thought the conditions were onerous; I thought they were unfair; but they were the conditions imposed by the United States Government and by the Choctaw-Chickasaw people, and they had a legal right to impose these conditions.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Will the Senator pardon me?

Mr. OWEN. Just a moment, if the Senator pleases. They were conditions imposed by the United States as the conditions of this grant, and as a condition of the waiver of the demand for evidence sufficient to show that they were entitled to be enrolled.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Now, if the Senator will pardon me, the Senator remembers, of course, the act in which he and I both were somewhat concerned, the first act recognizing these men. The act of 1902 not only made the conditions which the Senator has mentioned, but it provided, furthermore, that these Choctaws must prove that they were descendants of people who had received land grants from the Federal Government. Is not that true?

Mr. OWEN. I do not think it is the whole truth. I have already stated the facts, and the right to prove descent from a patentee was an additional right to the full-blood rule of evidence.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair must ask Senators to address the Chair, so that the Chair can hear what is being said. The Chair expects to rule upon this matter and can not hear what is being said.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Very well; it is rather difficult, however, to address the Senator to whom I have been speaking and at the same time address the Chair.

Mr. STONE. Mr. President, the argument now going on has no relation whatever to the point of order, and the Chair loses nothing by not hearing.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I want merely to call attention to the language of the act of 1902. My recollection is—I will have the act here in a moment—that it is confined to those who can prove that they were descended from somebody who received patents to land.

Mr. OWEN. There was such a provision, but the primarily important provision in the bill, under which most of them were admitted, was that if they should prove that they were full-blood Choctaws they might be construed to be fourteenth-article claimants and might remove West for allotment. In addition, it was provided that those who could prove that they were the descendants of some one who received a patent might also remove and be allotted. What the Senator from Mississippi has stated is, of course, true, that there were only a few of the original ancestors who got patents, but many of them got scrip, and scrip was construed by the Secretary, Ryan, as the same as patents.

Mr. WILLIAMS. One hundred and forty-three patents were issued.

Mr. OWEN. Practically a negligible number, but very many received scrip; but all that does not bear upon the point before the Chair. The only matter before the President of the Senate is, Is the point of order well taken?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair desires to ask the Senator from Oklahoma how this money got into the banks of the State of Oklahoma. Was it by a treaty between these tribes and the United States?

Mr. OWEN. Some of the money belonging to the Choctaws and Chickasaws went into the banks by act of Congress authorizing it to be placed there, and a large part of it is in the Subtreasury of the United States at St. Louis. There is only a part of it in the banks in the State of Oklahoma, and that is there earning interest.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Was it put into the banks by virtue of an act of the Congress of the United States?

Mr. OWEN. Yes; a part of the fund was deposited on interest by permission of act of Congress.

The VICE PRESIDENT. And the residue was deposited under treaty stipulations or agreements?

Mr. OWEN. About $3,000,000 are on deposit in the subtreasury at St. Louis, and out of this money in the subtreasury at St. Louis, I take it, the per capita can be made.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Now, the Chair desires to inquire whether, under the treaty, there was any stipulation that this money was to be divided among the Choctaw and Chickasaw Indians?

Mr. OWEN. Yes; under the fourteenth article of the treaty of July 1, 1902, which I read a few moments ago.

Mr. WILLIAMS. The Senator refers to article 41.

Mr. OWEN. No; I mean article 14. I read it, and I will read it again.

Mr. WILLIAMS. That is all right; it is article 41 in the act of Congress.

Mr. OWEN. The Senator is talking about a different matter entirely, not the per capita. I will read article 14. It is as follows:

14. When allotments as herein provided have been made to all citizens and freedmen, the residue of lands not herein reserved or otherwise disposed of, if any there be, shall be sold at public auction under rules and regulations and on terms to be prescribed by the Secretary of the Interior, and so much of the proceeds as may be necessary for equalizing allotments shall be used for that purpose, and the balance shall be paid into the Treasury of the United States to the credit of the Choctaws and Chickasaws and distributed per capita as other funds of the tribes.

So that this is carrying out an existing law and an existing treaty and is entirely germane to and proper under this bill.

Mr. WILLIAMS. If the Senator will pardon me, I have now the act to which I referred. This is the act of 1902, and this is the language which is used:

The application of no person for identification as a Mississippi Choctaw shall be received by said commission after six months subsequent to the date of the final ratification of this agreement, and in the disposition of such application all full-blood Mississippi Choctaw Indians and the descendants of any Mississippi Choctaw Indians, whether of full or mixed blood, who received a patent to land under the said fourteenth article of the treaty of 1830, who had not moved to and made bona fide settlement in the Choctaw-Chickasaw country prior to June 28, 1898, shall be deemed to be Mississippi Choctaws entitled to benefits under article 14 of the said treaty—

The Dancing Rabbit treaty.

In other words, this act was so cunningly worded that only the descendants of these 143 people whose names Ward left on his torn list could make any proof at all that they were Mississippi Choctaws. Only they shall be deemed to be Mississippi Choctaws, entitled to benefits under article 14 of a solemn treaty entered into by the United States Government; and in that treaty it was expressly said that these people who remained in Mississippi should have all the privileges of Choctaw citizenship, except that they were not to share in the annuity.

I say this amendment is general legislation—very general at that—and that it is new legislation, and that so far from carrying out existing law it is in contravention of a solemn treaty.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair is of opinion that the citation of authorities from Bouvier's Law Dictionary is not of any value in construing the rules of the Senate. The definitions have to do with constitutional enactments with reference to general and special and public and private legislation. But from the statement made by the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. OWEN], accepting that to be the fact about the matter, that this is money which is to be distributed in accordance with treaty stipulations, and the title of the bill providing that it is for fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes, the Chair holds that it is not general legislation. Whether or not it is germane to the subject matter of the bill, however, is a question that, under section 3 of Rule XVI, should be submitted to the Senate and decided without debate.

The question is, Is the amendment germane to the bill? [Putting the question.] The ayes seem to have it.

Mr. GALLINGER. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. OLIVER]. In his absence, I withhold my vote.

Mr. CLAPP (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from North Carolina [Mr. SIMMONS]. In his absence, perhaps I should withhold my vote. If at liberty to vote, I should vote "yea."

Mr. DU PONT (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Texas [Mr. CULBERSON]. As he is not in the Chamber, I will withhold my vote.

Mr. MYERS (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Connecticut [Mr. MCLEAN]. I transfer that pair to the junior Senator from Tennessee [Mr. SHIELDS] and will vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. GALLINGER (when Mr. PERKINS's name was called). The senior Senator from California [Mr. PERKINS] is paired with the junior Senator from North Carolina [Mr. OVERMAN].

Mr. SMITH of Maryland (when his name was called). I have a pair with the senior Senator from North Dakota [Mr. MCCUMBER] and therefore withhold my vote.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming (when Mr. WARREN's name was called). My colleague [Mr. WARREN] is absent from the city. He is paired with the senior Senator from Florida [Mr. FLETCHER].

Mr. WILLIAMS (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. PENROSE], but I am satisfied that if he were here he would vote as I shall vote. I therefore take the liberty of voting. I vote "nay."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. JONES. I desire to announce that the junior Senator from Michigan [Mr. TOWNSEND] is detained from the Chamber on important business. I desire this announcement to stand for the rest of the day.

Mr. COLT (after having voted in the affirmative). I am paired with the junior Senator from Delaware [Mr. SAULSBURY] and therefore desire to withdraw my vote.

Mr. JAMES. I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. WEEKS]. I transfer that pair to the senior Senator from Maine [Mr. JOHNSON] and will vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. CHILTON. I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Maryland [Mr. JACKSON]. I transfer that pair to the senior Senator from Nevada [Mr. NEWLANDS] and will vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, I came into the Chamber since the calling of the roll began. I am informed that the roll call is on a question of parliamentary law submitted by the presiding officer to the Senate for its decision. Since I have not heard the argument, and do not know just what the point is, I desire to be excused from voting.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I am paired, but I understand my pair, if present, would vote the same way that I do, and therefore I will vote. I vote "yea."

The result was announced—yeas 36, nays 15, as follows:

YEAS—36.

Ashurst	Fall	Martin, Va.	Sheppard
Bacon	Gore	Myers	Sherman
Bankhead	Gronna	O'Gorman	Shively

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senate decides that the amendment is germane to the subject matter contained in the bill.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I now offer an amendment to the amendment, which I send up to the Secretary's desk, except that I shall ask the Secretary to read it as being inserted after the word "each," on line 7, instead of after the word "Indian."

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 59, line 7, after the words "$100 each" and the comma, it is proposed to insert:

Including such Mississippi Choctaws as have established or who may, prior to January 1 next, establish their right to be registered or listed as Choctaws, and the Secretary of the Interior shall make rules and regulations whereby evidence may be taken within that time to determine what Choctaws in Mississippi are by blood entitled to be enrolled as Choctaws under article 14 of the treaty of 1830 between the United States and the Choctaw Nation.

Mr. OWEN. I make the point of order against that item.

Mr. WILLIAMS. What is the point of order?

Mr. OWEN. The point of order is that it changes existing law.

Mr. WILLIAMS. If it changes existing law at all, the paragraph to which it is an amendment changes it.

Mr. OWEN. No.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Because the paragraph says that this money shall be distributed amongst these people. All that is provided by this amendment to the committee amendment is that in determining who are the distributees, such of the Mississippi Choctaws as have established or shall establish their rights shall be considered. I agree with the Senator from Oklahoma that it is general legislation and new legislation; but it having been ruled that the paragraph itself is not general legislation and not new legislation, necessarily this extension of the meaning of the paragraph can be neither.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The point of order is not sustained.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I do not want to detain the Senate, Mr. President; but there are some Senators present now who were out of their seats when I offered the amendment. I merely want to say that if the amendment which the Secretary has just read is adopted, it will be carrying out article 14 of the Dancing Rabbit treaty, or give an opportunity for it to be carried out, in good faith; and that if the amendment is not adopted, this fund will be distributed without giving these people who are entitled to their share in it under article 14 of the Dancing Rabbit treaty any opportunity to share in it at all. I have worded the amendment so that the Secretary of the Interior shall fix the rules and regulations under which they are to present their claims and under which it is to be determined what persons in the State of Mississippi are Choctaws under the provisions of article 14 of the Dancing Rabbit treaty. I have fixed it so that it must be done before the 1st of January next. Surely that is asking very little.

I hope the amendment will be carried, or if the amendment is not carried then when it comes to a vote upon the committee amendment that the committee amendment will be voted down as a piece of arrant, patent, obvious, plain, and unmistakable injustice and in violation of treaty rights.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Mississippi to the amendment of the committee.

Mr. OWEN. I should like to ask the President of the Senate to consider a moment Rule XVI. I am sure that the Chair did not fully appreciate the fact that the laws of the United States have closed these rolls. They were closed by an act of Congress April 26, 1906, as of the 4th of March, 1907. This proposal reopens those rolls. It opens Pandora's box. It is the most vicious piece of legislation I ever heard of. After the rolls affecting 100,000 people have been closed for over six years by act of Congress that an amendment paying a part of the money due to the people on the registered rolls should then be reopened by an item of this character on an appropriation bill, when the rules of the Senate forbid it, is incomprehensible. I am sure that the Chair did not realize that the laws of the United States forbade these rolls to be opened to any new names after March 4, 1907.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Oklahoma yield to the junior Senator from Mississippi?

Mr. OWEN. I yield very gladly to the Senator.

Mr. VARDAMAN. The Senator from Oklahoma says that this is a vicious piece of legislation. Who suffers an injustice by reopening these rolls?

Mr. OWEN. The people who have been promised the fund.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Is it not a fact that the Choctaws of Mississippi are equally entitled to a share in this benefaction?

Mr. OWEN. My answer to that is that they are not; that they were given the opportunity by the act of July 1, 1902, under certain conditions imposed by Congress, and they did not comply with the conditions and were therefore barred from the rolls.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Does that affect their moral right?

Mr. OWEN. We are not discussing moral rights. We are discussing the law of the land.

Mr. VARDAMAN. I think we ought to consider the moral right. This is a lawmaking body, and if a wrong has been done to them it occurs to me that this is the place where that wrong should be corrected.

Mr. OWEN. This is not the place, on an appropriation bill, to correct wrongs done in years past in treaties passed by Congress.

Mr. VARDAMAN. But the Chair has held that this amendment is in order.

Mr. OWEN. The original committee amendment is in order, because the treaty itself provided for the payment of this money to the men on the registered rolls. It is carrying out existing law and an existing treaty. The amendment to the amendment changes existing law and is not in order under Rule XVI.

Mr. VARDAMAN. But the Chair has decided that the amendment offered by the senior Senator from Mississippi is in order.

Mr. OWEN. I am calling the attention of the Chair to the fact that the laws of the United States closed these rolls on March 4, 1907, and that this is changing existing law by an amendment on an appropriation act.

Mr. VARDAMAN. I should like to suggest to the Senator from Oklahoma that a right which surely belongs to the Choctaws of Mississippi should not be defeated by invoking a mere technicality.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair ruled originally that in the opinion of the Chair this was not general legislation, upon the statement of the Senator from Oklahoma that it was a treaty matter, not some statute of the United States, that fixed the question.

The Chair would have ruled that it was general legislation if the Chair had known any statute of the United States had anything to do with it. The Chair having ruled that it was general legislation and the Senate having decided that it is germane to this matter, the Chair now declares that the amendment is in order.

Mr. OWEN. Mr. President, it is with great reluctance that I am compelled to appeal from the decision of the Chair.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is, Shall the ruling of the Chair be sustained? Are the yeas and nays called for?

Mr. OWEN. No.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is, Shall the ruling of the Chair be sustained? All in favor of sustaining the ruling of the Chair will say "aye." [Putting the question.] The "ayes" have it. The ruling of the Chair is sustained.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, a single word at this point. I regret that the amendment submitted by the Senator from Mississippi does not go further, because I think there are other Indians besides the Mississippi Choctaws who should be included in this distribution. But as to the Mississippi Choctaws, I want to say a word, and I find my warrant for saying it in a lengthy report of last year, long after the statute was enacted that the Senator from Oklahoma lays such stress upon. It is a report signed by Joseph W. Howell, assistant attorney, who made a very exhaustive investigation. It will be found in Senate Document No. 1139, Sixty-second Congress, third session. Mr. Howell said:

> In respect to the Mississippi Choctaws I find that there was an error of construction on the part of the Commissioner to the Five Civilized Tribes which must have caused many children to lose the rights of citizenship.

That is a recent declaration by an officer of the Government, who gave a very exhaustive investigation covering 140 pages. Mr. Howell concludes by saying:

> I have attempted in this report to state all material facts fully and fairly as the same are known to me, and it is my conclusion that there are many persons, some of whom are full-blood Indians, who are entitled to enrollment as citizens or freedmen of the Five Civilized Tribes who have failed to secure the right to share in the lands and moneys which are justly theirs, and that such failure is chargeable in a large measure to the laws and to the administration of the laws relating to the subject.

Mr. President, I have no doubt in my own mind that the Mississippi Choctaws who are not enrolled and who have a right to enrollment ought to be included in this distribution. I am equally of the opinion that there are a large number of Cherokees who are not now enrolled and who are likewise entitled to enrollment and to a distribution of these funds. To my mind it will be a great injustice to pass the amendment that has been submitted by the committee and which has been ruled as being germane to the bill and in order.

If the amendment offered by the Senator from Mississippi is agreed to, I will endeavor, before the bill goes into the Senate, to draft a more comprehensive amendment, including other Indians who, I think, are equally entitled with the Mississippi Choctaws.

For the present, Mr. President, I am content with saying just those few words. Unless the amendment submitted by the Senator from Mississippi, which I shall hope will be enlarged, is agreed to, I trust the Senate will reject the amendment of the committee.

Mr. CLAPP. Mr. President, I regret exceedingly to have to take a position here against the position taken by the Senators from Mississippi. This is an old matter. It has been considered often by the committee. I for one would vote to reject the original amendment of the Senator from Oklahoma rather than in this way and without proper restraints and limitations open up this question of the rolls in Oklahoma. There are some 48, I think, who it is generally conceded——

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, will the Senator pardon me?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Minnesota yield to the Senator from Mississippi?

Mr. CLAPP. Yes.

Mr. WILLIAMS. If the Senator listened to my amendment, he saw that it only opens up the rolls until the 1st of January next.

Mr. CLAPP. Yes; but as the Senator from Oklahoma well said, it is the opening of Pandora's box in Oklahoma. There is no question in my mind but that there are, I think, 48 entitled to enrollment in Oklahoma who were not enrolled owing to the sudden closing of action by the department at the end of the time fixed by the law for enrollment. There is another group there, as I now recall, of about one hundred and fifty odd who have a very strong claim. A good deal has been said before the committee and a good deal may be said in favor of the claim of the Mississippi Choctaws, but I do believe that it would be a serious mistake in this bill to open up these rolls in this general way without language more carefully guarded. Rather than see the amendment of the Senator from Mississippi prevail I for one will vote against the amendment reported by the committee and championed by the Senator from Oklahoma.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS] to the amendment of the committee.

Mr. OWEN. Mr. President, this is a matter of such vast importance that it will necessarily lead to a long discussion. It will be necessary to call to the attention of the Senate the various laws which have been passed by Congress in connection with the matter. I have in my hand, for instance, a memorial of the Choctaw and Chickasaw chiefs, a book of 44 pages, bearing upon the rights of the Mississippi Choctaws alone. That is only a part of the Choctaw citizenship question. There were altogether about 200,000 applicants for citizenship in the Five Tribes of Oklahoma.

If this question of these citizenship rolls is to be submitted in this fashion, by an item making a change in the existing law by putting this amendment upon the per capita provision brought in by the committee, it will require considerable discussion. The item offered by the Senator from Mississippi is a totally different matter. It means not a per capita or recognized citizens, but an opening up of the roll of citizenship. It means the providing for the taking of evidence with regard to the claims of certain persons to be enrolled after those persons have already had their claims adjudicated. If this matter is to be disposed of in this way, it will be far better, as the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. CLAPP] says, to have this item with regard to the appropriation of the per capita go out of the bill and let this matter come up on a proper procedure, let it be referred to a proper committee, and let it be there discussed and considered and reported to the Senate. To take snap judgment in this way, when the Senate is not really advised as to the scope of it, would be a fatal error, in my opinion.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President——

Mr. OWEN. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I should like to ask the Senator from Oklahoma if the circumstances recited by the Senator from Mississippi about the misconduct of the Indian agent—Ward, I believe his name was—and his failure to perform his duties properly or to perform them at all in part were ever presented to the Dawes Commission and considered by them before the final report was made and the final rolls concluded?

Mr. OWEN. Oh, yes; fully. That was before the authorities in every case.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Was the misconduct of this man Ward investigated and considered by the Dawes Commission?

Mr. OWEN. It was. That action was in 1830. It was nearly 100 years ago when this man Ward failed to make a proper register of the Choctaws. This fault was amended by Murray and Vroom in 1840. Under the authority of the act of Congress of July 1, 1902, the Mississippi Choctaws were not required to prove ancestry or anything else where they could show they were full-bloods and observed certain conditions by which they might have citizenship in the Choctaw country. They did not avail themselves of the right given by Congress, and therefore were by their own action barred from the Choctaw rolls.

Now, not desiring this matter to be disposed of in this way, I should like to move to lay the amendment of the Senator from Mississippi upon the table.

Mr. STONE. Oh, no; there is no need to do that.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President——

Mr. OWEN. I should like to hear the opinion of the chairman of the Committee on Indian Affairs as to this matter. He is perfectly familiar with it, and I think, on behalf of the Committee on Indian Affairs, he should express his opinion about it.

Mr. STONE. Mr. President, this matter was brought before the committee during the consideration of the pending bill and was fully considered. The senior Senator from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS] and one of the Representatives in the House from that State in whose district I understand most of the Mississippi Choctaws reside——

Mr. WILLIAMS. A good many of them.

Mr. STONE. Appeared before the committee and discussed at considerable length the very question now before the Senate. In addition to that, an attorney who is interested in opening up these rolls appeared before the committee and also spoke at considerable length. In other words, there was a somewhat exhaustive hearing.

Not only that, Mr. President, but during my service of something over 10 years on this committee I think I am safe in saying that the question of opening up these rolls has been before the committee at every session of Congress. It is not new, therefore.

Mr. President, with all respect to the Chair and the Senate, I take leave to say that the ruling just made against the point of order made by the Senator from Oklahoma is—I will not say indefensible, but unfortunate. A treaty with an Indian tribe when adopted by Congress is nothing more nor less than a law of Congress. It is in effect—and has been so ruled—a statute; it has the force and effect of a statute. But in addition to that a statutory provision adopted in 1902—a deliberate statute of the United States—provided that these Indians we are now talking about in Mississippi or anywhere else—Choctaws—might have the privilege under the requirements and limitations of that statute to make their claims and secure their rights, but that at a certain date thereafter—March 4, 1907—the rolls should be considered as closed.

Mr. President and Senators, as I have said, this is an old question. It has been dragging along through the Congress for years and years, and I have thought, as others have, that there ought to be an end to it at some time. The Congress thought so and made statutory provision to bring about a final conclusion and an end to it, March 4, 1907, being fixed as the date.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. May I interrupt the Senator a moment?

Mr. STONE. Yes.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I should like to know, for my own satisfaction, what notice was ever given to the Choctaw Indians in Mississippi of the act of 1902 which enabled them to avail themselves of the benefits of the law? I understand that sometimes these notices are given in such a way that not only can the white people of the country not understand them but that the Indians as well can not understand them, and I should like to know if the Indians down in Mississippi ever had any notice at all?

Mr. OWEN. The matter was one of general notoriety, and a great many of these Indians under the act of Congress applied. There were 1,600 of them actually enrolled, and all of them had an opportunity. It was a matter of such general notoriety that they could not possibly have failed to know.

Mr. WILLIAMS. The 1,600 were enrolled prior to the act of 1902 and not under that act, as I understand.

Mr. OWEN. They were enrolled under the act of 1902, and not before, although there was an enrollment before, which did not prove valid. On the 4th day of March, 1907, the roll of 1899 was declared invalid by the Secretary of the Interior, a new roll having been made under the act of 1902.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Yes; but those were the people who had been enrolled then under the Dawes Commission and who are on the roll now.

Mr. OWEN. The enrollment of 1899 was declared invalid by Secretary Hitchcock.

Mr. STONE. Mr. President, I do not state it as a fact, for I do not know with certainty, but I would be almost willing to venture to state as a fact that the Mississippi Choctaws have been represented in some form by attorneys before the Committee on Indian Affairs for 10 years or more. Of course, I can not recall the details of these matters, but I can well recall that session after session of Congress attorneys have been before the Indian Affairs Committee concerning this very business. They assumed to represent—and I presume did represent—the Mississippi Choctaws. My friend from Minnesota [Mr. CLAPP] was for some years chairman of that committee, and he knows that to be the fact. So, when this statute was passed, in 1902, Mr. President, aside from the general policy universally accepted that a public statute passed by Congress or a legislature gives general notice to everyone, these people had special representatives who, for fees to be derived for their services, were interested in giving notice. At any rate, the law was passed.

It is writ into the statute books of this day. The rolls were closed, and now, six years after the rolls have been closed, it is proposed by the amendment offered by my friend from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS]—and there is no Senator in this body whose wish I would be more reluctant to antagonize—to open the whole door again, notwithstanding the appeals of the Indians in Oklahoma who have been begging Congress on bended knees for years and years to fix some time and some way to settle their business affairs, so that they might know what they own and so that the property might be disposed of and distributed amongst them. At last, after years of struggle, the matter was determined. The time limit expired six years ago, and now you propose to again reopen the whole question on an appropriation bill.

Mr. President, these Indians have about $7,000,000——

Mr. OWEN. Thirty million dollars.

Mr. STONE. In cash?

Mr. OWEN. In cash or in its equivalent.

Mr. STONE. No; but they have some $7,000,000 in money.

Mr. OWEN. That is right; they have about $7,000,000 in cash.

Mr. STONE. These Indians have about $7,000,000 in money to their credit in the Treasury of the United States or under the supervision of the Treasury of the United States in bank depositories.

If this amendment should be agreed to, it will take about $2,000,000 of that money to make the distribution to these Choctaws, leaving approximately $5,000,000 of the cash possessions of this tribe still in the hands of the Government as a trust fund. In addition to that——

Mr. OWEN. And $25,000,000 of property more.

Mr. STONE. In addition to that, the Senator from Oklahoma says that they have a large estate. He states that it amounts to $25,000,000. At any rate, the total of their tribal possessions in lands and money—of course, outside of the money, to some extent it is an estimate—but they will have money to the amount of $7,000,000 or thereabouts, and other property of the value of approximately $25,000,000. Now, here is a proposition to take $2,000,000 under the circumstances I have detailed out of the moneys in the Treasury of the United States and distribute them to these Indians.

Mr. President, if it is the judgment of the Senate that these rolls should be again opened, it will entail another long, tedious hearing and struggle. I do not know what the result will be; I am measurably indifferent as to that. If these people are entitled to share in these interests, undoubtedly they should share in them; but there must be an end to things. Statutes of limitation are passed with a view to composing and ending things. The law of 1902 was, in fact, a statute of limitation. It fixed a date after which the rolls were to be closed; but if they are to be reopened, then I insist that it ought to be done with great care and deliberation. If the judgment of the Senate, yielding to the persuasive argument of the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS], is that they should be reopened, then I prefer to have the provision under consideration, the amendment of the committee, go out of the bill until Congress can have time to deliberate upon the matter.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, I do not want the Senate to misunderstand me. I am not fighting the distribution of this money. I am merely contending that the right distributees shall have a chance at it. It is not fair to put my amendment in any other attitude than that. Nor am I undertaking to inaugurate what the Senator from Missouri [Mr. STONE] called a long and tedious something or other. I am merely undertaking to say that they shall have until the 1st of January next, under such rules and regulations as the Secretary of the Interior may prescribe, the opportunity to establish their rights as Choctaws by blood under article 14 of the Dancing Rabbit treaty.

Senators say the Mississippi Choctaws "had their day in court." Mr. President, what sort of a "day in court" was it for the Choctaw Indians, very many of them illiterate, to be required to prove 100 years after the fact that they were the descendants of ancestors who had received patents of land from the United States Government? Moreover, what sort of a "day in court" was it, when you consider the fact that, under the manner in which this man Ward had conducted the duties of his office, only 143 of them had ever received such patent out of over 4,000 who were at that time in the State of Mississippi? I do not want my argument misrepresented here.

Nor is it true that the Mississippi Choctaws ever waived anything; nor is it true that the Mississippi Choctaws by their own action ever consented to the act of Congress to which the Senator has referred.

Mr. OWEN. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Mississippi yield to the Senator from Oklahoma?

Mr. WILLIAMS. Certainly.

Mr. OWEN. I will ask the Senator from Mississippi if it is not a fact that when Murray and Vroom made an inquiry into the neglect of Agent Ward as to the enrollment of these Indians for patent they did not make a thorough and exhaustive examination into the matter and award the Mississippi Choctaws scrip? And is it not also a fact that those who received scrip were treated by the department in fixing Choctaw citizenship as if they had received patents?

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, it is true that subsequently Congress, in recognition of the great wrong which had been inflicted, did partially right it. They did say that such of the Choctaws as would go west to the Indian Territory should receive scrip; but article 14 of the Dancing Rabbit treaty had guaranteed to those people certain rights if they remained in Mississippi, and Congress never remedied the wrong, except to the extent of issuing scrip to some of them to go to the Indian Territory. That scrip was turned into land. Those who received that scrip never had anything to do with this matter at all. They went to the Indian Territory, and the descendants of those who went to the Indian Territory and secured land are now the very people who want to keep this money and not give any of it to the descendants of those who remained in the State of Mississippi.

The Senator from Missouri [Mr. STONE] says that those people have $7,000,000 in cash. That is what is the matter. They want to put it all into their own pockets and not let the Mississippi Choctaws have any of it.

Talk about the Mississippi Choctaws having "a day in court" and about certain conditions being imposed on them! The Senator said that they might have the privilege under the act of 1902 to come in and by a certain time establish their rights; and yet the act of 1902 gives them, when you sum it up, the poor privilege, and nothing else, of proving that they were the descendants of men who had received patents of land from the United States Government. Anybody who knows the Mississippi Choctaws knows that it would be impossible for a Mississippi Choctaw to prove who was his ancestor in 1830.

Mr. OWEN. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Mississippi yield to the Senator from Oklahoma?

Mr. WILLIAMS. Certainly.

Mr. OWEN. I want to ask the Senator from Mississippi if he does not recall that the agreement of 1902 not only provided for those who could prove that they were the descendants of patentees, but also provided for those, whether or not they could prove they were the descendants of patentees, who could establish the fact that they were full-blood Choctaws and then were willing to move to the Choctaw country west and comply with the conditions of residence? Were they not, in fact, taken care of by section 41 of the agreement of July 1, 1902?

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, I will read the provision, and then, I presume, the Senator can understand it. This, I suppose, is the part to which the Senator refers. It provides:

All persons duly identified—

And, by the way, this proves that I was right a moment ago in saying that those who did go upon the roll went there prior to the act of 1902, and all the act of 1902 did was to confirm them as being there—

All persons duly identified by the Commission to the Five Civilized Tribes—

That was the Dawes Commission—under the provisions of section 21 of the act of Congress approved June 28, 1898 (30 Stat., 495), as Mississippi Choctaws entitled to benefits under article 14 of the treaty between the United States and the Choctaw Nation concluded September 27, 1830, may at any time within six months after the date of their identification as Mississippi Choctaws by the said commission, make bona fide settlement within the Choctaw-Chickasaw country, and upon proof of such settlement to such commission within one year after the date of the said identification as Mississippi Choctaws shall be enrolled by such commission as Mississippi Choctaws entitled to allotment—

And so forth.

In just that far, and that far only, is it true that any Choctaw could have had any right there unless he proved that he was the descendant of somebody who received a patent of land in 1830.

Congress had already sent the Dawes Commission there. The Dawes Commission had enrolled those people as being Mississippi Choctaws. A citizen's court, I believe, or some other court, found that those enrollments were not final and they invalidated them. Congress said that as to those Indians enrolled by the Dawes Commission they should be placed upon the roll; but now let us go on and see what sort of a chance it gave the remainder of them. It is for the remainder of them I am fighting here. Listen to this:

The application of no person for identification as a Mississippi Choctaw shall be received by said commission after six months subsequent to the date of the final ratification of this agreement, and in the disposition of such application all full-blood Mississippi Choctaw Indians and the descendants of any Mississippi Choctaw Indians, whether of full or mixed blood, who receive a patent to land under the said fourteenth article of the treaty of 1830, who had not moved to and made bona fide settlement in the Choctaw-Chickasaw country prior to June 28, 1898, shall be deemed to be Mississippi Choctaws.

You talk to me about giving these Indians "a day in court." Suppose they had not been required to prove that they were descendants of somebody who got a patent? There were only 143 of those patents. Suppose you had said to those people—I am not reflecting upon them, but they are altogether without knowledge of the law—"You can have 140 acres of land in the Indian Territory or in Oklahoma provided you prove who your ancestor was in 1830," do you suppose one in a hundred of them could have done it? That is the way they have been treated. My amendment, which is not opening up a long, tedious something or other, is simply this, and that is all there is in it: That there shall be included amongst the distributees those of the Mississippi Choctaws who have hitherto established, or who may, prior to the 1st of January next, establish, their right to be counted as Choctaws, under such rules and regulations as shall be made by the Secretary of the Interior himself. That is all there is to it.

Mr. FALL. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me for a moment?

Mr. WILLIAMS. Yes.

Mr. FALL. As I understand the Senator's point, it is that these Choctaws whom he now wants to see take part in this distribution have not had their day in court. I think a reference to the testimony taken in the hearing at this session of the Senate will show that they were represented by attorneys and that they are now represented by attorneys.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Oh, no; the Senator misunderstood my point. I did not mean that they had not had any lawyers and had not been in court; but I say that the restrictions and conditions thrown around the proof of their rights were such as to amount not to giving them any day in court.

Mr. FALL. Then how could they get back without changing the law in some way? You would have to change the entire law under which these rolls were made up and adopt other restrictions.

Mr. WILLIAMS. This amendment changes it all I want to change it. I just want them to prove that they are full-blood Choctaws.

Mr. FALL. I simply desire to call the Senator's attention to the fact that there are other contracts than those that have been referred to in the argument as far as it has gone. There are to-day in the hands of one attorney in the city of Washington, claiming the rights for these Choctaws, contracts with 4,000 persons on the basis of from 25 to 50 per cent of what he can recover. Those contracts are made legal by the action taken here to-day, while the hands of these other Chickasaws and Choctaws are absolutely tied and they can not again employ attorneys. As I say, there are existing to-day in Washington contracts with 4,000 Choctaws. Each allotment is estimated to be worth $8,000 if they can get in on these rolls, or a total of $32,000,000. One attorney here in town would receive under his contracts from 25 to 50 per cent of the amount recovered, as he testified; so that on the basis of 25 per cent of the total he would receive $8,000,000 as his fee.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Those are some other Indians. They are not Mississippi Choctaws.

Mr. FALL. A large number of them are. There are over 7,000 claimants altogether, and included among those are the Mississippi Choctaws.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Yes; but the Mississippi Choctaws could not take that much.

Mr. FALL. No; but there are 7,000 claimants.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I do not know what part of the $7,000,000 the Mississippi Choctaws will get if this is carried out, but I suppose perhaps they may get $300,000 or $400,000 as their share. I do not know exactly what it will amount to.

Mr. FALL. May I ask the Senator how many there are?

Mr. WILLIAMS. I say, that depends entirely upon how many there are.

Mr. FALL. Is it not a fact that it is claimed by the attorneys that there are something like 4,000 who would receive benefits under the provisions of the Senator's amendment?

Mr. WILLIAMS. I do not know; but if it is claimed, that is not my understanding of the fact. That must include those in other States than Mississippi, because there are not 4,000 Indians in Mississippi.

Mr. ROBINSON. Will the Senator yield to me for a moment?

Mr. WILLIAMS. Certainly.

Mr. ROBINSON. The statement was made by Representative HARRISON before the Committee on Indian Affairs that there were 4,172 who were identified and who he claimed were entitled to be enrolled, but when the final rolls were made up they were left off and were not included.

Mr. FALL. That is correct, Mr. President. The mistake of the Senator from Mississippi, if he will allow me, is that in his argument he has in mind only the Mississippi Choctaws remaining in Mississippi; but the treaty Mississippi Choctaws in Mississippi and in Oklahoma aggregate something over 4,000.

Mr. WILLIAMS. That may be.

Mr. FALL. Those are the people that would recover $32,000,000 worth of property and whose attorneys would divide from $8,000,000 to $12,800,000, and they can do it under the action of the Senate to-day.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I yielded to the Senator for a question. Mr. President, perhaps the Senator is right in saying that the phrase "Mississippi Choctaws" would cover some Choctaws in Oklahoma, and perhaps in Arizona or somewhere else. I do not know. But it is utterly absurd to leave the impression that out of a total of $7,000,000 to be appropriated here these Mississippi Choctaws are going to get $32,000,000. They could not do that. They will get their proportion. I do not know how many Choctaws there are, all told. About how many are there?

Mr. OWEN. There are 27,000 Choctaws and Chickasaws.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Then, if there were 4,000 of these, they would have four twenty-sevenths; so you can figure that out. But I do not want the Senate to misunderstand the plain proposition.

The plain proposition is—and that is all there is to it—that there shall be included among these distributees such Mississippi Choctaws as have already established, or can by the 1st of next January establish, their right to be classed and listed and enrolled as Choctaws. Nobody can dispute the fact that the fourteenth article of the Dancing Rabbit treaty reserved to them all the privileges of Choctaw citizenship, save in the one respect which was excepted, to wit, a share in the annuity. That is a plain case, and I could not make it any plainer if I spent a week in talking about it.

I hope the amendment will be adopted.

Mr. OWEN. Mr. President, I call attention to Rule XVI, and I wish to read it:

All general appropriation bills shall be referred to the Committee on Appropriations, except the following bills, which shall be severally referred as herein indicated, namely:

I invite the attention of the Presiding Officer particularly to this part of the rule, and would be glad if he would read it.

The bill making appropriations for rivers and harbors, to the Committee on Commerce * * *; the Indian bill, to the Committee on Indian Affairs; * * * and no amendments shall be received to any general appropriation bill the effect of which will be to increase an appropriation already contained in the bill—

The provision offered by the Senator from Mississippi would increase the appropriation already adopted by the Senate to the extent of $100 apiece for every individual who might be so enrolled, and therefore is obnoxious to Rule XVI, and I make the point of order against it. The proposal of the Senator from Mississippi is not saved by anything in the remaining part of the rule, which provides:

or to add a new item of appropriation, unless it be made to carry out the provisions of some existing law—

There is no existing law that it is proposed to carry out—or treaty stipulation, or act, or resolution previously passed by the Senate during that session; or unless the same be moved by direction of a standing or select committee of the Senate, or proposed in pursuance of an estimate of the head of some one of the departments.

The proposal of the Senator from Mississippi is not in pursuance of an estimate of a department. It has not been moved by direction of a standing or select committee of the Senate. It does not propose to carry out the provisions of some existing law, or treaty stipulation, or act, or resolution; and it does propose to increase the appropriation by $100 per capita for everyone who can be added to the rolls. Therefore it is obnoxious to Rule XVI. I make the point of order under Rule XVI.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, it strikes me as a most remarkable contention that a provision in a bill which proposes to distribute certain moneys belonging to the Indians can be construed as being an appropriation. It certainly is nothing of the kind. We are not appropriating money out of the Treasury. We are simply distributing, or it is proposed to distribute, certain moneys belonging to the Indians in the custody of the Government, some of which is deposited in banks in the State of Oklahoma.

Mr. WILLIAMS. And all my amendment does is to say that a certain plan shall be pursued in ascertaining who are the distributees.

Mr. GALLINGER. That is all. It is not an appropriation at all.

Mr. OWEN. I make the point of order under Rule XVI.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair was informed originally by the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. OWEN] that this amendment was to carry out a treaty stipulation, and so the Chair held that it was not general legislation. Had the Chair at that time been advised of all the facts which subsequently appeared in the argument, the Chair would have ruled that this amendment was not germane to the bill. Not being a baseball umpire, but simply desiring to rule correctly, the Chair believes he will withdraw all former rulings and hold that the amendment of the committee to the bill is not germane. From that an appeal may be taken, if desired.

Mr. STONE. Mr. President, I have no objection to that. The truth is, I should be very glad to have it all go out under the circumstances, and that would end it; but the Senate has decided that it is germane.

The VICE PRESIDENT. I do not mean germane; I mean under the first clause, which puts upon the Chair the duty of ruling.

Mr. WILLIAMS. That it is general legislation?

The VICE PRESIDENT. That it is general legislation. That duty is put upon the Chair.

Mr. STONE. On that theory it is all right.

The VICE PRESIDENT. It is the duty of the Chair to rule upon the question whether or not it is general legislation. Whether or not it is germane is for the Senate to determine. The Chair rules that it is general legislation.

Mr. STONE. And the Chair rules out the committee amendment?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair rules out the committee amendment. The Secretary will continue the reading of the bill.

The reading of the bill was resumed, beginning on line 18, page 59.

The next amendment of the Committee on Indian Affairs was, on page 59, after line 13, to insert:

The Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized to expend from Choctaw tribal funds the sum of $500 for the erection of a suitable monument to the memory of Green McCurtain, late deceased chief of the Choctaw Nation.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the head of "Utah," section 22, page 65, after line 6, to strike out:

For continuing the construction of lateral distributing systems to irrigate the allotted lands of the Uncompahgre, Uintah, and White River Utes, in Utah, and to maintain existing irrigation systems, authorized under the act of June 21, 1906, to be expended under the terms thereof and reimbursable as therein provided, $50,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the head of "Washington," section 33, page 66, line 21, after the word "hundred," to insert "and fifty," and in line 23, after the word "superintendent," to strike out "$50,000" and insert "$60,000," so as to make the clause read:

For support and education of 350 Indian pupils at the Cushman Indian School, Tacoma, Wash., including repairs and improvements, and for pay of superintendent, $60,000, said appropriation being made to supplement the Puyallup school funds used for said school.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 67, after line 15, to strike out:

For a commission to investigate the necessity and feasibility of procuring impounded waters for the Yakima Indian Reservation or the construction of an irrigation system on the Yakima Indian Reservation to impound the waters of the Yakima River, Wash., for the reclamation of the lands on said reservation and for the use and benefit of the Indians of said reservation, such an amount as may be necessary to be paid as hereinafter directed: Provided, That said commission shall consist of two members of the Senate Committee on Indian Affairs to be appointed by the chairman of said committee and two Members of the House of Representatives to be appointed by the Speaker of the House of Representatives; and said commission shall have full power to make the investigation herein provided for and shall have authority to administer oaths, take testimony, incur expenses, and do and perform all acts necessary to determine upon a definite plan for the construction of said proposed irrigation system and shall report to Congress thereon on or before the first Monday in December, 1913: Provided further, That one-half of all necessary expenses incident to and in connection with the making of the investigation herein provided for, including traveling expenses of the members of this commission, shall be paid one-half from the contingent fund of the House of Representatives and one-half from the contingent fund of the Senate on vouchers therefor signed by the chairman of the said commission, who shall be designated by the members of the said commission.

And to insert:

That for the purpose of constructing storage reservoirs to impound flood waters of the Yakima River to provide for the total diversion of 516,000 acre-feet of stored water and natural flow during each irrigation season at the reservation gates for the irrigation of 120,000 acres, more or less, on the Yakima Indian Reservation, there is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, $900,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, to be expended in said works by the Reclamation Service.

That the lands within the project on the Yakima Indian Reservation owned by Indians in fee or otherwise to the extent of 64,000 acres, estimated to be necessary for the support of Indians allotted within the project, for which a water supply of 400 cubic feet per second of time is required, shall receive water free of any and all cost or charge on account of said storage works.

That other lands under Indian ownership to the extent of 38,000 acres additional, more or less, shall bear the proportionate acreage cost for providing said storage waters in the river, except that portion of said waters provided for in the preceding paragraph, which proportionate cost shall be a charge and lien against the undivided tribal property of the allottees thereof, to be paid on such terms and under such regulations as the Secretary of the Interior shall prescribe.

That the claims for water of the owners of the remaining area of 18,000 acres, more or less, of irrigable Indian land, the Indian title to which has been extinguished, shall be equitably adjusted by the Secretary of the Interior: Provided, That any payments by owners of said lands on account of said storage works shall be deposited in the Treasury to the credit of the United States.

That the owners of irrigable lands within the project shall pay the proportionate cost of the distribution and drainage systems upon such terms as may be fixed by the Secretary of the Interior: Provided, That no steps for the enlargement of the storage or distribution works for the benefit of the lands in the Wapato unit, as herein provided for, or for deliveries of water thereto in excess of the deliveries appropriate under the limitation to 147 second-feet, shall be undertaken until at least 80 per cent of the allotted and a like per cent of the patented lands of said unit shall have been pledged by the allottees or owners thereof for the repayment of the cost of the works, nor until all other claims for or arising out of water rights shall have been properly waived by the allottees or owners so pledging their lands, and no benefit from the works constructed on the faith of such pledges shall accrue by enlarged deliveries of water or otherwise to any lands within the unit not so pledged with waiver.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President, on page 69, line 7, I move to strke out the word "four" and insert the word "eight."

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 69, line 7, before the words "hundred cubic feet," it is proposed to strike out "four" and in lieu thereof to insert "eight," so as to read:

That the lands within the project on the Yakima Indian Reservation owned by Indians in fee or otherwise to the extent of 64,000 acres, estimated to be necessary for the support of Indians allotted within the project, for which a water supply of 800 cubic feet per second of time is required, shall receive water free of any and all cost or charge on account of said storage works.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I should like to make a brief explanation of the amendment, Mr. President.

As originally drawn, this amendment provided for the free irrigation of 32,000 acres of land allotted to Indians on the Yakima Reservation. But, subsequently, here in the Senate, after quite a full discussion, and by agreement between the opposing contentions in the matter, the 32,000 acres was increased to 64,000 acres, but the amount of water was not increased.

Mr. STONE. If the Senator will pardon me, speaking for the committee, I will accept the amendment.

Mr. POINDEXTER. It simply doubles the amount of water, because the amount of land was doubled.

Mr. JONES. I desire to add that the same provision was in the amendment I introduced May 7, and I think it was inadvertently made "4" instead of "8."

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. JONES. I see the committee has made the amount $900,000. The estimate was $1,800,000.

Mr. STONE. Yes; that is right.

Mr. JONES. Would the chairman have any objection to amending the amendment so as to give the amount estimated by the department? If it stands as it is it will simply require an additional amount hereafter.

Mr. CLAPP. I will say to the chairman that the Senator from Washington is correct. The estimate was $1,800,000.

Mr. STONE. Mr. President, I will consent as far as I am concerned and let it go into conference, where we can consider it.

Mr. OWEN. I make the point of order on that.

Mr. JONES. I suggest that the point of order comes too late. The amendment has been agreed to.

Mr. OWEN. I will reserve the point of order if necessary until the bill comes into the Senate. If it is in order now, I will make the point of order now.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The point of order must be sustained.

Mr. STONE. The point of order is sustained?

The VICE PRESIDENT. It must be sustained under the rule.

Mr. JONES. That does not go to the part of the amendment striking out the provision of the House.

Mr. STONE. If the point of order is sustained, I move that the provision of the House be restored.

Mr. JONES. If the Senator from Oklahoma insists upon the point of order, I should like to have the House text restored.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The point of order was on the amendment to the amendment seeking to change $900,000 to $1,800,000. That was the only point of order the Chair sustained.

Mr. STONE. Then it is left at $900,000.

The VICE PRESIDENT. At $900,000.

Mr. OWEN. I now make the point of order against the entire proposal, under Rule XVI.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Will the Senator state the reason why the amendment is not in order under Rule XVI?

Mr. OWEN. It is not estimated for by any proper department, it is new legislation, and it is general legislation upon an appropriation bill. Otherwise it is all right.

Mr. STONE. If this is going to lead to debate——

The VICE PRESIDENT. The point of order is not sustained. It was in the bill originally as it came from the House and is simply changing the language. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the committee as amended.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The reading the bill was continued.

The next amendment of the Committee on Indian Affairs was, on page 71, line 23, after the word "thirty-five," to insert "and the sum of $500 is hereby appropriated to the Colville Indians for reimbursement," so as to make the clause read:

That the patent in fee heretofore issued in the name of Deborah A. Griffin, June 30, 1906, for lots 1 and 2 and the northeast quarter southeast quarter, section 6, and lots 1 and 2, section 5, township 36 north, range 27 east of the Willamette meridian; and a similar patent issued in the name of Mary J. Griffin, November 21, 1910, for the southeast quarter of the southwest quarter, and lots 5, 6, and 9 of section 31, township 37 north, range 27 east of the Willamette meridian, all situated in Okanogan County, Wash., be, and the same are hereby, confirmed and declared valid, notwithstanding the previous allotment of a portion of this land under Moses agreement allotment No. 35, and the sum of $500 is hereby appropriated to the Colville Indians for reimbursement.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the head of "Wisconsin," section 24, page 72, after line 15, to strike out:

That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he hereby is, authorized to sell the merchantable timber on all unallotted lands within the Bad River Reservation, Wis., under such rules and regulations as he may prescribe, the net proceeds derived therefrom to be distributed per capita among the unallotted members of the band and deposited to their individual credit as individual Indian moneys are now deposited, and subject to expenditure for their benefit under the supervision of the Secretary of the Interior: Provided, however, That said lands shall be allotted to unallotted members of the band under existing laws; said allotments to be made subject to the sale of the timber and distribution of the proceeds as herein provided: Provided further, That patents for said allotments shall not issue until the merchantable timber has been cut and removed from the lands allotted, whereupon the title to such timber as remains on the lands allotted shall then pass to the respective allottees with the issuance of patents for their allotments: And provided further, That before said per capita distribution is made the Secretary of the Interior shall, and he is hereby authorized and directed to, make a roll of the names of the Indians who are entitled to receive allotments on the Bad River Reservation, Wis., and said per capita payments shall be made in accordance with the roll herein provided for after the same has been approved by the Secretary of the Interior.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 76, after line 9, to insert as a new section the following:

SEC. 26. Before any funds appropriated or otherwise made available for the Indian service are obligated, encumbered, or expended, it shall be the duty of the Secretary of the Interior to obtain from the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, and the duty of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs to obtain from the superintendents of Indian agencies and from other officers under whose jurisdiction the expenditures are authorized to be made, a detailed estimate of amounts required for each purpose, which estimates made by each such officer shall show an analysis of the proposed cost or expenditure within his jurisdiction, the estimated cost of each activity or class of work, project, or purpose, so subdivided as to show the estimated cost of administration, operation, upkeep of property, new or additional property and equipment, and other expenditures. And with respect to each of the foregoing subjects, there shall also be reported the estimated expenditure for salaries and wages; for services other than personal, such as transportation, telegraph and telephone service, advertising, etc.; for materials, supplies, equipment, lands and buildings, as well as the estimated amount to be expended for such specified purposes as support, payment of treaty obligations, etc.

Upon these estimates having been received it shall be the duty of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs to recommend to the Secretary of the Interior the amounts to be allotted for each activity or class of work, project, or purpose, and on such recommendation he shall itemize for each said activity or purpose the amounts to be allotted for administration, operation, upkeep of property, cost of new properties and equipment, and other expenditures in relation thereto; and the Secretary of the Interior shall thereupon make allotments in the same detail, which allotments when made will have the same binding force upon the superintendents of Indian agencies and other officers under whose jurisdiction the expenditures are to be made as if said allotments were detailed items of appropriation, with this exception: That in case it may be desired to modify or change any of the allotments so made, such modification or change may be made upon recommendation of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs in the same manner as the original allotment, and when so made shall have the same binding force: And provided further, That this requirement shall not operate to prevent the incurring of obligations and the payment of the same within the fiscal year ending June 30, 1914, prior to the time when such allotments are made, but the obligations incurred and the payments made within said fiscal year shall be included and applied against the allotments when made.

To the end that Congress, the Secretary of the Interior, and the Commissioner of Indian Affairs may have before them the information necessary for an intelligent consideration of estimates for appropriations, as well as estimates for allotments, accounts shall be kept in such form as to provide a complete analysis of all expenditures under the jurisdiction of the Bureau of Indian Affairs, which analysis shall show the total amounts expended by each superintendency or other organization unit each month, analyzed in such manner as to show the cost of each activity or class of work, project, or purpose, for administration, operation, upkeep of property, cost of additional property and equipment, and other expenditures, and each of these subjects further analyzed so as to show the amounts expended for salaries and wages, services other than personal (such as transportation, etc.), materials, supplies, equipment, and in the same detail and classification as is required for the purpose of submitting the detailed estimates as a basis for allotment of the appropriation above described.

It shall be the duty of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs to submit to the Secretary of the Interior each month a comparative summary statement of cost which shall enable him to know not only by monthly comparison the amounts expended by each agency or other jurisdiction, subdivided by activities or classes of work, projects, or purpose carried on by them, but also the amounts expended by monthly, quarterly, and annual totals for the whole service for schools, irrigation, health, and the various other classes of activities or purposes conducted or contributed to at public expense, and in submitting estimates for appropriations to Congress it shall be the duty of the Secretary of the Interior to make available to Congress all of the comparative summaries of cost, as well as the schedules of detail supporting each of the said summaries of cost, so arranged that they may be considered in relation to the estimates which are submitted with the request for further appropriation; and in like manner, when the Commissioner of Indian Affairs shall make request of the Secretary of the Interior for allotment or for amendment or change of prior allotment, the data of expenditures shall be so arranged and submitted that they may be considered in comparison with allotments or modification of allotments.

It shall be the duty of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs to have returned to him by the several agencies under whose jurisdiction the expenditures were made, such physical and operation statistics and other data as will enable him to determine and to have stated the cost of performing each class of service or kind of work in terms of standards of cost, which shall be established as a basis of judgment as to efficiency and management of economy of result. The cost or expenditure, together with the operation and other data thus obtained under the jurisdiction of the Bureau of Indian Affairs, and in the detail above described, shall be included in and made a part of the annual report of said bureau, which shall be submitted by the Secretary of the Interior to Congress in printed form on or before the 1st day of December following the closing of the fiscal year for which the report is made. To the end that the Bureau of Indian Affairs may be provided with the facilities for keeping accounts and making the reports and estimates in the manner herein described, a further sum of $12,000 is hereby appropriated, for the purpose of making the changes in methods and procedure necessary to carry the requirements of this act into effect. And this amount may be expended as a special fund for the employment of experts to be appointed by the Secretary of the Interior without certification to the Civil Service Commission.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CRAWFORD. On page 61, line 11, I move that "$5,000" be stricken out and "$10,000" inserted. I will send to the desk and ask to have printed in the RECORD a letter from the superintendent of the Indian school at Flandreau, for which this appropriation is made, showing the necessity for the increase.

Mr. STONE. Mr. President——

Mr. CRAWFORD. Will the Senator permit me just a word to finish my statement?

Mr. STONE. I was going to accept the amendment.

Mr. CRAWFORD. I did not receive the letter until it was too late to present the matter.

The matter referred to was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
UNITED STATES INDIAN SERVICE,
United States Indian School, Flandreau, S. Dak., May 28, 1913.

HON. COE I. CRAWFORD,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SENATOR: You are no doubt aware of the fact that I have returned to the Flandreau School, succeeding Dr. L. F. Michael here on the 14th of February last.

I find in making a thorough examination of the plant that there are very much needed improvements that should be made next year, and which can not be very well made with the $5,000, which, I understand, the Indian appropriation bill now carries for repairs and improvements for this school.

A new gymnasium is being erected and the steam plant extended, so that in order to give satisfactory service, additional boiler capacity must be furnished. In order to arrange for this additional boiler capacity, the boiler house will have to be enlarged, the roof raised, and the building generally improved. I wish also to install a 100-horsepower high-pressure boiler for developing power to operate our new electric-light plant, which I have recently purchased.

For a great many years we have been pumping our water by steam, but now that we are to have a larger electrical plant, I am satisfied that we can save not less than $800 a year if an electric pumping apparatus were installed.

I am therefore writing you to see whether it will be possible to increase the amount allowed by the House for general repairs and improvements to $10,000 while the bill is before the Senate.

In justification of this request, I would state that the Indian bill has carried $5,000 for general repairs and improvements at this place for a number of years. However, during the past two years only $4,464 were expended and $5,536 turned back to the Treasury. It will therefore readily be seen that the school has not used the appropriation to which it was entitled, and I believe that if this amount can again be secured for us that I can put the plant in excellent condition.

I know that I am rather late in making this request and do not know but the bill may have passed through the Senate before this will reach you. However, I will greatly appreciate any efforts you may be able to make toward securing us the $10,000 for repairs and improvements for the coming fiscal year.

Thanking you in advance, I am,

Very respectfully,

CHAS. F. PEIRCE,
Superintendent.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will state the amendment proposed by the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. CRAWFORD].

The SECRETARY. On page 61, line 11, strike out "$5,000" and insert in lieu "$10,000," and in the total strike out "$66,500" and insert "$71,500," so as to read:

For support and education of 365 Indian pupils at the Indian school at Flandreau, S. Dak., and for pay of superintendent, $61,500; for general repairs and improvements, $10,000; in all, $71,500.

Mr. STONE. I accept the amendment. The committee agrees to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CLAPP. At the bottom of page 25, I move to insert the item I send to the desk. I will state that it is the case of Stanley, who was killed in an outbreak in California. The Senate put it on the Indian appropriation bill at the last session, but it went out in conference. I now move that it be inserted.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 25, after line 26, insert:

The Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized and directed to pay, out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $5,000 to Mrs. May Stanley, widow of Will H. Stanley, late superintendent of the Soboba Indian School in California, who lost his life in the discharge of his duty; also to pay for medical and other necessary expenses, including funeral and administration expenses incurred in connection with the death of said Will H. Stanley and the shooting of Selso Serrano, Indian policeman, $1,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary.

Mr. STONE. Let the amendment be agreed to.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment submitted by the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. CLAPP].

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CLAPP. On page 39, line 2, after the word "respectively," I move to insert "and the Indians of the Fort Berthold Agency, N. Dak."

I will state that this provision allows a number of Indians to go to the Court of Claims simply for a finding of fact. It does not establish any judgment.

Mr. STONE. Let the amendment be agreed to.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair rules that the amendment of the committee having been agreed to, the vote must be reconsidered if the amendment is to be changed.

Mr. CLAPP. I move pro forma to reconsider the vote by which the amendment of the committee was agreed to.

The motion to reconsider was agreed to.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment to the amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 39, line 2, in the committee amendment, after the word "respectively," and the comma, insert "and the Indians of the Fort Berthold Agency, N. Dak."

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

Mr. CLAPP. On page 64, after line 15, I move to insert what I send to the desk.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 64, after line 15, insert:

To reimburse Eugene H. Baldwin for traveling expenses incurred by him under instructions from the Commissioner of Indian Affairs in returning to his home at Syracuse, N. Y., from Pierre, S. Dak., where he was employed as supervisor of construction and furloughed indefinitely, because weather conditions would not permit of any construction work, $39.69.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. JONES. I desire to offer an amendment to come in at the close of page 71.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be read.

The SECRETARY. On page 71, at the foot of the page, insert as a separate item the following:

That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized to purchase for the Skagit Tribe of Indians in the State of Washington the tract of land used by them as a tribal burial ground, and there is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $400, or so much thereof as may be necessary, to carry out this provision.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. JONES. I should like to have inserted in the RECORD the letter I send to the desk so as to show the reason for the amendment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. If there is no objection, the letter will be printed in the RECORD. It is so ordered.

The letter referred to is as follows:

PURCHASE OF CEMETERY FOR SKAGIT INDIANS.

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
OFFICE OF INDIAN AFFAIRS,
Washington, February 17, 1913.

Hon. WESLEY L. JONES, United States Senate.

SIR: I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt by your reference of a letter from F. W. Mansfield, of the firm of Sherwood & Mansfield, attorneys, in Everett, Wash., concerning a small cemetery situated on a ranch owned by Mrs. Hilts Rinker, the widow of a white settler, which cemetery tract the Skagit Indians are anxious to acquire.

It appears from the correspondence in this matter that this small tract, which was used by the Indians as a tribal burying ground, was found, after the survey had been corrected, to lie within the boundaries of the homestead of a white settler, and that the widow of this settler is willing to convey title to the tribe for what she considers a proper compensation. There is no authority of law or any appropriation at present available for this purchase, and the Indians themselves are unable to raise the money. The draft of a bill to be offered at the last session of Congress was referred to this office for a report. An amendment thereto was suggested, making the draft read as follows:

"That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized to purchase for the Skagit Tribe of Indians in the State of Washington the tract of land used by them as a tribal burial ground, and there is hereby appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated the sum of $400, or so much thereof as may be necessary, to carry out the provisions of this act."

So far as the office is informed neither the bill as at first proposed nor the suggested amendment were ever introduced, and no amendment has been made to the Indian appropriation bill for 1913 which covers the matter.

Should a bill along the lines indicated above be proposed and referred to this office for report, the office would be guided by its former action, no reason to the contrary appearing. Messrs. Sherwood & Mansfield were so advised by office letter of January 13, 1913.

Mr. Mansfield's letter is herewith returned.

Respectfully,

C. F. HAUKE,
Second Assistant Commissioner.

Mr. MYERS. I offer the amendment proposed by me on yesterday to come in on page 39 of the bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment submitted by the Senator from Montana will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 39, after line 16, insert:

That so much of the Indian appropriation act of 1908, entitled "An act making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Indian Department, for fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes, and for other purposes, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1908" (34 Stat. L., pp. 1035–1039, inclusive), approved March 1, 1907, relating to the disposal of the lands within the Blackfeet Indian Reservation, be, and the same hereby is, amended to read as follows:

"SECTION 1. That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized and directed to immediately cause to be surveyed all of the lands embraced within the limits of the Blackfeet Indian Reservation, in the State of Montana, and to cause an examination of the same to be made by the United States Geological Survey; and if there be found any lands bearing coal, oil, or other valuable minerals, the Secretary of the Interior is hereby directed to reserve such lands from entry, sale, or other disposition, except allotment, until further action by Congress; and he shall cause allotments to be made under the provisions of the allotment laws of the United States to all persons having tribal rights or holding tribal relations and who may rightfully belong on said reservation. That there shall be allotted to each member 40 acres of irrigable land and 280 acres of additional land valuable only for grazing purposes, or, at the option of the allottee, the entire 320 acres may be taken in land valuable only for grazing purposes. For constructing irrigation systems to irrigate the aforesaid allotted lands $300,000 is hereby appropriated, $100,000 of which shall be immediately available, the entire cost of said work for the irrigation of allotted lands to be reimbursed from the proceeds of the sale of the lands within said reservation: Provided, That when said irrigation systems are in successful operation the cost of maintaining and operating the same shall be equitably apportioned upon the irrigable lands thereunder, payment to be made annually by allottees or other owners of the land: Provided further, That any such charges not paid by allottees may be deducted from any funds deposited to their credit under the jurisdiction of the Secretary of the Interior, and when no such funds are on deposit such charges may be advanced out of tribal funds, to be later reimbursed by such allottees or deducted from their individual shares of the tribal funds: And provided further, That when said Indians have become self-supporting to the annual charge shall be added an amount sufficient to pay back into the tribal fund within 30 years the cost of the work done in their behalf; and should any allottee dispose of his allotment or any part thereof, there shall be deducted from the purchase price and deposited to the tribal fund a sum sufficient to meet all unpaid balances for such construction charges: And provided further, That the Secretary of the Interior may reserve such lands as he may deem necessary for agency, school, and religious purposes, to remain reserved so long as needed and so long as agency, school, or religious institutions are maintained thereon for the benefit of the Indians, not exceeding 280 acres to any one religious society; also such tract or tracts of timberlands as he may deem expedient for the use and benefit of the Indians of such reservation in common, the protection of slopes, and the preservation of the water supply, said timber reserve to be subject to the provisions of section 7 of an act entitled 'An act to provide for determining the heirs of deceased Indians, for the disposition and sale of allotments of deceased Indians, for the leasing of allotments, and for other purposes,' approved June 25, 1910 (36 Stat. L., p. 857): Provided, That the lands so set aside, or any part thereof, may be disposed of from time to time by the Secretary of the Interior, under such rules and regulations as he may prescribe: Provided, That there is hereby granted 320 acres each for the Holy Family Mission on Two Medicine Creek, to the Bureau of Catholic Indian Missions, and also to the mission of the Methodist Episcopal Church near Browning, to be selected by the authorities of said missions, respectively, embracing the mission buildings and improvements thereon: Provided further, That not to exceed nine townships be reserved as a tribal grazing reserve; and the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized to cause allotments of 320 acres of land within said grazing reserve to be made to each child born after the closing of the allotment rolls and so long as said lands remain reserved: And provided further, That upon the completion of said allotments the President of the United States shall appoint a commission consisting of three persons to inspect, appraise, and value all of the said lands that shall not have been allotted in severalty to said Indians or reserved by the Secretary of the Interior or otherwise disposed of, said commission to be constituted as follows: One commissioner shall be a person holding tribal relations with said Indians, one representative of the Indian Bureau, and one resident citizen of the State of Montana.

"SEC. 2. That within 30 days after their appointment said commissioners shall meet at some point within the Blackfeet Indian Reservation and organize by the election of one of their number as chairman. Said commission is hereby empowered to select a clerk at a salary of not to exceed $5 per day. That said commissioners shall then proceed to personally inspect and classify and appraise, by the smallest legal subdivisions of 40 acres each, all of the remaining lands embraced within said reservation. In making such classification and appraisement said lands shall be divided into the following classes: First, agricultural land of the first class; second, agricultural land of the second class; third, grazing land.

"SEC. 3. That said commissioners shall be paid a salary of not to exceed $10 per day each and necessary expenses, exclusive of subsistence, while actually employed in the inspection and classification of said lands; such inspection and classification to be completed within nine months from the date of the organization of said commission.

"SEC. 4. That when said commission shall have completed the classification and appraisement of all of said lands, and the same shall have been approved by the Secretary of the Interior, the lands shall be disposed of under the general provisions of the homestead and town-site laws of the United States, except such sections 16 and 36 of each township, or any part thereof, for which the State of Montana has not heretofore received indemnity lands under existing laws, which sections, or parts thereof, are hereby granted to the State of Montana for school purposes. And in case either of said sections, or parts thereof, are lost to the State of Montana by reason of allotment thereof to any Indian or Indians, or otherwise, the governor of said State, with the approval of the Secretary of the Interior, is hereby authorized to select other lands not occupied or reserved within said reservation, not exceeding two sections in any one township, which selections shall be made prior to the opening of the lands to settlement: Provided, That the United States shall pay to the said Indians, for the lands in said sections 16 and 36 so granted, or the lands within said reservation selected in lieu thereof, the appraised value thereof.

"SEC. 5. That the lands so classified and appraised shall be opened to settlement and entry by proclamation of the President, which proclamation shall prescribe the time when and the manner in which these lands may be settled upon, occupied, and entered by persons entitled to make entry thereof, and no person shall be permitted to settle upon, occupy, or enter any of said lands, except as prescribed in such proclamation, until after the expiration of 60 days from the time when the same are opened to settlement and entry: Provided, That the lands irrigable under any irrigation project or unit thereof constructed or to be constructed on said reservation shall not be opened to settlement or entry prior to the completion of such project or unit, the time when and the manner in which such irrigable lands shall be opened to be announced by proclamation of the President, and the entryman of such lands shall pay in addition to the appraised value of the lands, and the other payments provided for herein, the proportionate cost of the construction work for the irrigation thereof in 15 annual installments, which payment shall be deposited to the credit of the tribal fund: Provided further. That the rights of honorably discharged Union soldiers and sailors of the late Civil and Spanish Wars and the Philippine insurrection, as defined and described in sections 2304 and 2305 of the Revised Statutes, as amended by the act of March 1, 1901, shall not be abridged, but no entry shall be allowed under section 2306 of the Revised Statutes: Provided further, That the price of said lands shall be the appraised value thereof, as fixed by said commission, which in no case shall be less than $2.50 per acre for agricultural and grazing lands; but settlers under the homestead law who shall reside upon and cultivate the land entered in good faith for the period required by existing law shall pay one-fifth of the appraised value in cash at the time of entry and the remainder in five equal annual installments, to be paid in one, two, three, four, and five years, respectively, from and after the date of entry, and when the entryman shall have complied with all the requirements and terms of the homestead laws as to settlement and residence; and shall have made all the payments required herein, he shall be entitled to a patent for the lands entered: Provided, That he shall make his final proofs in accordance with the homestead laws within seven years from date of entry, and that aliens who have declared their intention to become citizens of the United States may become such entrymen, but before making final proof and receiving patent they must receive their full naturalization papers: And provided further, That the fees and commissions at the time of commutation or final entry shall be the same as are now provided by law where the price is $1.25 per acre: Provided, That if any entryman fails to make such payments, or any of them, within the time stated, or to make final proof within seven years from date of entry, all rights in and to the land covered by his entry shall at once cease, and any payments theretofore made shall be forfeited and the entry shall be forfeited and canceled: Provided, That nothing in this act shall prevent homestead settlers from commuting their entries under section 2301, Revised Statutes, by paying for the land entered the price fixed by said commission, receiving credit for payments previously made.

"SEC. 6. That if, after the approval of the classification and appraisement, as provided herein, there shall be found lands within the limits of the reservation under irrigation projects, deemed practicable under the provisions of the act of Congress approved June 17, 1902, known as the reclamation act, said lands shall be subject to withdrawal and be disposed of under the provisions of said act, and settlers shall pay, in addition to the cost of construction and maintenance provided therein, the appraised value as provided in this act, to the proper officers, to be covered into the Treasury of the United States to the credit of the Indians: Provided, however, That all lands hereby opened to settlement remaining undisposed of at the end of five years from the date set in the President's proclamation for opening said lands shall be sold to the highest bidder for cash, at not less than $2.50 per acre, under rules and regulations prescribed by the Secretary of the Interior; and any lands remaining unsold 10 years after said lands shall have been opened to entry shall be sold to the highest bidder for cash, without regard to the minimum limit above stated: Provided, That not more than 640 acres of land shall be sold to any one person or company.

"SEC. 7. That after deducting the expenses of the commission of classification, appraisement, and sale of lands and such other incidental expenses as shall have been necessarily incurred, including the cost of survey of said lands, the balance realized from the proceeds of the sale of the lands in conformity with this act shall be paid into the Treasury of the United States and placed to the credit of said Indian tribe, to draw interest at the rate of 4 per cent per annum, the principal and interest to be expended from time to time by the Secretary of the Interior as he may deem advisable for the benefit of said Indians and in their education and civilization.

"SEC. 8. That there is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of not more than $100,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, to pay for the lands granted to the State of Montana and reserved for agency and school purposes, at the appraised value thereof; also the sum of $75,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, to enable the Secretary of the Interior to survey, classify, and appraise the lands of said reservation as provided herein, and also to defray the expense of the appraisement and survey of said town sites, the latter sum to be reimbursable out of the funds arising from the sale of said lands: Provided, That the several amounts appropriated herein shall not be considered as additional to the appropriations made in the act of March 1, 1907, except the amount in excess of $65,000 necessary to pay for lands granted to the State of Montana.

"SEC. 9. That nothing in this act contained shall in any manner bind the United States to purchase any part of the land herein described, except sections 16 and 36, or the equivalent, in each township that may be granted to the State of Montana, the reserved tracts hereinbefore mentioned, or to dispose of said land, except as provided herein, or to guarantee to find purchasers for said lands or any part thereof, it being the intention of this act that the United States shall act as trustee for said Indians to dispose of said lands and to expend and pay over the proceeds received from the sale thereof only as received.

"SEC. 10. That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized and directed to reserve and set aside for town-site purposes, and to survey, lay out, and plat into town lots, streets, alleys, and parks, not less than 80 acres of said land at or near the present settlements of Browning and Babb, and each of such other places as the Secretary of the Interior may deem necessary or convenient for town sites, in such manner as will best subserve the present needs and the reasonable prospective growth of said settlements. Such town sites shall be surveyed, appraised, and disposed of as provided in section 2381 of the United States Revised Statutes: Provided, That any person who at the date when the appraisers commence their work upon the land shall be an actual resident upon any one such lot and the owner of substantial and permanent improvements thereon, and who shall maintain his or her residence and improvements on such lot to the date of his or her application to enter, shall be entitled to enter any time prior to the day fixed for the public sale and at the appraised value thereof such lot and any one additional lot of which he or she may also be in possession, and upon which he or she may have substantial and permanent improvements: Provided further, That before making entry of any such lot or lots the applicants shall make proof to the satisfaction of the register and receiver of the land district in which the land lies of such residence, possession, and ownership of improvements, under such regulations as to time, notice, manner, and character of proof as may be prescribed by the Commissioner of the General Land Office, with the approval of the Secretary of the Interior: And provided further, That in making their appraisal of the lots so surveyed it shall be the duty of the appraisers to ascertain the names of the residents upon and occupants of any such lots, the character and extent of the improvements thereon, and the name of the reputed owner thereof, and to report their findings in connection with their report of appraisal, which report of findings shall be taken as prima facie evidence of the facts therein set out. All such lots not so entered prior to the day fixed for the public sale shall be offered at public outcry in their regular order with the other unimproved and unoccupied lots: Provided, however, That no lot shall be sold for less than $10: And provided further, That said lots when surveyed shall approximate 50 by 150 feet in size.

"SEC. 11. That the lands allotted, those retained or reserved, and the surplus lands sold, set aside for town-site purposes, granted to the State of Montana, or otherwise disposed of shall be subject to all the laws of the United States prohibiting the introduction of intoxicants into the Indian country until otherwise provided by Congress."

Mr. STONE. I make the point of order on that amendment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair thinks that it is general legislation, and the point of order is sustained.

Mr. MYERS. I should like to be heard for a minute. I offered the amendment, I think, at the suggestion of the Senator from Missouri, the chairman of the committee. It was an amendment the Secretary of the Interior sent to the Senator from Missouri, the chairman of the committee, recommending that it be adopted. It reached the chairman just a little after the consideration of the bill had been closed, and the chairman turned it over to me, as it relates to Montana matters, and as it is recommended——

Mr. STONE. I will withdraw the point of order and let the amendment go in the bill. We will consider it in conference.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Montana [Mr. MYERS].

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ROBINSON. Yesterday the Senator from Michigan [Mr. TOWNSEND] gave notice of an amendment which he would today propose. He is unavoidably absent from the Senate on important public business and requested me to state that upon mature deliberation of the matter he had decided not to press the amendment.

Mr. STONE. I was requested by the Senator from Colorado [Mr. THOMAS] to present, in his name and on his behalf, without any expression of approval or disapproval on my part, an amendment to the bill which would authorize the Court of Claims to hear and determine and render final judgment, with the right of appeal, in any action which may be brought in said court by any Indian nation, tribe, or band which has been recognized as such nation, and so on.

Mr. President, it is quite a long amendment, and as I have information to the effect that a point of order will be made against it, and it is clearly subject to the point of order, I will not present it. I am stating this merely that the RECORD may show that the Senator from Colorado, who is necessarily absent from the Senate on important public business, desired to have the matter presented; but because of the pressure of time and the lateness of the hour I am not going to present it, for I know a point of order would be made against it and would be well taken.

Mr. CRAWFORD. I should certainly make a point of order against an amendment that would allow a judgment to be rendered absolutely by the Court of Claims.

Mr. STONE. That is the language of the proposed amendment.

Mr. STERLING. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from South Dakota offers an amendment, which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 56, after line 2, it is proposed to insert a new paragraph, as follows:

That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay to the administrator of the estate of John W. West, deceased, out of any money in the Treasury of the United States standing to the credit of the Cherokee Nation of Indians, the sum of $5,000 and interest thereon at the rate of 5 per cent per annum from the date of the award, May 25, 1883, in full payment of the award made by the commission appointed pursuant to the authority contained in the seventh article of the treaty with the Cherokees of August 6, 1846, and which award was approved by the Secretary of the Interior August 29, 1883, reaffirmed by decision dated September 16, 1884, and again reaffirmed by decision dated April 26, 1886.

Mr. STONE. Mr. President, I make the point of order against that amendment that it is a private claim, has not been estimated for, and has no place on this bill.

Mr. STERLING. Mr. President, if I may be heard just a moment on that, this is an amendment for the purpose of carrying out a treaty stipulation, and I think is in order under Rule XVI. The same point was made when a similar amendment was offered at the last session, on February 25 last, and it was then ruled that, being for the purpose of carrying out a treaty stipulation, it was in order.

Mr. GORE. Mr. President, I should like to correct the Senator from South Dakota. As I recollect, at that time this amendment was reported by the committee and was incorporated in the bill. Having been reported from a standing committee of the Senate, it was on that footing, I think, that the Chair sustained the amendment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair rules that it is not general legislation; that it seems to be in accordance with a treaty with the Cherokee Indians, and proposes to take money out of their fund.

Mr. STONE. Then I will agree to the amendment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, I desire to ask leave to insert in the RECORD a letter from Mr. Edgar B. Meritt relating to a statement that was made to the Senate yesterday concerning hearings had on the Indian appropriation bill, and to call attention to the fact that the hearings referred to were on the bill for the fiscal year 1913, the hearings being had in 1912, instead of in connection with the consideration by the committee of the pending bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Arkansas? The Chair hears none, and the letter will be printed in the RECORD.

The letter referred to is as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
OFFICE OF INDIAN AFFAIRS,
Washington, June 18, 1913.

Hon. JOSEPH T. ROBINSON,
United States Senate.

MY DEAR SENATOR: I notice in to-day's RECORD, on page 2316, that Senator LANE quotes me in support of his statement that there was a deficiency in the appropriation for surveying and allotting Indian reservations.

I wish to invite your attention to the fact that Senator LANE quoted from the hearings before the House Committee on Indian Affairs on the Indian appropriation bill for the fiscal year 1913, which has nothing to do whatever with the current Indian appropriation bill. In substantiation of this statement I am transmitting herewith the hearings dated January 17, 1912, before the Committee on Indian Affairs of the House of Representatives on the Indian appropriation bill for the fiscal year 1913, and attention is invited to pages 3 to 10 of said hearings, which contain justifications for the appropriation for survey and allotment work on Indian reservations, as provided in the Indian appropriation act approved August 24, 1912. (37 Stat. L., 518.)

It is plainly apparent, of course, that the hearings in question, which refer to last year's appropriation bill, would not be applicable to the Indian bill now under consideration by the Senate.

I should appreciate very much if the RECORD could be corrected so as to show the facts in regard to this matter.

Very respectfully,

E. B. MERITT.

Mr. GORE. I desire to offer two or three amendments. On page 51, line 18, after the name "Oklahoma," I move to insert the words "including such schools in the Quapaw Agency."

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 51, line 18, after the words "Seminole Nations in Oklahoma," it is proposed to insert "including such schools in the Quapaw Agency."

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Oklahoma.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. GORE. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk, to come in on page 13, after line 11.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 13, after line 11, it is proposed to insert as a separate paragraph the following:

To enable the Secretary of the Interior to employ a chartered and certified accountant for the purpose of preparing, under the direction of said Secretary, a complete fiscal and financial history and statement of the affairs of each of the Five Civilized Tribes of Indians, $10,000, or such part thereof as may be necessary.

Mr. STONE. I will accept that amendment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. GORE. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 50, line 16, it is proposed to insert the following:

Provided further, That the Commissioner to the Five Civilized Tribes of Indians in Oklahoma shall be appointed by the President by and with the advice and consent of the Senate.

Mr. STONE. I will accept that amendment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is, Shall the amendments be ordered to be engrossed and the bill read a third time?

Mr. CLAPP. Mr. President, before the final formal vote, I desire to ask leave to insert in the RECORD a statement showing the property of the Indians, the irrigation projects where the appropriations have been reimbursable, and the extent to which they have been reimbursed, the revolving fund and the extent to which the revolving fund has been repaid, the industrial work of the Indians, their status in the matter of farming, and the school attendance of the Indians.

Mr. STONE. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator if that document was prepared by him?

Mr. CLAPP. This document was prepared by myself from the report published by the Indian Office. There is nothing original in it except one expression of my own bearing upon the importance of the increase of Indian attendance upon the public schools. The remainder is simply a compilation.

Mr. STONE. That is important information, and the Senator from Minnesota has been so long identified with Indian work that that fact attaches additional value to the compilation. I suggest that it be also printed as a document.

Mr. CLAPP. I would have no objection to that, and if it were not so late I should like to make some remarks in connection with it, but, owing to the lateness of the hour, I simply ask to have it printed in the RECORD.

Mr. STONE. I will ask that it be printed as a document as well as printed in the RECORD.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the paper will be printed in the RECORD and also as a public document.

The matter referred to is as follows:

STATEMENT OF STATUS OF INDIAN CONDITIONS (S. Doc. No. 109).

(Pages 290, 291.)

The above is exclusive of property consisting in part of coal and timber, which the Government has taken over under an agreement to dispose of the same and account to the Indians for the proceeds. It would be difficult to estimate the amount of such property.

Total estimated property of Indians valued at	$643,684,036.83
Total expenditures of Indian Service, with the single exception of per capita payments to Indians	11,270,343.92
Cost of administration, estimated on above as basis	1.75 per cent.

Reimbursable.

Land, coal, and timber.

Uinta Reservation, Utah, is the only reservation where the Government has been entirely reimbursed for irrigation projects from the sale of land.

In many cases complete reimbursement has been made on account of reimbursable appropriations for surveying and other purposes, but sufficient funds have not accrued to make a complete reimbursement for the expenditures under the appropriations. This is illustrated in the case of Colorado River and Flathead.

Up to June 30, 1912, the Government had been reimbursed over $6,300,000 out of reimbursable appropriations, part of which is for irrigation.

REVOLVING FUND.

The sum of $30,000 was appropriated by the act of March 3, 1911 (36 Stat. L., 1058–1061), for the purpose of encouraging industry among Indians, and this money was apportioned in various amounts, ranging from $1,000 to $5,000, to 15 different reservations. Expenditures have been made in the purchase of farming implements, equipment, wagons, and horses and other breeding stock, and while the actual number of Indians who participated in the use of the money on the various reservations is not known at the present time, the reports received indicate that the money is serving a very useful purpose.

The act of April 4, 1910 (36 Stat. L., 269–277), appropriated the sum of $15,000 for the purpose of encouraging industry among the Indians residing on the Tongue River Reservation in Montana. The entire sum appropriated for this reservation has been expended in the purchase of breeding and work stock, seeds, and agricultural equipment, which have been sold to 251 Indians of this tribe on a deferred-payment plan, and $6,884.15 have been repaid, with not a single beneficiary of this fund delinquent under the terms of the agreements. The purchases of the Indians from this fund have made many of them self-supporting. The freighting of Government supplies 55 miles to the agency is now done largely by Indians, who have purchased their horses from this fund.

The act of April 30, 1908 (35 Stat. L., 70–83), appropriated the sum of $25,000 to be used as a reimbursable fund at the Fort Belknap Reservation for the purchase of machinery, tools, implements, and other equipment and animals to enable the Indians to engage in the raising of sugar beets and other crops. There are approximately 154 accounts outstanding against the Indians on this reservation by reason of their participation in the use of the money appropriated.

The accounts involve the purchase of agricultural implements, fence wire, and seed.

The total expenditure made under the appropriation since its establishment amounts to $29,768.26, and more than $15,000 has been already repaid by the Indians and is being again used for a similar purpose under the provisions of the act of March 3, 1909 (35 Stat. L., 781–795), which provides that the money repaid shall be available for reexpenditure until June 1, 1915.

EMPLOYMENT OF INDIANS.

During the year ending June 30, 1912, there were employed by the Indian Office 14,936 Indians, engaged in various matters, whose total earnings amounted to $1,164,996; and there were employed during that period by private parties 5,113 adults and 2,375 minors and outing students, whose total earnings amounted to $775,418, or a grand total of $1,940,414. (P. 165.)

Of the 14,936 Indians employed through the Indian Office, 1,905 males and 521 females are in regular service, while 11,479 males and 941 females are employed at intervals.

FARMING.

June 30, 1912, reports were made grouping reservations advanced in farming and stock raising, and of 28,544 male adult Indians of the first group there were 24,489 farming for themselves, and of 65,639 able-bodied Indians of the second group 20,178 were raising stock as their principal means of support. (P. 12.)

Of all the Indians engaged in farming (exclusive of the Five Civilized Tribes) there were a total of 39,901 farming 558,503 acres of land, producing a crop value of $3,250,000, of which $2,800,000 was for grain, hay, etc., and the balance for vegetables. (Pp. 146 and 150.)

There were engaged in stock raising 51,380 Indians, of whom 26,014 made it their principal means of support; 25,306 made it a partial means of support. The total acreage was 30,070,240 and the total value of stock grazed was $22,238,241. (Pp. 152–153.)

INDUSTRIES.

During the year 1912 there were engaged in other work than farming, with a value of products of such work, as follows:

	Number.	Amount.
Basket making	3,336	$36,150
Beadwork	3,588	23,038
Blanket making	2,871	592,458
Fishing	3,258	150,280
Lace making	196	9,635
Pottery	2,049	5,375
Woodcutting	3,066	233,010
Other work not classified	4,198	160,587
Total	22,564	1,211,433

June 30, 1912, there were 16,679 Indians of all classes who were receiving rations, of which a large proportion were receiving rations issued in payment for labor performed.

SCHOOLS.

June 30, 1912, there were 65,093 Indian children able to attend school. Of these, 24,341 were in Government schools, 4,621 in mission schools, 158 in private schools, and 17,611 in the public schools, or a total of 46,131 in school and 18,962 not attending school. (P. 188.)

In 1901 the average attendance in public schools was 98, and perhaps no phase of the Indian situation is so suggestive of progress on the part of the Indians as the increase from 98 in 1901 to 17,611 in 1912 in attendance in public schools. (P. 11.)

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time and passed.

FOREIGN TARIFF SYSTEMS AND INDUSTRIAL CONDITIONS.

Mr. SMOOT. I desire to give notice that on Saturday next, June 21, following the routine morning business, I shall submit some remarks on the report prepared by the Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce of the Department of Commerce at the request of the chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means on "Foreign tariff systems and industrial conditions."

ADJOURNMENT TO SATURDAY.

Mr. KERN. I move that when the Senate adjourns to-day it adjourn to meet on Saturday next at 12 o'clock m.

The motion was agreed to.

SALARY OF COMMISSIONER OF INDIAN AFFAIRS.

Mr. BACON obtained the floor.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Mr. President, I desire to ask the Senator from Georgia if he will not permit me to make a statement? I will occupy only a moment.

Mr. BACON. Certainly.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Mr. President, on yesterday, when the question of fixing the salary of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs was under consideration, I called attention to the fact that he had already been appointed. It has been suggested to me that possibly my objection to increasing the salary might be construed as an expression of hostility to the distinguished gentleman who, I understand, has been named for that place. I want to say, Mr. President, that no such thought was in my mind. I know Mr. Sells quite well, and I desire here to pay the tribute of my very high regard and admiration of him both as a man and as an officer. If I should have favored increasing the salary of any one, I should have done so for Mr. Sells. My purpose in objecting to that was that I believe in the economical administration of public affairs, and I am also very much opposed to the policy of fixing salaries or making any other law with reference to the individual who happens to occupy the office at the time, and my objection was in no way a reflection upon the worth of Mr. Sells.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. BACON. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to, and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After 25 minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened, and (at 7 o'clock p. m.) the Senate adjourned until Saturday, June 21, 1913, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

FRIDAY, June 20, 1913.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D., offered the following prayer:

O Thou great Jehovah, King of Kings and Lord of Lords, our God and our Father, our life, our light, our faith, our hope, our inspiration. Let Thy blessing descend upon us to quicken the angels of our better self that we may respond to every call toward the ideals promulgated and exemplified in the incomparable life and character of the Son of God, whose spirit has found its way into the hearts of millions, working in and through them the works of righteousness. To the glory and honor of Thy holy name. Amen.

The Journal of Tuesday, June 17, 1913, was read and approved.

JOINT SESSION OF THE TWO HOUSES OF CONGRESS.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I move the adoption of the concurrent resolution which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

House concurrent resolution 10.

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring). That the two Houses of Congress assemble in the Hall of the House of Representatives on Monday, the 23d day of June, 1913, at 12 o'clock and 30 minutes in the afternoon, for the purpose of receiving such communications as the President of the United States shall be pleased to make them.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I am advised by the President that he desires to submit to the two Houses of Congress his views in reference to currency legislation, and that he would like to meet the two Houses on Monday next at 1 o'clock. It is for that purpose that I offer the resolution to invite the Senate to be present at 12 o'clock and 30 minutes.

The resolution was agreed to.

COMMITTEE ON INSULAR AFFAIRS.

Mr. JONES. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the resolution which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

House resolution 177.

Resolved, That the Committee on Insular Affairs be authorized to have such printing and binding done for the use of the committee as may be necessary during the Sixty-third Congress.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

There was no objection.

The resolution was agreed to.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Tulley, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed bill of the following title, in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

S. 2319. An act authorizing the appointment of an ambassador to Spain.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed with amendments bill of the following title, in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

H. R. 1917. An act making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Bureau of Indian Affairs, for fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes, and for other purposes, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1914.

SENATE BILLS REFERRED.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, Senate bills of the following titles were taken from the Speaker's table and referred to their appropriate committees, as indicated below:

S. 1620. An act to provide for representation of the United States in the Fourteenth International Congress on Alcoholism, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Appropriations.

S. 1864. An act for the relief of the contributors to the Ellen M. Stone ransom fund; to the Committee on Claims.

S. 1689. An act authorizing the accounting officers of the Treasury to allow in the accounts of the United States marshal for the district of Connecticut amounts paid by him from certain appropriations; to the Committee on Claims.

S. 2319. An act authorizing the appointment of an ambassador to Spain; to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

INDIAN APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill H. R. 1917, the Indian appropriation bill, disagree to the Senate amendments, and ask for a conference.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas asks unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the Indian appropriation bill, disagree to the Senate amendments, and ask for a conference.

Mr. MURDOCK. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would like to ask the gentleman from Texas if it was agreed some time previously that this matter should be taken up?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. This bill was one of those specifically mentioned in the agreement as excepted.

Mr. MURDOCK. It was excepted in the agreement which was adopted by unanimous consent.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. The agreement was to hold out all business until the 23d of this month; but this was one of the bills that was excepted.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Kansas make a parliamentary inquiry?

Mr. MURDOCK. No, Mr. Speaker; I was asking the gentleman from Texas a question, and reserved the right to object. I have no objection.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would like to ask unanimous consent to address the House for 10 minutes on the subject of the Indian appropriation bill.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from South Dakota reserve the right to object?

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Yes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Will the gentleman from South Dakota allow me first to ask for unanimous consent with reference to adjournment?

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Certainly.

ADJOURNMENT UNTIL MONDAY.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Then, Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that when the House adjourns to-day it adjourn to meet on Monday next.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Alabama.

There was no objection.

INDIAN APPROPRIATION BILL.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. BURKE] to address the House for 10 minutes on the Indian appropriation bill?

There was no objection.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Mr. Speaker, I am not going to object to this bill going to conference. Before unanimous consent is given, however, I desire to have the chairman of the committee, who I assume will be on the conference, give the House some assurance that before some of the amendments are agreed to there shall be an opportunity in the House for a separate vote upon them.

This Indian appropriation bill was passed in the House in the last session of the Sixty-second Congress, after very full consideration by the Committee on Indian Affairs and after full consideration in the House. It went to the Senate, and for the information of the House I will say that the bill as it passed the House carried $8,262,928, or about $3,000,000 less than the estimates. It came back from the Senate with amendments aggregating $5,488,000, and besides there were amendments containing important legislation and providing for recognizing certain claims. After considerable deliberation in conference the conferees agreed on a report making the bill about $10,000,000. In other words, the conference eliminated $3,672,000 in round figures and also eliminated practically all of the claims and much of the legislation.

Mr. MURDOCK. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Certainly.

Mr. MURDOCK. Will the gentleman explain what the remaining $2,000,000 appropriated by the Senate and added to the House bill was for?

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. It was mostly increases for practically all purposes, but the largest amounts were in connection with irrigation projects. I think the largest increase was in connection with irrigation. I remember one distinctly, the Yakima irrigation project in the State of Washington, for which $1,800,000 was added.

Mr. MURDOCK. Is the gentleman satisfied that all of the objectionable items to which he alluded were eliminated?

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. I think so. I was about to say that the bill which passed the House in this Congress is the bill exactly as agreed to in conference in the last Congress, without change in the slightest particular. We passed the bill, as the House will remember, under a rule not subject to any amendment, and passed it exactly as we had agreed to in conference. The conferees agreed and all signed the report. During the time of the conference the conferees were informed that unless it put into the bill some legislation which the committee had no jurisdiction to put in, the bill would not be permitted to pass. I am not going to state who it was that sent that notice to the conference committee, but I will say that it was not a member of the committee.

Notwithstanding that threat, the committee did not put in the legislation demanded. The conference report was never adopted, notwithstanding several days elapsed between the time that the report was submitted and when Congress adjourned. I merely mention this as one of the instances that constantly and frequently happen where important appropriation bills are defeated simply by the power of one person somewhere who has not been permitted to have his way in something that he thinks he ought to have, and I hope the time will come when it will not be possible in any legislative body, here or elsewhere, for one Member to prevent important legislation and defeat appropriation bills during the closing days of a Congress, or at any other time, when the business of the country requires the appropriations to be made.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Certainly.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Is there much new legislation in the Senate amendments?

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. In the amendments to the pending bill?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Yes.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Not very much; but there is some, and some that may be considered important legislation.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I merely want to call attention to the fact that in the other body there has been much acrimonious criticism of this body in respect to placing legislation on appropriation bills, and I desired to see what effect those remarks had upon the body in which they were made.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Certainly.

Mr. MONDELL. I simply rose to ask the gentleman if he proposes to inform the House in regard to the important changes made by the Senate. I understand that he does?

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Mr. Speaker, as I stated, this bill passed the House following the precedent established when the House passed the sundry civil appropriation bill, both bills being passed under a rule. The sundry civil appropriation bill when it came back to the House contained only one amendment, barring perhaps a couple of amendments that were merely to correct some errors in the bill. The one amendment that I referred to was unimportant. The bill went to conference. The other body later receded from its amendment and the bill has gone to the White House, I am informed. This bill when it left here was considered for a number of weeks in the committee of the other body and was materially amended, and there was added to it in new appropriations two millions and a half dollars in round numbers. There has also been added some legislation, and, as usual, when an Indian appropriation bill passes the House and returns it contains a few claims, though not as many as usual.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Yes.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Is the gentleman aware that the John W. West claim, which has been defeated several times in this House, has been put on this bill?

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. I understand that it is one of the amendments.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Is it not a fact that we sent the bill to the Senate containing a provision that a committee should be appointed by the House for the purpose of ascertaining what should be done with reference to the irrigation of the Yakima Reservation in Washington, and that instead of adopting that provision the Senate has appropriated $1,800,000 for that purpose?

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. The bill, I may say, has been amended, adding an item of $1,800,000 in lieu of the provision which was agreed to in conference in the last Congress that a commission consisting of two Senators and two Members of the House be appointed to visit the Yakima Reservation for the purpose of making a report. In other words, an important amendment which was in the bill, eliminated in conference in the last Congress, is again in the bill.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Is not it also a fact that there is an appropriation of $100,000 for the purpose of opening a large reservation in the State of Montana—the Blackfoot Reservation, I believe—and that it contains a great deal of legislation?

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Well, I have not examined in detail what that amendment is, but there is an amendment of some importance affecting a reservation in Montana. Mr. Speaker, my purpose in discussing this matter briefly at this time is simply to bring to the attention of the House the situation as it exists so far as this bill is concerned. I am in favor of the bill going to conference; I hope that it may be permitted to go to conference without delay, notwithstanding the fact that the amendments have not yet been printed. There are only a few days remaining before the close of the fiscal year, and in justice to those who will be appointed on the conference committee, in order that they may have an opportunity to meet and fully consider the amendments and in order that a report may be submitted and the bill enacted into law by July 1, it ought to go to conference at the earliest possible time, which will be to-morrow if the request of the gentleman from Texas is granted. But before consenting to unanimous consent, I want the chairman of the Committee on Indian Affairs, who will head the conference committee appointed by the House, to give us some assurance that before an agreement is reached by which many of these amendments may be accepted that the House will be given an opportunity to have a separate vote upon some of them; and. Mr. Speaker, I want to say for the chairman of the committee that, so far as I am personally concerned, I have no doubt whatever and no concern whatever as to what his position will be, because I have served with him on conferences on former occasions and I think I know what his attitude is toward the amendments that are now in the bill; but I think it is due to the House that he make some statement before unanimous consent is given to allow the bill to go to conference, that before agreeing to certain amendments he will come back to the House and allow opportunity to discuss and consider them and permit, if demanded, a separate vote to be taken upon them.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Speaker, in answer to the gentleman's question I desire to state I do not believe that the proper thing for any conference committee to do is to bring in a report or agree to a report from any other body that carries new legislation that had not been before the House and considered by the House. For three men representing the House to meet the conferees from another body and agree to material amendments upon a bill and report back to the House provisions for legislation that had never been considered by this House would be an assumption of more authority than I am willing, as one of the conferees, ever to take [applause]; and therefore new legislation that amounts to a large expenditure of money or the establishment of a new precedent or anything of that kind or character that the House had never considered should not be passed upon favorably by the conference committee, but the matter should be reported back to the House for its action. That is the position I now take and have always stood upon in regard to these conference matters.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Mr. Speaker, may I ask the gentleman from Texas a question?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. The gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. BURKE] has the floor.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from South Dakota has expired.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Then I will yield to the gentleman.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. The bill as it passed the Senate provides for clerks in the city of Washington. I would like to have the gentleman state if he will either disagree to the amendment or give the House an opportunity to vote upon it.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Is it new legislation?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. It is a provision that invades the jurisdiction of the legislative bill. We have provided for the clerical force in the District of Columbia such a sum of money and such a number of men as we believed the bureau ought to have. This bill carries a lump-sum appropriation in addition to what we have provided.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Then I understand that it is the desire of the gentleman that we should report a disagreement upon that item and have it passed upon by the House?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Yes. There is also a provision in this bill repealing a section in the legislative bill requiring the Indian Bureau to send in estimates specifically for the number of people needed in the bureau in Washington.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Has the gentleman any objection to that provision?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. I have.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Why?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. I will say to the gentleman it is impossible for those whose duty it is to provide clerical assistants for all the departments in Washington to do the work intelligently if other committees are appropriating lump sums to enable them to employ a force that we know nothing about.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I will state to the gentleman, Mr. Speaker, that I do not know that I shall be on that conference; but if I am I shall adhere to the rule that we have laid down, that new legislation that would be inconsistent with existing laws and that would be contrary to the established usage of the House would not be agreed to unless satisfactory to all parties.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. I want to say to the gentleman that I did intend to object to his bill going to conference until the Senate amendments were printed, but in view of the fact that he has stated that we are to have separate votes upon the important amendments, I am not going to object. But I will say this: That if the Committee on Indian Affairs brings in a conference report that provides lump-sum appropriations for clerical help in the Indian Bureau, the conference report will not be adopted without a fight or without a quorum of the House.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Was the original bill satisfactory to the gentleman?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. It was in that respect.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Certainly.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. I would like to ask the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. JOHNSON] if, as a matter of fact, the Committee on Indian Affairs has refrained, so far as this end of the Capitol is concerned, from consenting to any legislation that does conflict with the jurisdiction of the Committee on Appropriations in making appropriations for the Indian Bureau?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. I will say to the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. BURKE] that I have found that the gentleman himself and the gentleman from Texas [Mr. STEPHENS] are in sympathy with my views upon this question. But I simply wanted to warn the gentleman from Texas that he must not yield to the importunities at the other end of the Capitol.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, do I understand the gentleman from Texas [Mr. STEPHENS] to say that there will be an opportunity to vote on these amendments?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. On the new legislation?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Not only on the new legislation, but particularly the amendments mentioned by the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. JOHNSON], whether those will be reported as disagreements?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I understand so. We do not desire, I will say, Mr. Speaker, to come in conflict with any other committee of this House. We have always tried to avoid that heretofore, and will do so in the future.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Unless the gentleman will make a statement to the effect that these two amendments will not be agreed upon without an opportunity being given to the House to discuss and pass upon them, I shall have to insist upon a separate vote upon the two amendments.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. We will agree to that, then.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I simply want very briefly to emphasize what the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. BURKE] has said with regard to the procedure of the conferees in connection with the consideration of this bill.

There are a number of important amendments, a number of which I believe personally to be objectionable, at least on an appropriation bill. The bill which is under consideration is a bill which should have been enacted into law in the last Congress, and unless there is some very urgent reason why there should be some change from the legislation as the last Congress agreed upon it there should be no such departure, at least no important change.

Therefore, I want to emphasize the suggestion that the House shall have the opportunity to pass upon any of these new important matters before they are agreed to by the conferees on the part of the House. I understand that the gentleman from Texas [Mr. STEPHENS] and the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. BURKE], both of whom will probably be members of the conference, are agreeable to that view, and with that understanding and with the hope and expectation that the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. CARTER] also shares that view, I shall not object.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection; and the Speaker announced as the conferees on the part of the House Mr. STEPHENS of Texas, Mr. CARTER, and Mr. BURKE of South Dakota.

ANNIVERSARY CELEBRATION, BATTLE OF GETTYSBURG.

The SPEAKER. The Chair lays before the House a letter in the nature of an invitation to the House, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Commonwealth of Pennsylvania and the Fiftieth Anniversary of the Battle of Gettysburg Commission request the honor of the presence of the Members of the House of Representatives of the United States at the reunion celebration at Gettysburg, Pa., July 1, 2, 3, and 4, 1913.

JOHN K. TENER,
Governor of Pennsylvania.
J. M. SCHOONMAKER,
Chairman Fiftieth Anniversary of the Battle of Gettysburg Commission.

The favor of an answer not later than June 20, 1913, is requested to Lieut. Col. Lewis E. Beitler, secretary, Pennsylvania commission, Capitol, Harrisburg, Pa.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the resolution which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD] asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of the resolution which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

House resolution 179.

Resolved, That the invitation of the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania and the Fiftieth Anniversary of the Battle of Gettysburg Commission to the House of Representatives to attend at the reunion celebration at Gettysburg, Pa., July 1, 2, 3, and 4, 1913, is accepted.

That a committee consisting of the Speaker and 14 Members of the House to be designated by him be appointed to attend said reunion celebration on behalf of the House of Representatives, and that the expenses of said committee be paid out of the contingent fund of the House of Representatives upon vouchers to be approved by the Speaker and audited by the Committee on Accounts.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, the invitation coming from the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania to this House is to join in a celebration by the veterans on both sides of the Civil War. I think it only proper and appropriate that this House should recognize that celebration by sending a committee of the House to be present as the representatives of this body.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I should like to ask the gentleman from Alabama if there is any reason why this resolution might not be passed on Monday next as well as to-day?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I can only say to the gentleman that I see no reason why it should not be passed to-day as well as on Monday.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. The resolution incurs an expense, and the Republican minority leader [Mr. MANN] is absent; and under the arrangement made before he went away it might be considered that this is going outside of what was contemplated.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. The letter to the Speaker requested an answer as to whether this House would accept the invitation or not not later than the 20th of this month. I think I myself can speak, if the gentleman from South Dakota is not willing to do so, for the patriotism of the gentleman from Illinois. The expense incident to the going of a committee from this House to Gettysburg to this celebration and return will be very small. I think this is a proper recognition of the occasion, and as the gentlemen in charge of the ceremony have requested us to answer their invitation not later than the 20th, I am inclined to think this resolution ought to go through to-day. Of course, it will have to go through if there is to be any answer.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Mr. Speaker, I am in entire accord with the resolution. I interrogated the gentleman simply for information, and I am entirely satisfied with the statement that he has made. I have no objection.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. The Speaker has made a suggestion to me in regard to the number of this committee. In order to properly accommodate both sides of the House and at the same time take care of the old soldiers on both sides of the House who ought to go on this committee, I ask leave to change the number from 14 to 20.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman asks leave to change the number from 14 to 20. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

Mr. SISSON. Mr. Speaker, I was on my feet. I do not know that I want to object. Is this committee to be composed of 20 Members of the House?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Twenty is the number now. There are a number of old soldiers on the two sides of the House, and in order to take care of them and at the same time give proper representation to the minority it is necessary to increase it to 20.

Mr. SISSON. I did not hear the reading of the resolution. I have just come in.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. The original resolution read 14, but I asked to change it to 20.

Mr. SISSON. Are all the expenses to be paid out of the contingent fund?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I think so. I think that is absolutely proper in an instance of this kind. Not that these gentlemen would have any objection to paying their own expenses, but I think it is appropriate that the House should give this recognition.

Mr. FITZGERALD. We have already appropriated $150,000 to pay a part of the cost of the celebration, and I doubt if the expense will be very much, as the fare is not over $7 or $8.

Mr. SISSON. As long as we have paid that much, if the management of the Gettysburg celebration wanted a committee to come there, why could they not pay the expenses out of that $150,000?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I will say to my friend from Mississippi that the matter strikes me in this way: The expenses will be very small. The fare up there and back is only $6 or $7.

Mr. KIRKPATRICK. Five dollars and five cents.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I am informed that it will be $5.05. The fare of 20 Members will be about $100, and their hotel expenses will be comparatively small. I think in a matter of this importance to the Nation the committee ought to go not only with the authority of the House, but go with their expenses paid by the House, to show that they fully represent this House in every respect.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The resolution was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will appoint the committee later.

Subsequently the Speaker appointed the following committee: The SPEAKER, Mr. SHERWOOD, Mr. TALBOTT of Maryland, Mr. GOULDEN, Mr. STEDMAN, Mr. KIRKPATRICK, Mr. TAYLOR of Alabama, Mr. RICHARDSON, Mr. JONES, Mr. ESTOPINAL, Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois, Mr. SHERLEY, Mr. BOOHER, Mr. DIXON, Mr. MANN, Mr. PAYNE, Mr. BURKE of South Dakota, Mr. AUSTIN, Mr. MONDELL, Mr. HULINGS, and Mr. DYER.

COMMITTEE ON LABOR.

Mr. LEWIS of Maryland. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the resolution which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Maryland asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of a resolution which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

House resolution 178.

Resolved, That the Committee on Labor be authorized to have such printing and binding done for the use of the committee as may be necessary for the transaction of its business during the Sixty-third Congress.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The resolution was agreed to.

THE BUDGET SYSTEM.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent that on Tuesday next, after the House has transacted the routine business and such privileged matters as may come before it, he be allowed to address the House for one hour on the subject of appropriations.

Mr. MURDOCK. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would like to ask the gentleman if this is to be a discussion of the budget?

Mr. FITZGERALD. I want to present some views that I have been working on for some time.

Mr. MURDOCK. The reason I ask is that I am reading in the newspapers every day that there is to be a report from the budget committee that has the subject in charge.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The Democratic caucus has appointed a committee to do certain things imposed upon it, but it is not my purpose to discuss that. I wish to discuss——

Mr. MURDOCK. Appropriations generally?

Mr. FITZGERALD. No; I want to be fair with the gentleman. I want to discuss a proposition that I have had in mind for some time, and discuss the resolution introduced by the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. SHERLEY] at the last session.

Mr. MURDOCK. On the budget system?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Yes. I made a statement at the time that in the near future I hoped to be able to make some remarks upon it.

Mr. BARTON. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I can hardly conceive of any discourse that would be more instructive to this body than the question submitted and propounded to the Secretary of the Navy at the last meeting of the House, but as I take the position that this body can not gain too much information on any question, I shall refrain from objecting to this request.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I stated to the gentleman from Nebraska the other day that his matter being highly privileged he could, any time after Monday, move to discharge the committee and discuss it. It was simply in the interest of the orderly conduct of business that the objection was made.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. STEENERSON, for 30 days, on account of important business.

To Mr. MONTAGUE, indefinitely, on account of illness in his family.

MONOPOLY OF PETROLEUM OIL.

Mr. SMITH of Minnesota. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Reserving the right to object, will the gentleman state upon what subject?

Mr. SMITH of Minnesota. On the subject of the monopoly of petroleum oil.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Minnesota?

There was no objection.

TICKETS FOR HOUSE GALLERIES.

The SPEAKER. Under a special order of the House the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. NEELEY] is to have an hour to address the House. Before he begins the Chair desires to make a statement which interests every Member of the House.

President Wilson is to address both Houses of Congress on Monday next. On the last occasion, without much study of the situation, two tickets were issued to each Member of the House. They were delivered and sent out and could not be returned. After they had been sent out some one, Mr. UNDERWOOD, Mr. MANN, or Mr. FITZGERALD, called my attention to the fact that no provision had been made for the admission of families of Senators to the gallery. It was too late to get the tickets back, and there were not enough seats in the gallery for them. All we could do under the circumstances was to issue to the Senate its proportionate share by issuing additional tickets. The consequence was that we found ourselves in the condition of having two tickets out where there was only one seat. There was a good deal of confusion and some bad temper one way and another.

A few days subsequent Senator OVERMAN, chairman of the Committee on Rules, came to see me and said that there was some dissatisfaction about it, and that on such occasions the Senate set aside a part of the Senate gallery for the House.

The matter slipped my mind until yesterday, when notice was given that the President was coming on Monday to deliver another message. The Chair got the Doorkeeper and called in the leaders of the three parties in the House and tried to figure out some scheme or proposition, and the one we propose to try is this: The corner on the left of the Speaker in the southwest corner of the gallery has 100 seats, and it is proposed to set that aside for the families of the Senate. There are practically 100 seats in that section, and one ticket for each seat will be issued to the Members of the Senate. Then there will be issued one ticket for each Member, the tickets to Senators and Representatives. In addition to that, the President has absolute control of the entrance into the Executive gallery, as has the diplomatic corps into the diplomatic gallery. That will prevent as large a crowd as on the other occasion when the President delivered his message. Everyone who has a ticket will get a seat. The Chair thought it best to make this announcement.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. Speaker, may I be permitted to suggest that the officers of this House who have control of the galleries proceed as early as possible to number every seat in the gallery, and when tickets are issued let the numbers upon the tickets correspond to the numbers upon the seats in the galleries. We could thus avoid what has occurred for years when more tickets have been issued than we have seats and when the holders of tickets have been unable to realize upon their tickets.

The SPEAKER. We considered that also.

Mr. LLOYD. Mr. Speaker, the last time there were quite a number of people who got into the galleries who had no tickets. I desire to call this to the attention of every Member of the House. On the last occasion people were able to get in who had no ticket, and I hope that every Member of the House will see to it that every officer of the House attends to his duty and permits no man or woman to enter the galleries who is not entitled to a seat.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Mr. Speaker, I want to say a word in behalf of the doorkeepers. I am sure that if there were any persons who thus entered the galleries it was because Members took their friends without tickets and practically said to the doorkeeper, "Stand aside and let in these friends of mine or the friends of my family." I know of instances in which that was done, in violation of the rules of the House and without tickets. It was not the fault of the officers of the House, but the fault of the Members of the House.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. Speaker, I will say to the gentleman that if the coupon system which I suggest is adopted, when a person holding a ticket appears and some one else is occupying the seat for which the ticket calls, that person may be ejected. That is the only way in which this matter can be remedied. I had two tickets on one occasion for members of my family, and they could not obtain seats in the gallery because every seat was taken.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, how many tickets do I understand are issued under the arrangement which has been perfected—that is, how many more tickets than there are seats?

The SPEAKER. There are 440 Members of the House, including Delegates. There are 556 seats in the galleries, but people can sit on the steps. That is the only way in which we can eke out one ticket for each Member and one for each Senator. Of course, the Doorkeeper ought to issue, and will issue, one ticket to each Cabinet officer and to each member of the Supreme Court.

Mr. MONDELL. Then there is no considerable excess of tickets over the number of seats?

The SPEAKER. Practically none.

Mr. MONDELL. In this connection I want to say, in line with what has been said by the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. AUSTIN], that there has been a good deal of difficulty in the past in the families of Members securing seats in the galleries. I do not know who has been responsible, but we have had a condition of affairs under which unless the families of Members were here immediately upon the opening of doors it was impossible to get in, even when there was no considerable excess of tickets above the number of seats. I trust that with the new arrangement we shall have no more of that difficulty.

The SPEAKER. Heretofore we have always issued two tickets for each Member on any occasion when it was expected that great curiosity to see the House in session would bring a large number of visitors. There never has been a time when the galleries had two seats in it for each Member. Of course, they sit upon the steps, which is nearly as good a place to sit as in one of those chairs. We have undertaken to work this out so that there would be as little confusion and heartburning as possible. If Members will assist the officers, there will not be any trouble about it.

The gentleman from Kansas [Mr. NEELEY] is recognized for one hour.

MONEY-TRUST INVESTIGATION.

Mr. NEELEY. Mr. Speaker, in order that none may mistake my position, I desire in the very beginning to state as emphatically as I may be able that I favor currency reform at the earliest possible date, not only to meet present-day needs but to be built upon a foundation broad enough to care for the emergencies of the future.

No person conversant with present conditions will dispute the necessity for this action, and I have full confidence that this Democratic Congress, acting in conjunction with the President, will be able to devise a plan free from the control of special and profit-expecting interests ample to meet the demands of the country and conserve the interests of all our people alike. The good faith of the Democratic Party is pledged to do this as soon as we may, even though it be necessary to remain here the entire summer and until the regular session convenes in December to accomplish the task before us.

I also believe the disclosures in the recent Money Trust investigation should be kept constantly in mind and the work immediately pushed to its completion. There is no good reason why this investigation should not be continued either by a subcommittee of the Banking and Currency Committee or perhaps a special House committee; but the country is entitled to know the secrets of stock juggling, of manipulation and financial crookedness, the methods pursued to accomplish the desired ends by these manipulators, and has the right to insist that these public enemies be prosecuted for their crime.

Mr. Speaker, I confess to certain old-fashioned notions of honesty and to the inability to comprehend some of the fine distinctions sometimes drawn.

It has always been my belief that if the man who steals a measly calf is a thief and should be sent to the penitentiary, then the man who takes advantage of his position to rob a bank, plunder an insurance company, or manipulate a stock-juggling scheme, is a much greater criminal, and his punishment should be in proportion to the crime committed. [Applause.]

Not every man who violates the law is a criminal. Some violate the law through ignorance, some because of misfortune beyond their control, some for one reason, and some for another; but the individual who engages in the game of high finance goes into it with his eyes open and with the deliberate intention of fleecing the public, and it is for the purpose of calling the attention of the House in particular and the country in general to some of the disclosures of the recent Money-Trust investigation, and to urge its immediate continuance that I have sought this opportunity to present a short statement of its work.

THE STOCK EXCHANGE.

The present New York Stock Exchange was organized in 1869. Its business has grown from a gross sale of 75,000,000 shares of stock and $413,000,000 of bonds in 1879 to 129,324,169 shares of stock and $664,942,420 of bonds in 1912, with loans frequently aggregating in excess of $50,000,000 in a single day.

When the present exchange was first organized a seat was valued at from thirteen to fifteen thousand dollars, but with the increase of business and the added importance of the exchange, the value of a membership increased until it reached the high-water mark at $95,000, with the membership limited to 1,100 members. The only method of obtaining a seat is by purchasing from a member or acquiring a vacancy, and in addition to this the applicant must be elected to membership by the assent of two-thirds of the members, pay an initiation fee of $2,000, and agree to pay dues of $100 per year.

The rules of the exchange arbitrarily require both the buyer and seller to pay the broker's commission of one-eighth of 1 per cent on each $100 of face value of stock, regardless of the actual value, and gives exchange members preference in the payment of debts in case such broker becomes insolvent.

Let us suppose that John Smith sends $1,000 to his broker in New York to invest in stocks selling at 10 cents on the dollar. The order is executed, and Smith, as well as the seller of the stock, must each pay a broker's commission, not upon the $1,000 invested, but upon the $10,000 face value of the stock. The rule also provides that if the broker for either the seller or purchaser should charge less than this amount of commission, for the first offense he is suspended from his privileges for from one to five years, and for the second offense is completely barred and his seat confiscated, and all this notwithstanding the fact that the rule absolutely prohibits all competition between the members of the exchange.

Suppose, again, that the broker who executes Smith's order receives instructions from his client to place the stock in his vault and hold it until it advances to 25 and then to sell, and suppose in the meantime the broker should have need of ready money, the rules of the exchange permit him to take the stock of his client, Smith, hypothecate it without Smith's knowledge or consent, use the money thus borrowed for any purpose he may desire, and if in the meantime the broker should become a bankrupt the equity in the stock after the payment of the loan, together with the value of the brokers' seat on the exchange, may all be expended and used for the payment of debts due to his fellow brokers before the actual owner of the stock or any other creditor gets a single cent.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. NEELEY. Yes.

Mr. SHERLEY. In the case which the gentleman has cited, is the purchase of the stock an outright purchase or a marginal purchase?

Mr. NEELEY. It is an outright purchase.

Mr. SHERLEY. Does the gentleman understand that in all outright purchases of stock the purchaser has the right to the delivery of the stock from the broker and usually it is delivered?

Mr. NEELEY. Not in the case I have supposed; I have supposed an entirely different situation.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Speaker——

Mr. NEELEY. Mr. Speaker, I decline to yield further.

Mr. SHERLEY. All right.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman declines to yield further.

Mr. BURKE of Pennsylvania. Even though it were a marginal purchase, does not the purchaser have the right to designate the bank to which the securities may be sent, and it is taken out of the control of the broker, and is it not entirely optional with the purchaser of the stock whether or not the broker shall have control over it from that time?

Mr. NEELEY. When a contract is made the parties thereto have the right to designate any kind of terms they care to make, but I am supposing it a case where the stock is left with instructions to sell at a certain price. I decline to yield further.

Mr. HARDY. Will the gentleman yield for just one question?

Mr. NEELEY. I do.

Mr. HARDY. I understand the proposition of the gentleman from Kansas to be a case where the purchaser leaves the stock with the broker voluntarily as a trust——

Mr. NEELEY. That is the proposition, exactly.

Mr. HARDY. The stock directed by the owner to be held until it reaches a certain price and then sold?

Mr. NEELEY. Yes.

Mr. HARDY. Now, notwithstanding the rule of this exchange allowing the broker to hypothecate this stock, would that obviate his actual violation of the statute against embezzlement in the State of New York in case he did do so?

Mr. NEELEY. I did not understand from the statement of one of the witnesses that there was any statute in the State of New York that applied to this particular instance.

Mr. HARDY. In the State of the gentleman and my State and other States it would be a plain case of embezzlement.

Mr. NEELEY. I do not know what the law of the gentleman's State is, but I apprehend what it will be in my State. We have no such exchange in Kansas, and therefore we are free from any such influence.

Mr. HARDY. The gentleman thinks the law in New York would not apply to such a case?

Mr. NEELEY. I think there is a woeful absence of law on this subject; in fact, I know that to be true.

Mr. BURKE of Pennsylvania. I am very glad to hear the gentleman's statement. Does the gentleman make that statement as a fact, that the rehypothecation of such securities or their misuse or embezzlement is not punishable by the statutes of New York?

Mr. NEELEY. I have stated that there is no offense committed. I can not state any supposed case.

Mr. TALCOTT of New York. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. NEELEY. I do.

Mr. TALCOTT of New York. Does the gentleman refer in his remarks to the pages of the testimony taken?

Mr. NEELEY. No; I think the gentleman appreciates the fact that in a speech of this kind it will be practically impossible to include matters of that kind.

No stock may be sold on the exchange until it is passed by the stock-list committee, which committee has, and frequently uses, arbitrary power in granting or denying listing privileges, and from whose action there is no legal redress, no matter how grievous the wrong. This committee also has the power to direct that any security be immediately stricken from the stock list and further dealings prohibited, and for wrongful action in so doing there is no legal redress. These provisions are frequently used by the owners of the bulk of stock to squeeze out minority stockholders, as instanced in the organization of the Tobacco Trust by the consolidation of the American Tobacco Co. and the Continental Tobacco Co. under the name of the Consolidated Tobacco Co. The Consolidated agreed to pay 25 per cent of the value of the 30,000,000 shares of the two old concerns at 200 and par, respectively, and the exchange of stock proceeded until the trust had acquired all but 11,500 shares of the stock of the old American company, when Thomas F. Ryan demanded that the stock be stricken from the list. His demand was acquiesced in and the value of the entire list practically destroyed. The same thing took place in the organization of the Southern Railway Co. by J. P. Morgan & Co., when certificates representing over 183,000 shares whose holders were unwilling to resign their voting power were summarily removed from the stock list, taken from the market, and practically the entire value destroyed, all without right of review by a court of competent jurisdiction and without any justification except that the reorganization had secured complete control and might, with the acquiescence of the exchange, do as they pleased in the matter.

The New York Exchange also controls the New York Telephone Co., and prohibits any other service to its membership. If any member of the exchange has any communication of any kind by telephone, telegraph, letter, or messenger, or otherwise, with any member of either of the other two exchanges located in New York City, it is presumed they discussed business matters, and for the first offense such member is fined $5,000; for any subsequent offense his seat, valued at $52,000, is confiscated and he is barred from the exchange. No stock listed on either the Consolidated or the Produce Exchange may be sold on the New York Exchange. No member of either of these exchanges may become a member of this exchange, and no member of this exchange may accept a commission or engage in any kind of business with or for the members of either of the other two exchanges.

THE CALIFORNIA PETROLEUM CO.

The methods pursued by the California Petroleum Co. appear to be fairly typical of general stock-exchange manipulations.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Before the gentleman leaves that point, I would like to ask him a question.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Kansas yield to his colleague?

Mr. NEELEY. I yield.

Mr. CAMPBELL. May or may not a man belong to or hold membership in more than one of the exchanges?

Mr. NEELEY. He may not.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I have an entirely different understanding from that.

Mr. NEELEY. That is a fact, according to the admission of the president of the New York Stock Exchange under oath.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Of the New York Stock Exchange?

Mr. NEELEY. Yes.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I think I had a man on the stand here some time ago, before a committee of the House, a man who was a member both of the New York Exchange and of the stock exchange.

Mr. NEELEY. That may have been true at one time, but it is not true now.

This concern was organized in May, 1912, as a holding and not an operating company, to hold the stocks of the American Petroleum Co. and the American Oil Fields Co., both California corporations, limiting their activities entirely to that State. Neither of these concerns nor its subsidiaries owned or controlled any pipe lines or refineries, or sold or refined oil, and the prospectus and other literature presented to the committee, together with the evidence, clearly indicated that the assets consisted principally of "wildcat" and other undeveloped properties, and that its promotion was purely a speculative venture.

The authorized capital stock of the petroleum company was $35,000,000, of which $17,500,000 was preferred stock and an equal amount common stock. Of this $12,500,000 of the preferred stock and $15,000,000 of the common stock was immediately issued and a campaign planned to place it on the market. On the 21st of September a promoting syndicate was formed, composed of Lewisohn Bros., William Solomon & Co., and Hallgarten & Co., to unload as much of the stock as possible on the New York Exchange, the balance to be disposed of in London and Paris. This syndicate acquired five millions of preferred and two and one-half millions of common stock in their first deal, and succeeded so well that they subsequently acquired five millions of each the preferred and common stock, making a total of seventeen and one-half millions unloaded there.

The stock of this concern was listed on the exchange on the 3d of October, and being an unknown oil proposition had practically no value whatever. It was agreed among the members of the syndicate that all persons connected therewith were to remain undisclosed except Lewisohn Bros., who manipulated the campaign on the exchange.

They immediately secured the services of a number of stock brokers and began a system of bogus sales back and forth to create an appearance of activity and attract the attention of purchasers, having at one time 19 different brokerage firms thus engaged.

When the operations began they listed 105,779 shares of this stock, and so successful were their manipulations that when the campaign closed on the 27th of October, 1912, 362,270 shares of this unknown stock had been traded in during the three weeks of manufactured activity and the entire capital stock of the concern had been bought and sold nearly three and a half times over, thereby permitting the promoters to escape with between seven and eight million dollars of profits.

Our committee found that—

The contention of the New York Stock Exchange that it is not engaged in business and that its sole function is to supply a meeting place where its members may deal with one another under prescribed rules is not borne out by the facts, as hereinbefore stated.

It is the market place of the entire country and of foreign countries for securities and the only public market in the United States where money is loaned and borrowed.

The business transacted by its members comes to them from almost every corner of the civilized world. Its hall mark as to the genuineness of a certificate of interest in a corporation passes current everywhere and is rightly supervised with jealous care and at considerable expense to the corporations concerned.

The committee further found that—

It has appeared that sales of stocks on the New York Stock Exchange average $15,500,000,000 annually.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Kansas yield to the gentleman from Kentucky?

Mr. NEELEY. I do.

Mr. SHERLEY. What action, may I ask the gentleman, was taken by the stock exchange touching this petroleum company that the gentleman speaks of? Were those "wash" sales discovered by the exchange, and was any action taken to deny to the stock the privilege of the exchange?

Mr. NEELEY. No; and the stocks are still being dealt in.

Mr. SHERLEY. And the gentleman says there is proof that they were "wash" sales, pure and simple. Was that admitted, or is it a matter of controversy?

Mr. NEELEY. The facts were admitted by Mr. Fred Lewisohn, a member of the firm. He admitted on the stand that, by reason of manipulation, they forced the price from practically nothing to 111½ and made a profit of between seven and eight million dollars.

Mr. SHERLEY. I have no controversy with the gentleman from Kansas, but I am trying to get at the facts that are agreed facts.

Mr. NEELEY. That is what I say.

Mr. SHERLEY. That they were "wash" sales, and that that was the price at which the stock was unloaded on the public?

Mr. NEELEY. Of course, if they had all been "wash" sales, they could not have unloaded it. What I meant to say by "wash" sales was that they gave to the stock the appearance of genuine commercial activity, and were thereby enabled to attract actual purchasers to unload the stock, and that as a result they made somewhere between seven and eight million dollars thereby.

Mr. SHERLEY. The gentleman says they unloaded the stock by creating a fictitious market for it by "wash" sales?

Mr. NEELEY. That is the fact.

Mr. SHERLEY. Were the stock-exchange officials cognizant of this fact?

Mr. NEELEY. I am not certain that there is any evidence of that fact.

Mr. SHERLEY. The reason I am asking the question is that I am trying to see where the fault lay, if there was any fault, and what the remedy is.

Mr. NEELEY. The stock-exchange officials admitted on the stand that they knew there was a very unusual activity in this stock, and from their experience of many years in this kind of business they assumed there was a reason for it.

Mr. SHERLEY. One other question: Is there not a rule of the stock exchange touching "wash" sales, and are not the members prohibited from making such sales, and are not the parties guilty of making such sales subject to action by the exchange?

Mr. NEELEY. Yes; there is a rule against it; but the investigation disclosed that the violation of the rule has been winked at, and that the rule has not been enforced.

Mr. BURKE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Kansas yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

Mr. NEELEY. I do.

Mr. BURKE of Pennsylvania. Do I understand there were practically no actual sales of this stock?

Mr. NEELEY. No. In the beginning, when they were building up a market, practically all the sales were bogus, but later investors were attracted by the unusual activity.

Mr. BURKE of Pennsylvania. Was not the matter of the "wash" sales brought to the attention of the exchange? Or was the evidence not disclosed until it was disclosed for the first time by Mr. Untermyer?

Mr. NEELEY. It was shown that these things were openly and notoriously done, and the stock exchange made no endeavor to prevent it.

Mr. BURKE of Pennsylvania. Then it was a matter of general public knowledge?

Mr. NEELEY. Yes.

Mr. BURKE of Pennsylvania. And in the face of that public knowledge of the facts the public came in and with its eyes open bought that stock and was victimized?

Mr. NEELEY. I say it was well known in the sense that it was well known to the members of the exchange. But the average man who purchases a speculative stock on the exchange may safely be assumed to have little general knowledge of such facts although he possesses the desire to get rich as quick as he can, and that is the reason why they get so many lambs and shear them so clean.

Mr. BUCHANAN of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. NEELEY. With pleasure.

Mr. BUCHANAN of Illinois. Is it not a fact that the evidence of the officials of the New York Stock Exchange bears out what the gentleman states there?

Mr. NEELEY. Absolutely. I do not make any statement here relative to this matter that is not borne out by the records and sworn testimony.

Mr. BUCHANAN of Illinois. Therefore it is clear that the officials of the stock exchange knew that these "wash" sales were made, and consequently it was not necessary for anybody to bring it to their attention, because they already knew it was being done?

Mr. NEELEY. Yes.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Kansas yield to the gentleman from Wyoming?

Mr. NEELEY. I will yield to the gentleman for a question.

Mr. MONDELL. Did the gentleman from Kansas follow the history of these oil stocks to which he has referred, so that he knows what the final outcome was?

Mr. NEELEY. At this time?

Mr. MONDELL. Yes.

Mr. NEELEY. Not since the investigation closed, except what I have read in the newspapers.

Mr. MONDELL. The query was whether it was developed that there was any real value or any considerable value.

Mr. NEELEY. I understand that the price has been very considerably depressed since this disclosure was made.

Mr. BURKE of Pennsylvania. The gentleman never knew of an oil stock, of a new company especially, that did not have attached to it a speculative value, involving the possibility of very large profits or unusual losses.

Mr. NEELEY. That is exactly my statement; that it was a speculative venture.

Mr. BURKE of Pennsylvania. And the gentlemen who engaged in it undoubtedly knew that fact in dealing with these stocks. Is not that true?

Mr. NEELEY. I decline to yield further, Mr. Speaker.

The committee further found that—

It has appeared that sales of stocks on the New York Stock Exchange average $15,500,000,000 annually; that whilst another part represents wholesome speculation, a far greater part represents speculation indistinguishable in effect from wagering and more hurtful than lotteries or gambling at the race track or the roulette table because practiced on a vastly wider scale and withdrawing from productive industry vastly more capital; that as an adjunct of such speculation quotations of securities are manipulated without regard to real values, and false appearances of demand or supply are created, and this not only without hindrance from but with the approval of the authorities of the exchange, provided only the transactions are not purely fictitious.

In other words, the facilities of the New York Stock Exchange are employed largely for transactions producing moral and economic waste and corruption, and it is fair to assume that in lesser and varying degrees this is true or may come to be true of other institutions throughout the country similarly organized and conducted.

The committee accordingly recommended the enactment of legislation by Congress requiring the incorporation of every stock exchange under the laws of the State or Territory where located under such regulations as would be approved by the Postmaster General; that before any security would be listed, quoted, or dealt in on the exchange the corporation seeking to sell should expose the value of its assets, together with its liabilities, obligations, and net earnings year by year for at least three years next preceding the filing of such statement; should file a copy of every contract and agreement for the disposition of such stocks, together with a statement of the fees, profits, charges, commissions, and so forth, to be paid, and make a detailed statement of the business of such corporation at least once a year both to the secretary of the exchange and the Postmaster General.

It is further recommended that stocks listed, quoted, or dealt in on the exchange should not be stricken from the stock list without notice, and that such actions should be reviewable by a court of competent jurisdiction; that all manipulations of securities and fictitious purchases and sales should be prohibited; that members of the exchange be prohibited from hypothecating the securities of their customers in excess of the amount owed them or from lending securities pledged with them, and that they be required to keep full and accurate books of account of transactions on the exchange, which books should be open to inspection; that no order for the purchase of stock should be executed until 20 per cent of the value thereof be paid in cash; that no security be listed, quoted, or dealt in unless the charter or by-laws of the corporation contain express prohibition against the sale of same by any officer or director of which he is not the owner, and authorizing the Postmaster General to withhold the privileges of the mails from any exchange failing to comply with these provisions.

The committee further recommended that violation of these provisions be punished by fine and imprisonment; that telegraph and telephone companies be made amenable to the law and criminally liable in the same manner; and on the 17th of April I accordingly introduced H. R. 2971, recommended by the committee to correct the abuses. If these recommendations are adopted by Congress, the stock exchange will become a market instead of a shearing pen, and the man who makes a purchase of stock, bonds, or commodities on that market will do so with his eyes open and with a means of obtaining accurate information disclosing the condition of the affairs of the concerns in question, while the man who makes false representations will be prosecuted the same as in any confidence game.

THE CLEARING HOUSE.

The New York Clearing House was organized in 1853, with a total membership of 52, and has therefore been in existence about 60 years. Its average daily clearances have mounted from nineteen million to three hundred and five million, a net increase of over fifteen times the amount of its clearances for the first year.

During the same time the population of New York City has increased from 700,000 to 5,000,000; the assessed valuation of its property has mounted to the stupendous sum of $8,216,600,000; yet, notwithstanding this unparalleled increase of business, population, and wealth, the New York Clearing House Association actually has two less members than it had when it was first organized.

No bank belonging to this association may clear with any bank not a member unless such nonclearing bank consents to all the terms of the contract to which the member bank agrees, including the right of inspection of its assets. No bank may become a member of this association until three-fourths of its membership consents thereto, until its officers agree in writing to abide by all the rules and regulations then in force or that may thereafter be adopted, pay an initiation fee of from $5,000 to $7,500, and agree to pay annual dues amounting to $5,000.

Our committee found that the average daily out-of-town clearances of this association for the year 1899 was approximately $55,000,000, and that of this amount the association had levied a collection charge averaging one-seventh of 1 per cent and producing a daily revenue of $78,500, or a little more than $23,500,000 annually, counting 300 business days as a year, every dollar of which was collected from the commerce of the country, notwithstanding the provisions of the Sherman antitrust law that—

Every contract, combination in the form of trust or otherwise, or conspiracy in restraint of trade or commerce among the several States or with foreign nations is hereby declared to be illegal.

An example of clearing-house methods may be found in the case of the Oriental Bank. This bank had a capital of $750,000, was organized in 1853, and was one of the charter members of the clearing-house association. Its president was Richard W. Jones, jr., formerly of the American National Bank, of Kansas City, and who had put all of his western energy and force into the business, with the result that the deposits were increased to ten and a half million dollars; the bank accumulated a cash surplus of $1,200,000, its stock was worth $275 per share, and it was paying its stockholders an annual dividend of 12 per cent.

The Oriental cleared for three nonmember banks—the Brooklyn Bank and the Borough Bank, both of Brooklyn, and the Chelsea Bank, of New York City—and was rapidly forging to the front when the president, Jones, was notified to discontinue clearing for the two Brooklyn banks. He protested that these institutions carried large deposits with his bank, and that to immediately deprive them of clearing privileges would result in the prompt withdrawal of these balances; that since the rules of the association required that his bank guarantee the items passed for clearance a committee be appointed to examine his bank and determine whether or not they were able to comply with the rules of the association. This committee consisted of Mr. Wiggins, vice president of the Chase National Bank; Mr. McGarrah, president of the Mechanics and Metals Bank; and Mr. Porter, president of the Chemical Bank, now a partner in J. P. Morgan & Co. This committee began its work at the close of the day's business, and by 3 o'clock the next morning had finished its task, when they presented a bill of $27,000 for their 12 hours' work, which was promptly paid. They reported that the bank was sound and solvent and in good condition; that it was doing a legitimate business; was being neither used nor abused by anyone, but required that it discontinue its clearing relations with the two Brooklyn banks. The result was that the Brooklyn Bank and the Borough Bank promptly closed their doors.

The story of duplicity in connection with the Oriental Bank is best told by an open letter issued to its depositors and stockholders by the board of directors, in part as follows:

On November 27 last the operations of certain Brooklyn financiers were the subject of investigation by the district attorney of Brooklyn, who requested the attendance of President Jones, of the Oriental Bank, as a witness in the matter. Mr. Jones was ill at his home with pneumonia and could not respond. A story was at once manufactured and spread that he was shamming illness, and this was quickly followed by a rumor that he was in danger of indictment. It has since transpired that he was never in the position of an alleged criminal facing indictment, but that he was simply required as a witness. His testimony was afterwards taken while he was lying upon his bed during his recovery, and nothing has been heard of the matter since.

In the meantime a number of gentlemen of high place in financial affairs had sat in judgment upon him, their fellow member, and concluded their deliberations with the following sentence, viz: That the board of directors of the Oriental Bank must meet at once, accept Mr. Jones's resignation of the presidency, and elect another president in his place.

Thus, in a moment, without excuse other than the statement without foundation in fact, that Mr. Jones was either already indicted or would be indicted that day, was a fair reputation blasted, and the work of a lifetime of energy, application, and honest dealing destroyed. Mr. Jones, in obedience to the demand, resigned, and Mr. Hugh Kelly was elected in his place. Mr. Kelly, who had returned from Europe only two days previously, sought a hearing before the gentlemen who had thus condemned Mr. Jones and with a committee of three directors of the Oriental Bank protested with energy against the summary treatment which it was proposed to measure out to their colleague while he was ill and unable to defend himself. This protest being of no avail, Mr. Kelly demanded to know how far he could rely upon the protection and aid of the clearing house if he accepted the presidency, and was told in unqualified terms that he and the bank would be protected to the end of the trouble. Under no other circumstances would he have accepted the office, which he did without salary and with no hope of reward other than the satisfaction to himself and his fellow directors of safeguarding the depositors of the bank. How the pledge given at that time has been carried out is easily told by the bank's suspension two months later, on January 31, while in a condition of absolute solvency. Its assets had been minutely examined on December 31 and were marked down in a manner probably unparalleled in banking history in New York. The book value of its stock was voluntarily marked off from 270 per cent to 207 per cent, in the effort to make it superlatively clean. If the banking department of the State of New York were permitted to speak publicly on matters of this kind it could tell you how courageously and how honestly this process was carried out. From November 27 onward its business was conducted conservatively, and more or less under the advice of influential members of the clearing house, who actually pronounced the "Oriental now as safe as the Chemical."

Then, without previous warning or discussion of the subject with the officers of the Oriental, came the demand, publicly announced, for the retirement of the outstanding clearing-house certificates before February 6. In previous periods of financial uneasiness certificates had been permitted to run for six months or more. In this instance the larger institutions had recovered their deposits and their equilibrium in a shorter term, and then the situation resolved itself into a case of "the divil take the hindermost." The fatal blow had been struck at the Oriental, and the run, both over the counter and through the exchanges, which followed compelled the closing of its doors. Subsequent events prove the monstrous injustice that was done to it and to its president personally. The latter was made use of to satisfy a condition that threatened not merely the Oriental, but every clearing-house bank in New York at the time. When that condition was past the engagements made with him were forgotten.

Within 10 days of the closing of the bank the depositors have been provided for and paid and its clearing-house loan certificates retired, all by its own resources. Thus is its solvency proven. The only ones now concerned with its affairs are its stockholders, and they alone suffer the consequences of its treatment at the hands of those whose care it should have been to protect it for their own sakes. From this time forward it is only a memory among New York banks, but its honorable record of 55 years entitled it to this eulogy.

Mr. MURDOCK. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. NEELEY. I yield to my colleague.

Mr. MURDOCK. The gentleman has made the rather astonishing statement—astonishing to me, at least—that three men examined the bank between the hours of 3 in the afternoon and 3 in the morning, and that they made a charge of $27,000, or $9,000 apiece. Did I understand him correctly?

Mr. NEELEY. That is the amount, but not the division. My recollection is that the chairman of that committee got $12,000, and the other two gentlemen divided the balance.

Mr. MURDOCK. Did anything come out in the testimony which would offer anything to satisfy your mind as to the warrant they had for making that sort of a charge?

Mr. NEELEY. Nothing, except that they presented a bill for their services, representing the association, and got the money.

Mr. MURDOCK. You said it was promptly paid.

Mr. NEELEY. Yes.

Mr. MURDOCK. Paid by whom?

Mr. NEELEY. By the bank.

Mr. MURDOCK. Out of the funds of the bank?

Mr. NEELEY. Out of the funds of the bank.

Mr. MURDOCK. Was it paid to these men as individuals or as representatives of the association?

Mr. NEELEY. I do not know. It was paid to them for their services.

Mr. MURDOCK. Does the gentleman know who got that exorbitant sum?

Mr. NEELEY. The testimony was that the three gentlemen got it.

Mr. MURDOCK. Personally?

Mr. NEELEY. They got it. You can call it personally, or anything else.

Mr. MURDOCK. Did they get it in such a manner that they could deposit it to their own personal credit?

Mr. NEELEY. I am not advised on that, but certainly assume as much.

Mr. BURKE of Pennsylvania. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. NEELEY. On condition that I get more time. A considerable part of my time has been occupied in answering questions.

Mr. BURKE of Pennsylvania. I am very much interested in the discussion. I wish to ask the gentleman if the clearing-house certificates to which the gentleman refers had not all been gathered in except those issued through the Oriental Bank?

Mr. NEELEY. I do not know that I understand exactly what the gentleman means.

Mr. BURKE of Pennsylvania. As I understand, one of the reasons why the Oriental Bank failed was that it was called upon peremptorily to redeem these clearing-house certificates, which ordinarily run for the period of six months, and that by reason of this peremptory order the bank really was compelled to close its doors.

Mr. NEELEY. That is a part of the reason. They were singled out, and the demand was made against them while the market was in such a condition that no bank could liquidate at that time. The officers of the Oriental Bank took the position that they were used as a scapegoat to save other banking institutions; that somebody had to pay the penalty of bankruptcy and they were selected as the ones to be put out of business.

Mr. BURKE of Pennsylvania. That is what I want to get at. Now, had not the clearing-house certificates issued to other banks all been retired except in this case?

Mr. NEELEY. Not by any means. The City National Bank and other banks had large sums of these certificates, large amounts of which were still outstanding.

In liquidating the affairs of the Oriental it became necessary to make a contract with the Metropolitan Trust Co. to take over the assets of this concern and pay the depositors in cash, without waiting to wind up the receivership. For this service they paid the Metropolitan Trust Co. $200,000 in cash. They paid all of the expenses of the receivership, amounting to $245,000 more—a total of $445,000. They have since paid stockholders dividends amounting to 37½ per cent, and had on hand at the time the investigation was conducted over $1,500,000 of assets left untouched, showing that at the time the bank was forced out of business by the gang of Shylocks who wrecked it that it actually had in its hands assets that have since paid more than 200 per cent at forced sale.

But this was not the tragic part of the story. Not only did they wreck the Brooklyn Bank and the Borough Bank, bankrupt Jones, and plunder the Oriental, but they blasted the reputation of Kelley, chairman of the board of directors, broke his heart, and he died in less than a year.

Mr. Speaker, this is only one of the many instances that could be given. One hundred and ten banks and trust companies have been bought out, consolidated, or forced to the wall in New York City in the last 10 years by this gang of financial pirates, who have sought the complete domination of the commercial interests of this country for their own aggrandizement.

So well have they succeeded that to-day 180 men hold 385 directorships in 41 banks and trust companies having total resources of $3,832,000,000 and total deposits of $2,834,000,000; 50 directorships in 11 insurance companies have total assets of $2,646,000,000; 155 directorships in 31 railroad systems have a total capitalization of $12,193,000,000 and a total mileage of 163,200; 6 directorships in 2 express companies and 4 directorships in 1 steamship company have a combined capitalization of $245,000,000 and a gross annual income of $97,000,000.

These same men hold 98 directorships in 28 producing and trading corporations having a total capitalization of $3,583,000,000 and total gross annual earnings in excess of $1,145,000,000; 48 directorships in 19 public utilities corporations have a total capitalization of $2,826,000,000 and total gross annual earnings of excess of $470,000,000. In all, these 180 men hold 746 directorships in 134 corporations, having total resources or capitalization of $25,325,000,000, and at the top of this financial heap were three supreme overshadowing and directing forces in control of the financial policy of the United States, J. P. Morgan, George F. Baker, and James Stillman, having under their immediate and actual control more than nine times all the wealth located within the boundaries of the great State of Kansas, and constituting one-fifth the total wealth in the Federal Union.

Since the filing of this report Mr. Morgan has died, but under the system he so ably built and developed, his successor had long since been named and the work of accumulation and concentration goes merrily on.

THE COMMITTEE'S PROPOSAL.

The committee believe that no national bank should become a member of any clearing-house association until such association becomes a body corporate; that membership in such association be limited to incorporated banks and trust companies; and that any solvent bank or trust company doing business within the prescribed boundaries of the association and having a capital stock not less than that of a national bank in the same locality, should become a member thereof upon payment of reasonable fees and compliance with reasonable regulations; that no member be suspended or expelled without the approval in writing of the superintendent of banks or other like official in the State where the association is organized, or of the Comptroller of the Currency if the member be a national bank; and that the courts have the right of review for unjust or arbitrary action by such association.

It recommended that clearing-house associations be authorized to issue emergency currency for use among its members only, in the payment of debit and credit balances only, on condition that it be the joint and several obligation of the association and redeemable on due notice and approval of the Comptroller of the Currency or the superintendent of banks, as the case may be, and that the charter or articles of corporation or law under which the clearing house is organized provide for the voluntary resignation or withdrawal of such member, subject also to judicial review; and that the association be prohibited from dictating to member banks the manner in which the business of such banks should be conducted, together with the charge or collection fee, commission, or other compensation for the collection of drafts, checks, notes, and so forth, as well as the regulation of interest, discounts, or rates of exchange, and that examination of books of account of any member of such association be made by the Comptroller of the Currency or the State banking department.

The committee also recommended that banks be prohibited from lending money or credit to or for persons or corporations for use in connection with or aid in participating in any combination, conspiracy, trust, agreement, contract, or understanding to affect the price or supply of any commodity or article of commerce, and that they be prohibited from lending money on securities issued in pursuance thereof. It recommended that minority stockholders be represented on boards of directors, three-fourths of whom must have resided in the State for at least one year preceding their election and must own the stock in their own names and right; that loans on the signature or indorsement of bank officers or of any partnership or corporation of which such officer is a member be limited to 10 per cent of the capital stock; and that officers and directors of banks be precluded from guaranteeing or underwriting securities and prohibited from engaging in promotion schemes. In accordance with these recommendations, on the 21st of last April I introduced H. R. 3397, designed to correct these evils.

In many respects the stock exchange and clearing house are similar. They are both unincorporated, are controlled by the same men, prohibit competition among their members and foster concentration in every possible manner, deny that the Legislature of the State of New York and the Congress of the United States have any right to either regulate or control them, and deny that any court in the land, State or Federal, has the power to either restrain or punish them for any of their acts, no matter how arbitrary or wrongful they may be.

On the 10th instant the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HINEBAUGH] introduced a resolution providing for an investigation of the recent Frisco receivership. This resolution requested the appointment of a committee to conduct such investigation and report the facts and their conclusions to the House, all of which is entirely unnecessary.

Beginning on page 148 of the Money Trust report is a discussion of the plan pursued in such cases in the following language:

SECTION 11. RAILWAY REORGANIZATIONS AS AN INSTRUMENT OF CONCENTRATION.

Our archaic, extravagant, and utterly indefensible procedure for the reorganization of insolvent railroads has furnished these banking groups the opportunities, of which they have not been slow to avail themselves, of securing the dominating relation that they now hold to many of our leading railroad systems. At one time or another within the past 30 years the bulk of our railways have gone through insolvency and receivership. The proceedings are sometimes instigated by the management through a friendly creditor—and are then generally collusive in their inception—or through the trustee for bondholders with the cooperation of the company. The railway company admits its insolvency, consents to the receivership, and one or more of the officers under whose administration insolvency was brought about, or their nominees, is made a receiver, and sometimes the sole receiver. Neither creditors nor stockholders, who are the parties really interested, are notified or have an opportunity to be heard either on the question of insolvency or of the personnel of the receivers. The stage has been set in advance, and so we find that simultaneously with the appointment of the receivers, or perhaps before, a self-constituted committee is announced, frequently consisting of men well known in the financial world, most of whom have no interest in the property, selected by a leading banking house. They invite the deposit of securities for mutual protection.

This committee in due course presents a plan for the reorganization of the property. If the security holders do not like it, their only alternative is to form another committee, if they can arrange to combine their scattered forces and find influential men who have the courage to oppose the banking house and who can finance the cash requirements of these colossal transactions in hostility to the banking house that was first in the field. It is not easy to find such men. It is becoming daily more difficult, and it is well-nigh impossible to find rival banking houses to lead the opposition.

The usual outcome has been that the defenseless security holders take whatever plan is offered, however unjust, as against the alternative of being entirely wiped out through the sale of the property under foreclosure. There have been rare exceptions before the power of these banking houses became irresistible, when the security holders have wrung concessions through revolt.

* * * * * * *

During all this time the property is in the possession of the court through the receivers. The reorganization proceedings are purely extrajudicial. The court has nothing to do with them. Meantime the court authorizes the receivers to borrow money for all sorts of purposes and to issue receivers' certificates, which are usually negotiated through the committee or its bankers, who have in the interim gathered in the bonds and stock of the security holders, who have nowhere else to go.

Generally, after years of delay, the property is put through the form of a sale, but there is no bid except that of the committee, which pays by surrendering deposited securities. If a security holder has failed to deposit with the committee, he gets nothing or whatever pittance may represent his infinitesimal share of the upset or minimum price fixed by the court. The cost to the security holders of the proceeding in any of the cases named is estimated to be anywhere between $500,000 and $1,000,000 for receivers, bankers, committee fees, lawyers, etc.

Nowhere is any protection offered to the security holder against oppression or injustice in the plan or its execution or otherwise. No constituted authority supervises the vast expenses he is required to pay. The bankers and the committee are made the sole judges on that and on every other conceivable question, including their own commissions and charges and those of the committee. The court has nothing to do with the arrangement and is powerless to control it.

Our committee recommended a plan to forever put an end to such transactions in the following language:

Enact the procedure provided under the "Companies Acts of Great Britain," whereby the plan on reorganization is placed under the direction and control of the courts. If the plan is just and receives the consent of three-fourths of each class of security holders, it becomes binding on the others. If it is unjust, a single share can defeat it. No foreclosure or pretended sale is necessary. The years of delay that disgrace our administration of these properties by the courts is unknown. The receivers instead of being selected, as is usually the case with us, by a combination of the choice of the discredited management and nominee of the court, in which real owners of the property have no voice, is selected under the English law by the votes of those interested in the property. If they fail to agree, the official receiver acts at a comparatively nominal cost. No sale of the property is involved. The reorganization is accomplished without it. Six months is the average duration of such a proceeding in England, and the cost is well below 10 per cent of what it is with us. The owners of the property get back their property, and with it their right to control it, and no voting trusts are found necessary.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. CULLOP). The time of the gentleman from Kansas has expired.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman may be allowed to conclude his speech.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Tennessee asks unanimous consent that the gentleman from Kansas may conclude his speech. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

THE BANKS OBJECT.

Mr. NEELEY. Our committee had hardly begun its work when it was confronted with a woeful lack of power. We found that stock-juggling operations were invariably conducted through some private, State, or National bank or trust company. The Morgan bank was a private concern, and therefore not subject to either State or National examination. The Comptroller of the Currency hesitated when requested to disclose information of monumental stock-jobbing operations conducted through national banks, and referred the matter to President Taft. President Taft directed the Attorney General to prepare an opinion on the question of whether or not the Comptroller of the Currency could grant the committee the privileges desired. After repeated endeavors to secure an opinion from the Attorney General, Mr. Wickersham finally decided against us and our request was denied.

The committee thereupon reported H. R. 24153, designed to amend the law so as to confer authority upon a committee of either House of Congress to exercise visitorial powers with regard to national banks. This bill was reported for passage on the 17th of May, 1912, under a special rule giving it precedence over other legislation.

It was forthwith taken up, unanimously passed by the House, and sent to the Senate, where it was referred to the Finance Committee, whose chairman was Senator PENROSE, of Pennsylvania. PENROSE was away from Washington campaigning in behalf of President Taft, and Senator Bailey, of Texas, smeared with the smell of Standard Oil from his head to his heels, was the ranking Democratic member. Bailey was opposed to the bill and did everything in his power to defeat it, with the result that we were unable to get it favorably reported by the committee, although finally an adverse report was made, which gave Senator HOKE SMITH, of Georgia, an opportunity to file a minority report, thus getting the bill on the Senate calendar.

Congress remained in session until the 24th of August and adjourned. It reconvened December 2 and remained in session until it expired by operation of law on the 4th of last March, having been in session for more than six months after this bill amending the law so as to give the Money Trust committee its earnestly desired and much-needed power was unanimously passed by the House and sent to the Senate, and during all of this time the two Republican United States Senators from Kansas, representing the most enlightened and progressive constituency in the Union, sat silent in their seats and neither raised their hands nor lifted their voices in behalf of this bill, designed to authorize the exposure of the stock-jobbing crookedness of Wall Street and put the gamblers on the rack. [Applause.]

The gentleman from Texas [Mr. HENRY] recently reintroduced this bill, which was referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency. It is highly important that it be immediately reported for passage and pass this House. A Democratic Senate sits at the other end of the Capitol now, and a Democratic President guides the political destiny of the Nation. If reported for passage, it will be promptly passed here, be sent to the Senate and as promptly passed there, be signed by the President, and become a part of the law. Its terms are ample to authorize the most searching inquiry by a committee of either House of Congress, and with the prompt appointment of a new committee determined to expose the crookedness of bank partnerships in stock-jobbing operations an era of individual responsibility will come into existence in this country and the halcyon days of the plunderbund be at an end. [Applause.]

PRINTING THE REPORT.

A resolution was recently offered in this House to print 100,000 copies of the Money Trust report. This was done in response to a demand by the country to know the facts on the people's side of the case. Both J. P. Morgan & Co. and Standard Oil Co. have for years maintained a thoroughly equipped and highly specialized publicity bureau in their New York offices. Manager Kellogg, of the Morgan office, is reputed to receive a salary of $25,000 per year for his services; Manager Clark, of the Standard Oil bureau, is reputed to receive an annual salary of $20,000 for his services; and these two publicity departments have bent every energy to discredit and bring this investigation into disrepute. On the Morgan staff is an attorney of wide and varied experience, whose duty it is to examine articles subsequently distributed for publication in order that this bureau may not subject itself to the liability of prosecution for criminal libel. Articles tending to mold public opinion favorable to the ends of these two great corporations are supplied to newspapers and magazines in various parts of the country, and, in addition thereto, thousands of personal letters are sent out weekly to prominent business and professional men of the country, including Members of this House.

This same organization has printed and sent broadcast to newspapers, magazines, banks, business and professional men throughout the entire United States copies of a letter from Messrs. Morgan & Co. to the money-trust committee, purporting to have been submitted in response to the committee's invitation to present such facts and arguments as they thought germane to the subject matter, but which were not distributed until after the Morgan bureau knew the committee report was printed and it was therefore impossible for the committee to answer their fallacious arguments. This letter contained many statements substantiated by no witness who appeared before the committee, yet 477,000 copies of it were sent broadcast throughout the United States to poison the business public against the honesty and good intentions of this committee in an attempt to bolster up a system that is indefensible. In contrast to this distribution of the Morgan letter we have the fact that Congress has been so parsimonious that it has provided for the printing and distribution of but 10,500 copies of this report, a report that discloses a condition without parallel in the history of the United States.

COST AND BENEFITS.

The objection is frequently made that the investigation cost $57,000 without any appreciable beneficial financial results. The individual who makes that statement certainly does so without an understanding of the facts.

On the 16th of last May the committee began its investigation of the Coffee Trust. It found that in the Province of Sao Paulo, in the Republic of Brazil, was located the coffee production center of the world, producing during the crop season of 1906–7 approximately 14,000,000 bags of coffee; that in 1899 the world's visible supply of coffee was 6,000,000 bags, which gradually increased to 7,000,000 bags in 1900, and by the 1st of January, 1912, amounted to between 13,000,000 and 14,000,000 bags. We found that notwithstanding this constantly increasing supply, the price had steadily advanced from 6½ cents per pound in 1900 to 15½ cents per pound at the time of the hearing, and that on the 3d of October, 1905, a law was enacted by the Province of Sao Paulo authorizing it to enter into an agreement with the Brazilian Government, and other Governments of coffee-producing provinces, for the adoption of measures to assure the valorization of coffee, and that as a result of the enactment of this law in December, 1906, a loan of $5,000,000 was negotiated, due in one year. When this loan became due it was taken up by another loan of $15,000,000, negotiated by Mr. Herman Sielcken, of New York, for J. Henry Schroeder & Co., of London, and the National City Bank, of New York City. Of this amount the London firm advanced $10,000,000 and the New York firm $5,000,000. It was agreed that to enable the parties in interest to manipulate the production and price of coffee that the Province of Sao Paulo should contract with the coffee merchants for not to exceed 500,000 bags of coffee each year, which coffee was stored and manipulated in such way as to produce the desired result.

When the $15,000,000 loan became due the valorization scheme had not yet been consummated, so that the second loan was taken up by another loan of $75,000,000, of which amount the National City Bank, J. P. Morgan & Co., and the First National Bank of New York took $10,000,000, while certain bankers in London and Paris took the balance of the loan. The security for this loan was threefold: First, about 7,000,000 bags of coffee; second, the guaranty of the Government of Sao Paulo; and, third, the guaranty of the Federal Government of Brazil. It was also agreed that the exportation of coffee should not exceed 9,000,000 bags the first year, 9,500,000 bags the second year, and 10,000,000 bags the third year; that the old law providing for the purchase and storage or destruction of the 500,000 bags of coffee per year should remain in full force and effect, and that a law should be passed prohibiting the planting of any more coffee orchards, although they might replace dead coffee trees in orchards already growing.

The 7,000,000 bags of coffee was delivered to a valorization committee consisting of seven members, who were to have the exclusive control of it under the provisions of the contract. The contract provided that the coffee should be taken to New York, London, and Paris and stored in warehouses there, and that the sale should not exceed 500,000 bags the first year, 600,000 the second year, and so on until the entire amount had been disposed of, giving the committee authority, however, to prohibit sales altogether if such course was necessary to accomplish their purpose.

This information was obtained on Thursday, May 16, and on Saturday of the same week the Attorney General of the United States brought a suit in the United States district court in New York City asking for an injunction to restrain the consummation of the valorization scheme, for the reason that it constituted a monopoly in restraint of trade, was in violation of law and in derogation of the rights of the people of the United States. He requested the appointment of a receiver to take charge of the coffee still stored in this country, amounting to some 920,000 bags. A preliminary hearing was had on this application, and, finally, as the result of the information gained in this investigation, the 920,000 bags of coffee have been forced on the market, resulting in a market decline in the price of coffee of 2¾ cents per pound.

Mr. AUSTIN. May I ask the gentleman a question right there?

Mr. NEELEY. I will yield to the gentleman.

Mr. AUSTIN. Is it not a fact that the whole matter was disclosed in this House by the gentleman from Nebraska, Mr. NORRIS, now a Senator, many, many months before the appointment of the Pujo committee?

Mr. NEELEY. That is true as to a part of the facts, but the crux of the whole thing lay in the fact that the illegal contract was made with representatives of a foreign government, the Republic of Brazil, and the Department of Justice was unable to do anything, for the reason that it had nobody upon whom it could operate until we were successful in procuring the attendance of Mr. Sielcken before the committee and from him wrung the admission that he was a participant in this deal, on his own responsibility, and had made a profit as a participant, which was such an admission of guilt as to cause steps looking to his prosecution to be taken by the Department of Justice, resulting in an adjustment with the Brazilian Government and the consequent decline in the price of coffee.

Mr. BURKE of Pennsylvania. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. NEELEY. Certainly.

Mr. BURKE of Pennsylvania. Do I understand that the Federal Government had jurisdiction after this investigation was made?

Mr. NEELEY. They had jurisdiction of the person, but very little, if any, proof until our counsel wormed it out of him.

Mr. BURKE of Pennsylvania. When they secured the admission and had absolute proof of his guilt they discontinued the prosecution and did not proceed further.

Mr. NEELEY. I do not say that; I say when we secured the facts a settlement was made.

Mr. BURKE of Pennsylvania. With the consent of the Department of Justice? This is a very interesting chapter.

Mr. NEELEY. I do not know the how, but I know it was made.

Mr. BURKE of Pennsylvania. It was made evidently without the objection of the Attorney General?

Mr. NEELEY. I can not say; I was not in the confidence of the Attorney General of the last administration.

Mr. BURKE of Pennsylvania. The present Attorney General—this was in May—was it not?

Mr. NEELEY. Mr. Speaker, I decline to yield further on the proposition. I have made the statement of facts as they are.

Mr. BURKE of Pennsylvania. Does the gentleman mean to say that this proceeding was discontinued under the last Attorney General? Was it not during the incumbency of the present officer? I have no controversy with the gentleman.

Mr. NEELEY. My understanding is that the proposition was made by the representatives of Mr. Wickersham, and an arrangement agreed to—whether with his knowledge or consent or assent I do not know, but by his representatives from the Department of Justice—resulting in the dismissal of the suit in New York upon condition that the coffee be immediately placed on the market; and with that understanding the contemplated prosecution was withdrawn and the entire matter closed, resulting in the decline in the price of coffee, as I have stated, of 2¾ cents a pound.

Mr. SIMS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. NEELEY. Certainly.

Mr. SIMS. So that the people, in lowering the price of coffee alone, had a benefit far in excess of this investigation?

Mr. NEELEY. I think so; but I will discuss that in a moment.

The consumption of coffee in the United States approximates 6,500,000 bags annually, so that the Money Trust investigation into this valorization scheme disclosed facts resultant in the saving of over $20,000,000 annually to the consumers of coffee in the United States, all at a total expense of about $57,000.

If gentlemen insist on actual cash returns for the outlay made, they certainly have it in this instance, and should be willing for the printing and distribution of such a number of these reports as will fully inform inquiring minds as to the actual facts and conditions developed.

PUSH THE INVESTIGATION.

An argument sometimes made against continuing the investigation is that there is not sufficient time, and Members of the House are so busy with their other duties that it is impossible to add this burden. Let us see what are the facts: Over 200 Members of this House are now absent from their post of duty either caring for their own private business or on vacation, and the greater part of the balance of the membership is performing only the routine duties of their office. Few of the House committees have been organized since this session began. Some of them have held no meetings at all, and even the much-discussed Banking and Currency Committee has held but one session since this Congress began, and that meeting was for the sole and only purpose of organizing the committee, and no other business was transacted thereat. Not a particle of business has been transacted by this committee as a committee since this Congress began, and should it be necessary for it to spend weeks in conducting hearings and investigations into the merits and demerits of any bill that may be presented, there are still over 350 Members of this House marking time, with nothing to do but the performance of the ordinary routine business of their office. There is neither justification nor excuse for this condition, especially in view of the willingness of the membership of this House to perform every duty incident to the full discharge of their legislative obligations.

We should reform the currency system to meet the modern demands of the country, but while we are doing this should remember that these two mighty institutions, the clearing house and the stock exchange, have no direct law to govern them or regulate their transactions, but that the business of the country must trust entirely to the honesty and fairness of men whom experience has shown in many instances have humanly taken advantage of their opportunities. There is no more reason why the arrogance of the system should be permitted to exercise unbridled license in the management of the stock exchange and the clearing house than that the present financial system should be continued with all its faults.

Let us amend the law by taking away the present temptation for unjust clearing-house regulations and dishonest exploitation by placing a premium on legitimate and honorable action; let us continue the investigation to its legitimate end; let us turn the light of publicity into the places of dishonest and unfair banking methods. The people have a right to know the whole truth relative to the control of the finances of this country, and the Congress should demand it, that they may intelligently legislate for the protection of the heritage of ourselves and our posterity. [Lour applause.]

Mr. BURKE of Pennsylvania. Right there, Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman answer this question: Does he believe that the Banking and Currency Committee should, as a matter of wisdom, proceed further with a Money Trust investigation, so called, prior to the enactment of the proposed currency bill? I would like to have his views about that.

Mr. NEELEY. I believe that it should proceed at once.

Mr. BURKE of Pennsylvania. To which?

Mr. NEELEY. To the further investigation along the lines of the recommendations made by the committee.

Mr. BURKE of Pennsylvania. With reference to a further investigation at the expense of the enactment of a currency bill?

Mr. NEELEY. At no expense to anything or anybody—that the investigation should be immediately begun and pursued to its legitimate end.

Mr. BURKE of Pennsylvania. I understand it now. This committee must do one of two things. It must either proceed with this investigation at the expense of the consideration at this time of the currency bill or it must proceed with the consideration of the currency bill and postpone the so-called investigation. Which does the gentleman prefer? I have not expressed any preference. I am seeking wisdom.

Mr. NEELEY. I do not say that it is necessary to do either one of them. I say, as already indicated in my speech, that if the Banking and Currency Committee is so engrossed with its duties in the consideration of the currency measure that it is impossible for it to select a subcommittee from that committee to pursue this investigation that there are 350 other Members of this House who are thoroughly competent, eminently able, many of them entirely willing to conduct this investigation, and that it should be conducted immediately.

Mr. BURKE of Pennsylvania. By a committee outside of and apart from the Committee on Banking and Currency?

Mr. NEELEY. If the Banking and Currency Committee finds it can not consider the currency bill at the same time the Money Trust hearings are held, then I would say that we should have a special committee at once. That is a matter about which I think they should be consulted.

Mr. BURKE of Pennsylvania. The gentleman went all through that.

Mr. NEELEY. Yes, sir; that is my position, and I think fully answers your question.

Mr. BURKE of Pennsylvania. This is an important matter, and I would like to have some light upon it.

Mr. NEELEY. Well, the gentleman has it, so far as my position is concerned.

Mr. BURKE of Pennsylvania. The gentleman is experienced in this matter. Does he believe that the Banking and Currency Committee can not consistently and with wisdom proceed with the so-called investigation of the Money Trust cotemporaneously with the consideration of a financial measure?

Mr. NEELEY. I do not know that I am called upon to answer a question of that kind.

Mr. BURKE of Pennsylvania. The gentleman is one of those designated for that service.

Mr. NEELEY. I was not aware of that, but careful consideration should be given the two plans, and then select whichever is proper.

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Speaker, a few moments ago the gentleman called attention to the fact that many of the Members were at home attending to private business or else on vacation, and he further called attention to the fact that the Committee on Banking and Currency had had but one meeting. I hope the gentleman does not mean to leave the impression in the RECORD that any members of that committee are away from the city neglecting their duties.

Mr. NEELEY. I mean to leave the impression just as I stated it. I have only stated the facts.

Mr. WINGO. Is it not true—I know it is of myself, as one member of that committee—that many members of the committee have kept themselves at all times here ready at the call of the administration. I know that I have. I have not yet seen any administration bill, and I am ready for it, and I am willing to work all the summer on any legislation the President deems necessary. I do not think the gentleman ought to put us in the attitude of being neglectful.

Mr. NEELEY. I have no intention or desire to do that. I think the common understanding is that committee meetings are usually called by the chairman, and so far as I know there has never been but one call for a meeting of this committee.

Mr. WINGO. The gentleman does not wish to leave the impression that the rank and file of the committee are not ready to begin work?

Mr. NEELEY. I think they are entirely willing, so far as I have any knowledge of the matter.

Mr. WINGO. Personally, I am ready to go to work and have been keeping myself here in readiness all of the time, and have abandoned my law practice to the end that I can be in attendance to consider the proposed administration bill. If necessary, I am willing to stay here all summer and even until hog killing time to pass needed legislation.

ENROLLED BILL PRESENTED TO THE PRESIDENT FOR HIS APPROVAL.

Mr. ASHBROOK, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that this day they had presented to the President of the United States for his approval the following bill:

H. R. 2441. An act making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1914, and for other purposes.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend and revise my remarks on the subject of the Indian appropriation bill going to conference.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. SIMS. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and accordingly (at 2 o'clock and 5 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until Monday, June 23, 1913, at 12 o'clock noon.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, executive communications were taken from the Speaker's table and referred as follows:

1. A letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting a copy of a communication from the Secretary of Commerce submitting an estimate of appropriation for the purchase and operation of a motor boat to be used in the enforcement of the laws relating to the navigation and inspection of vessels (H. Doc. No. 95); to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

2. A letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting a copy of a communication from the Secretary of Commerce submitting an estimate of appropriation for the Bureau of Fisheries of that department for the fiscal year 1914 (H. By Mr. RAKER: Petition of sundry citizens of San Francisco, Cal., favoring the bill relating to granting the Hetch-Hetchy sources of water supply to the city of San Francisco; to the Committee on the Public Lands.

By Mr. ROGERS: Petition of the Boston Automobile Association, favoring the passage of H. R. 4322, for a 1-cent letter-postage rate; to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

By Mr. SMITH of Idaho: Papers to accompany bill granting an increase of pension to Charles H. Hines, late of Company C, Seventy-eighth Ohio Volunteer Infantry; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. WILLIS: Papers to accompany bill (H. R. 6198) granting an increase of pension to Willis S. Mahon; to the Committee on Pensions.

SENATE.

SATURDAY, June 21, 1913.

The Senate met at 12 o'clock m.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. Forrest J. Prettyman, D. D.

The Secretary proceeded to read the Journal of the proceedings of Wednesday last, when, on request of Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas and by unanimous consent, the further reading was dispensed with and the Journal was approved.

REUNION CELEBRATION AT GETTYSBURG, PA.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair lays before the Senate a communication from the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania, which will be read.

The Secretary read as follows:

The Commonwealth of Pennsylvania and the Fiftieth Anniversary of the Battle of Gettysburg Commission request the honor of the presence of the Members of the Senate of the United States at the reunion celebration at Gettysburg, Pa., July 1, 2, 3, and 4, 1913.

The favor of an answer, not later than June 20, 1913, is requested to Lieut. Col. Lewis E. Beitler, secretary Pennsylvania commission, Capitol, Harrisburg, Pa.

JOHN K. TENER,
Governor of Pennsylvania.
J. M. SCHOONMAKER,
Chairman Fiftieth Anniversary Battle of Gettysburg Commission.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair would ask the Senate what action is to be taken with reference to the invitation of the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania touching the attendance of Members of the Senate at the Gettysburg reunion. For the information of the Senate the Chair will state that the House of Representatives has accepted the invitation and appointed a committee of 20 Members.

Mr. NELSON. I move that the matter be referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

The VICE PRESIDENT. It is moved by the Senator from Minnesota——

Mr. KERN. I hope the Senator will not press the motion.

Mr. NELSON. I will withdraw the motion.

Mr. KERN. I was about to move that the invitation be accepted by the Senate——

Mr. NELSON. Very well; that is a great deal better than referring it to the committee.

Mr. KERN. And that the Vice President appoint a committee of eight to represent the Senate on the occasion.

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. I second that motion.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, I am not, of course, opposed to the motion. I think it very appropriate that it should be adopted, but in connection with it I want to call the attention of the Senate, particularly of the Senator from Virginia [Mr. MARTIN], the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, to a statement that appears this morning in the daily press, purporting to come from the Secretary of War, in which he calls attention to the fact that the money appropriated for the purpose of caring for the soldiers who will come to the reunion at Gettysburg is not sufficient to meet what he thinks will be the demand, owing to the large number of soldiers who will visit there.

It strikes me, Mr. President, that the number expected is 50,000, although I looked at it hurriedly, and that the Secretary is not prepared to care for that number of soldiers of the two armies who were engaged in that battle or who are survivors of the war; that he will not have money enough to take care of them.

It seems to me that it is rather a serious proposition coming as it does at the very hottest season of the year, and that we ought to make no mistake but see that proper preparation is made there for caring for the large number of old soldiers who will probably be in attendance. On account of the time of the year, if there is liable to be any overcrowding, it may result in a great deal of discomfort and perhaps in a good many deaths if proper preparation is not made.

I should like to suggest that if we do not have money enough appropriated to meet what will be the proper demands of the old soldiers there, we ought to give proper authority to the Secretary of War by an appropriate resolution to meet any emergency that might arise.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. Mr. President, I did not notice the article in the newspapers to which the Senator referred, and I have received no communication from the War Department with reference to this matter. I am without any information on the subject. I can only say to the Senator that the Committee on Appropriations will look into the matter immediately, and I am sure the committee will give it prompt attention.

Mr. NORRIS. I hope the Senator does not imagine that I supposed he would not give it proper attention.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, I desire to state that the amount appropriated is entirely in charge of the State of Pennsylvania. My recollection is that the State of Pennsylvania appropriated $250,000 and requested an appropriation on the part of Congress of $150,000, which we promptly appropriated. I think it was the idea of the Secretary of War to call the attention of the State of Pennsylvania to the fact that there might not be enough tents. The State of Pennsylvania has the matter in charge and not the Government, as I understand it.

Mr. NORRIS. I think it is rather a joint responsibility, is it not?

Mr. OVERMAN. No; I do not think so. I do not think anybody is connected with it on the part of the Government except the Secretary of War, who is charged with furnishing the tents, and so on, in joint action with the State of Pennsylvania.

Mr. NORRIS. I should like to have the Secretary of War equipped with sufficient means to meet any emergency.

Mr. OVERMAN. I suppose if the Secretary of War needed more money he would have sent an estimate to the Committee on Appropriations. He has not done so. Therefore I take it for granted that the $250,000 the State of Pennsylvania appropriated and the $150,000 Congress appropriated will be amply sufficient. I presume the only thing the Secretary of War is doing is calling our attention to the fact that there are not sufficient tents on hand. I take it there will be enough tents provided.

Mr. JOHNSTON of Alabama. I wish to state to the Senator from Nebraska that I as chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs received a communication from the Secretary of War this morning stating that there would be a deficit and asking Congress to consider it. I am sure he did not refer entirely to what Pennsylvania has done to take care of the increased attendance of veterans that it now appears will be there.

Mr. SHIVELY. Mr. President, I think the article which appeared in the press this morning indicated that the committee in charge of the arrangements was to receive tents from the War Department on the basis of an attendance of 40,000, and this was in accordance with the provision made by Congress. But since that time invitations have gone out for enlarged numbers, so that the arrangements will require tents for 50,000. That is where the alleged deficiency arises, as the War Department under the appropriation could furnish tents to supply only 40,000.

Mr. NORRIS. I think the Senator is right. I am glad to hear the statement of the Senator from Alabama. I hope the Committee on Military Affairs will give the matter prompt consideration.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I desire to call the attention of the Senator from Indiana [Mr. KERN] to the fact that the resolution passed in the other House, House resolution 179, provides that the expenses of the committee appointed by the House shall be paid out of the contingent fund of the House of Representatives. Therefore, if the expenses of the committee appointed by the Senate are to be paid, some provision should be included in this motion. Of course, in order to do that it will have to go to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate.

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. That will not take long.

Mr. SMOOT. It will take only a very few minutes to report it back from the committee. I think if the House committee's expenses are to be paid out of the House contingent fund the Senate committee's expenses ought to be paid out of the contingent expenses of the Senate.

Mr. KERN. I will submit a resolution to that effect.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Indiana moves that the Senate accept the invitation of the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania to attend the fiftieth anniversary of the Battle of Gettysburg, that a committee of eight Senators be appointed by the Chair to represent the Senate.

Mr. NORRIS. May I have the attention of the Senator from Indiana? It will be remembered that the House resolution provided that the Speaker should be a member of the committee. I suggest to the Senator from Indiana that he modify his motion so that the Vice President will be a member of the committee of the Senate.

Mr. KERN. I am very glad to make the motion that way. I move that a committee of eight Senators be appointed, of which the Vice President shall be chairman.

Mr. NORRIS. Yes.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair would inquire whether that is compulsory.

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas and others. Yes.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Indiana.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. KERN submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 115), which was referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate:

Resolved, That the invitation of the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania and the Fiftieth Anniversary of the Battle of Gettysburg Commission extended to the Senate of the United States to attend the reunion celebration at Gettysburg, Pa., July 1, 2, 3, and 4, 1913, be accepted by the Senate.

That a committee, consisting of the Vice President of the United States and eight Senators, to be named by him, be appointed to attend said reunion celebration on behalf of the Senate of the United States, and that the necessary expenses of said committee be paid out of the contingent fund of the Senate upon vouchers to be approved by the Vice President.

Mr. WILLIAMS, subsequently, from the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, to which was referred the foregoing resolution, reported it without amendment, and it was considered by unanimous consent and agreed to.

VALORIZATION OF COFFEE.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair lays before the Senate a communication from the Attorney General, transmitting, in response to a resolution of the 20th ultimo, information having specific reference to certain litigation in New York in respect to valorized coffee.

Mr. NORRIS. I should like to have the communication read.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read the communication.

The Secretary read as follows:

OFFICE OF THE ATTORNEY GENERAL,
Washington, D. C., June 19, 1913.

To the PRESIDENT OF THE SENATE.

SIR: I have the honor to reply to a resolution of the Senate, dated May 20, 1913, having specific reference to certain litigation in New York in respect to valorized coffee.

In a communication to you, dated May 6, 1913, so far as seemed compatible with the public interest, I endeavored to comply with the resolution of the Senate dated April 21, 1913, on this general subject. A large number of papers—principally the originals—relating to the matter in question were sent to you at that time, and in reference to them I said:

"These are all the material papers on file in the department relating to the subject matter of the resolution, except the correspondence between this department and the State Department, and by direction of the President I beg to say that, in my opinion, it is not compatible with the public interest to transmit to the Senate copies of said correspondence."

Among the papers transmitted was file No. 186⅔ of this department, dated April 16, which contains the following language touching the disposal of the coffee once held in New York:

"Good-faith assurances have been presented by the Brazilian Government that the understanding was fulfilled in letter and spirit, and the entire amount of coffee disposed of to 80 dealers in 20 States. These assurances are accepted."

The fifth paragraph of the resolution of April 21, 1913, asked "the names and addresses of the parties purchasing the coffee involved in said suit, together with the price and the amount purchased by each." Answering this categorically, allow me to say that I do not know and have never known the names or addresses of the parties who purchased the coffee, or the price paid, or the amount purchased by any of them.

As to "what assurances have been given concerning the alleged sale of said coffee, by whom given, and, if in writing, that copies thereof be sent to the Senate," permit me to say: I received assurance from the State Department that representations had been made to it by the Brazilian Government, the good faith of which it accepted, to the effect that the coffee in question had been sold to many bona fide purchasers in different States. This assurance to me was in writing, but, as stated to you in my former letter, "in my opinion it is not compatible with the public interest to transmit to the Senate copies of the said correspondence."

Very respectfully, yours, J. C. MCREYNOLDS.
Attorney General.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, I think in the Attorney General's reply he has very frankly stated what it seemed to me he ought to have stated in the prior communication; that is, that he did not have in his possession and never did have the names of the purchasers or alleged purchasers of this coffee, the amount they paid, or the quantity they purchased. There was nothing among the papers which gave any information on this subject, and, as he concedes, nothing from the State Department which gave any information on that particular point.

The agreement by Attorney General Wickersham with the attorney representing the defendant in that suit, Mr. Sielcken, was that he would dismiss the suit if there was a bona fide sale made of the coffee in dispute. The suit was afterwards dismissed by the present Attorney General on the assurance, as he states, that representation had been made to the State Department by the Brazilian Government that the coffee had been actually sold to a vast number of dealers in several different States. It always seemed to me——

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Nebraska yield to the Senator from Arkansas?

Mr. NORRIS. I yield to the Senator from Arkansas.

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. I want to inquire if it is not a fact that debate on this matter can not proceed without unanimous consent?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair was assuming that unanimous consent had been given. Is there objection?

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. I shall be compelled to object. The program for to-day does not contemplate a very extended session of the Senate.

Mr. NORRIS. I did not hear the Senator.

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. I say the program we have laid out for to-day does not contemplate a very extended session of the Senate.

Mr. NORRIS. I will say to the Senator from Arkansas that I am going to detain the Senate but a few moments.

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. Of course, I will not insist, in the face of that statement, that the rule be applied. So far as I am concerned, I am perfectly willing to indulge the Senator from Nebraska for a reasonable time.

Mr. NORRIS. I do not know to what program the Senator from Arkansas has reference.

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. It would not interest the Senator at this stage if he knew it.

Mr. NORRIS. I do not understand, then. If the Senator has some secret arrangement——

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. It is not a secret arrangement, but it is an arrangement that does not include the Senator from Nebraska.

Mr. NORRIS. I move that the communication of the Attorney General be referred to the Judiciary Committee.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Will the Senator from Nebraska permit me to interrupt him?

Mr. NORRIS. Yes.

Mr. CRAWFORD. The Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS] has given assurance that his statement will be very brief.

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. I have not objected.

Mr. CRAWFORD. I am sure it is one in which every Member of the Senate will be interested, and I hope the Senator may be permitted to finish.

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. I have not objected to the Senator proceeding for a few minutes, as he said he intended to do, but if any extended debate should follow I should, of course, object.

Mr. NORRIS. I can not understand the Senator.

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. I can not state it any plainer. The Senator from Nebraska has made the statement that he does not intend to occupy the floor more than a few minutes in a mere statement concerning the communication which has just been received from the Attorney General. I have no objection to that, but I thought possibly from the way he started that there was likely to be extended debate on the question.

Mr. NORRIS. I do not think so. I will not detain the Senate, in my judgment, to exceed 10 minutes——

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. I will not object.

Mr. NORRIS. But I believe I am entitled to debate the motion I have made.

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. No; the Senator is not entitled to proceed to debate anything in the morning hour.

The VICE PRESIDENT. If there is objection, the Chair will rule that the Senator from Nebraska is not in order. If there is no objection, the Senator from Nebraska may proceed. Is there objection?

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. I would not object to the Senator from Nebraska making a statement not to exceed 10 minutes at the outside. If it is his purpose to limit his remarks to 10 minutes, I would not enter an objection; but he may say something that will induce others to debate the matter.

Mr. NORRIS. My own judgment is that it will not take me 10 minutes. I think, had I not been interrupted, I would have been through by this time. If I am further interrupted, it may take longer. I do not know what may occur, and as I may not be able to get through, I do not want the Senator from Arkansas to take my assurance if he wants to exercise his right of objection.

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. I think that on some more opportune occasion, when the Judiciary Committee shall have made a report concerning the matter covered by the Attorney General's letter, opportunity will be afforded for debate. I believe I will object, Mr. President. I object.

Mr. NORRIS. A parliamentary inquiry, Mr. President.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Nebraska will state his parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. NORRIS. Is not my motion to refer the communication to the Judiciary Committee open to debate?

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. Not in the morning hour.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair holds that during the morning hour the motion is not debatable. The Chair will state, for the information of the Senator from Nebraska, that the Chair rules that the communication from the Attorney General can lie on the table, and the Senator from Nebraska can call it up at the proper time and proceed to discuss it.

Mr. NORRIS. In order to get the parliamentary situation settled for future reference, when it may be desirable to enforce this rule, if it is to be established, I want to inquire in the best of faith if a motion to refer a communication to a committee after the morning hour is debatable?

The VICE PRESIDENT. It is.

Mr. NORRIS. Would the Chair kindly state why——

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that my colleague from Nebraska be allowed 10 minutes in which to present the motion to refer.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, that is very kind of my colleague, but from what has been said by the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. CLARKE] I would rather that the request would not be made. I will be able to take advantage of the parliamentary situation at some other time; but if this is to be the rule I want to find it out. I do not ask for any leniency. If the motion is not debatable, it will save the Senate a great deal of time in the future by having debate shut off on similar motions.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I desire to say to my colleague that it is important for the public business that the session of the Senate to-day be made short; but there is no objection on this side to a 10 minutes' presentation of the case by him and the reference of the matter to the committee.

Mr. NORRIS. The Senator from Arkansas has already objected, I will say. I do not know why it is desirable to make the session short.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. There is no objection to a 10 minutes' explanation by my colleague.

Mr. NORRIS. I think the Record will show that the Senator from Arkansas has formally objected.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Nebraska desire the communication referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, or does he desire that it lie on the table?

Mr. NORRIS. If my motion is not debatable, I withdraw it, and ask that the communication lie on the table.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The communication will lie on the table.

INHABITED ALLEYS IN THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA (S. DOC. NO. 112).

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a communication from the Commissioners of the District of Columbia, acknowledging the receipt of the resolution of the Senate of the 17th instant directing the Commissioners of the District of Columbia to furnish to the Senate the names, residences, and occupations of all persons owning and renting houses or rooms within what are known and designated as "inhabited alleys" in the District of Columbia, which was referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia and ordered to be printed.

FINDINGS OF THE COURT OF CLAIMS.

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate communications from the assistant clerk of the Court of Claims, transmitting certified copies of the findings of fact and conclusions filed by the court in the following causes: Irving Holcomb v. United States (S. Doc. No. 111) and Francis M. Magee v. United States (S. Doc. No. 110).

The foregoing findings were, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Claims and ordered to be printed.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by D. K. Hempstead, its enrolling clerk, announced that the House had agreed to a concurrent resolution providing that the two Houses of Congress assemble in the Hall of the House of Representatives on Monday, June 23, 1913, at 12 o'clock and 30 minutes in the afternoon, for the purpose of receiving such communications as the President of the United States shall be pleased to make them, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

The message also announced that the House had disagreed to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 1917) making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Bureau of Indian Affairs, for fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes, and for other purposes, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1914, asks a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. STEPHENS of Texas, Mr. CARTER, and Mr. BURKE of South Dakota managers at the conference on the part of the House.

JOINT SESSION OF THE TWO HOUSES.

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the following concurrent resolution (H. Con. Res. 10) of the House of Representatives, which was read:

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That the two Houses of Congress assemble in the Hall of the House of Representatives on Monday, the 23d day of June, 1913, at 12 o'clock and 30 minutes in the afternoon, for the purpose of receiving such communications as the President of the United States shall be pleased to make them.

Mr. KERN. I move that the Senate concur in the House resolution just read.

The motion was agreed to.

INDIAN APPROPRIATION BILL.

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the action of the House of Representatives disagreeing to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 1917) making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Bureau of Indian Affairs, for fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes, and for other purposes, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1914, and requesting a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon.

Mr. STONE. I move that the Senate insist upon its amendments and consent to the conference asked by the House, and that the Chair appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The motion was agreed to, and the Vice President appointed Mr. STONE, Mr. MYERS, and Mr. CLAPP conferees on the part of the Senate.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. GRONNA. I have a communication signed by the professors of the State University of North Dakota, with reference to the proviso in Schedule N of the pending tariff bill. I ask that the body of the communication, including one signature, that of the Hon. Frank L. McVey, president of the university, be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the communication was referred to the Committee on Finance, and the body thereof, including one name, was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

UNIVERSITY OF NORTH DAKOTA,
DEPARTMENT OF BIOLOGY,
Grand Forks, N. Dak., June 13, 1913.

Hon. ASLE J. GRONNA,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: We, the undersigned, earnestly request you to use your influence in support of the proviso in Schedule N of the new tariff bill now pending before the United States Senate, as follows:

"Provided, The importation of aigrettes, egret plumes, or so-called osprey plumes, and the feathers, quills, heads, wings, tails, skins, or parts of skins of wild birds, either raw or manufactured and not for scientific or educational purposes, is hereby prohibited; but this provision shall not apply to feathers of domestic fowls of any kind."

Very respectfully,

FRANK L. MCVEY
(And others).

Mr. NELSON presented a resolution adopted by the Commercial Club of Sauk Center, Minn., favoring a reduction in the rate of postage on first-class mail matter, which was referred to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads.

He also presented a resolution adopted by the Northern Minnesota Development Association, favoring an appropriation for the construction of drainage ditches, roads, and fire breaks upon those portions of the ceded Chippewa lands still owned by the United States, which was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

Mr. ASHURST. On May 29 I introduced a joint resolution, being Senate joint resolution 40, appropriating funds to pay expenses of all those delegates to the conference in this city of landowners and water users under the several reclamation projects. Since introducing that joint resolution I have received a resolution unanimously adopted by the board of governors of the Salt River Valley Water Users' Association, remonstrating against the appropriation or use of any part of the reclamation fund for the purposes contained in the joint resolution. I ask that the remonstrance be referred to the Committee on the Irrigation and Reclamation of Arid Lands.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. PERKINS presented a resolution adopted by the Berkeley Open Forum, of Berkeley, Cal., favoring the enactment of legislation prohibiting the use of the mails by any concern dealing in stock-exchange gambling, which was referred to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads.

Mr. LODGE presented memorials of 4,496 textile overseers and operatives, citizens of Massachusetts, Maine, New Hampshire, Rhode Island, New York, and Pennsylvania, remonstrating against the adoption of the proposed wool and cotton schedules in the pending tariff bill, which were referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. WEEKS presented sundry papers to accompany the bill (S. 1593) granting an increase of pension to Leucrecia M. Hodge, which were referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also presented sundry papers to accompany the bill (S. 1592) granting a pension to Robert Richards, which were referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also presented sundry papers to accompany the bill (S. 2241) granting a pension to Eliza F. Andrews, which were referred to the Committee on Pensions.

BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTIONS INTRODUCED.

Bills and joint resolutions were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. NELSON:

(By request.) A bill (S. 2573) for the relief of the estate of William Stanley; to the Committee on Claims.

A bill (S. 2574) granting an increase of pension to John J. Schneller; to the Committee on Pensions.

A bill (S. 2600) for the relief of Moses Harris; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

A bill (S. 2601) for the relief of the estate of Napoleon B. McLaughlen and others; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. WEEKS:

A bill (S. 2602) for the relief of Mary R. P. Robins; to the Committee on Claims.

A bill (S. 2603) granting an increase of pension to John Ryan; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. McLEAN:

A bill (S. 2604) granting an increase of pension to Eva D. Peck (with accompanying papers);

A bill (S. 2605) granting an increase of pension to Laura Garriett (with accompanying papers);

A bill (S. 2606) granting an increase of pension to Celestia A. Beebe (with accompanying papers); and

A bill (S. 2607) granting an increase of pension to Mary B. Johnson (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. JONES:

A joint resolution (S. J. Res. 46) authorizing the delivery to the proper authorities of the city park in the city of Aberdeen, in the State of Washington, two condemned bronze or brass cannon or fieldpieces and suitable outfit of cannon balls; and

A joint resolution (S. J. Res. 47) authorizing the delivery to the Dan McCook Post, No. 105, Grand Army of the Republic, of one condemned bronze or brass cannon or fieldpiece and a suitable outfit of cannon balls; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. JOHNSTON of Alabama:

A joint resolution (S. J. Res. 48) to continue in effect the provisions of the act of March 9, 1906 (Stat. L., vol. 34, p. 56); to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. OWEN:

A joint resolution (S. J. Res. 49) for the maintenance, management, protection, and improvement of Platt National Park, Okla. (with accompanying paper); to the Committee on Appropriations.

MANUFACTURE AND SALE OF INTOXICATING LIQUOR.

Mr. WORKS. I introduce a joint resolution, which I ask to have read.

The joint resolution (S. J. Res. 50) proposing an amendment to the Constitution prohibiting the sale, manufacture, and importation of distilled liquor containing alcohol, except for mechanical, scientific, and medicinal purposes under proper regulation by Congress, was read the first time by its title and the second time at length, as follows:

Whereas the consumption of strong alcoholic liquor is increasing at an alarming rate, thereby undermining the public morals, inflicting disease and untimely death upon many of our citizens, and blighting with degeneracy their posterity, thus threatening the integrity and life of the Nation: Therefore be it

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled (two-thirds of each House concurring), That the following be proposed as an amendment to the Constitution, which shall be valid to all intents and purposes as a part of the Constitution when ratified by the legislatures of three-fourths of the States: After the last article add a new article, as follows:

"ARTICLE XVIII.

"SECTION 1. The sale, manufacture, and importation of distilled liquor containing alcohol, except for mechanical, scientific, and medicinal purposes, under proper regulation by Congress, shall be prohibited in the United States on and after a period of three years next succeeding the ratification of this article by the legislatures of three-fourths of the States.

"SEC. 2. Congress shall have power to enforce by appropriate legislation the provisions of this article."

Mr. WORKS. Mr. President, I have long been convinced that the only way to deal effectually with the liquor traffic is to prohibit the manufacture or importation of intoxicating liquors. But I have realized that such an extreme measure of reform could not be accomplished at one stroke. It would confiscate or destroy the value of too much property and throw too many men out of employment.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, I dislike very much to call for the regular order of business, but we on this side of the Chamber have reasons for holding a short session of the Senate to-day.

Mr. WORKS. I am going to make only a brief statement.

Mr. WILLIAMS. If we make distinctions at all, every Senator who desires to debate a matter should have equal opportunity. I especially dislike to object when my friend from California is addressing the Senate, but I do call for the regular order.

Mr. WORKS. Mr. President, I was only desiring to make a statement, which will not take five minutes, to accompany the joint resolution which I have introduced. However, if the Senator is willing that I may print this matter in the RECORD——

Mr. WILLIAMS. I am perfectly willing.

Mr. WORKS. I will be very glad to accept the suggestion.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I am not only perfectly willing, but will be very glad to have the Senator do that. If we play favorites, it will not do.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, is it proposed by the Senator to print his remarks in the RECORD without reading?

Mr. WORKS. That is what I proposed to do in case there was objection.

Mr. OVERMAN. I prefer that we should not break the old rule which has obtained here for years, and that the Senator should proceed with his remarks rather than that there shall be printed in the RECORD remarks that were not made on the floor of the Senate. I should certainly object to that.

Mr. WORKS. I said to the Senator from Mississippi that what I was about to say would not take five minutes—not so long as the time we have consumed in the discussion of the matter.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, I dislike to be put in the attitude of insisting upon the enforcement of a rule and then making an exception for the benefit of one Senator; but, inasmuch as the Senator from California has begun his remarks, I will withdraw my objection to his proceeding. I, however, give notice that I shall insist upon the regular order as soon as he has finished.

Mr. WORKS. I am greatly obliged to the Senator from Mississippi.

Mr. President, the joint resolution I now offer affects only the manufacture, sale, and importation of distilled liquors, the most dangerous and life destroying of their kind. This method of reaching this great evil was not devised or first thought of by me. It is the conception of Mr. S. Benson, now a resident of my State, but formerly of Oregon. He has been a large employer of men, and has witnessed the devastating effect of alcoholic liquor on laboring men, especially of the lower grades, destroying their efficiency and often their lives. He is a man of large means, and is devoting a liberal portion of it to the effort to remedy the evil. Objection may be made that this proposed amendment, if adopted, will deprive men of their property and their employment and the Government of part of its revenue. This is to weigh money and property against health, happiness, and life. But considering it from this material point of view its effects will not be nearly so serious as most people would suppose.

Mr. Benson has, at his own expense, employed Mr. E. E. Coovert, an able and competent lawyer, to gather data relating to the manufacture and sale of liquors, capital invested, number of men employed therein, and other information bearing on this important question. Mr. Coovert has performed this service. I have his statement of the facts and figures on the subject. It shows, to begin with, that for the year ending June 30, 1912, 178,249,985 taxable gallons of distilled spirits were produced in the United States, not counting brandy and other liquors produced from fruit, the largest in the history of the country. This, in view of all the efforts made to suppress and curtail the traffic, is a startling, an appalling fact. Out of this the Government has realized the handsome sum of $146,715,203 on whisky and alcohol and $2,694,264 on brandy, or a total of $149,409,467. The showing for the first 10 months of the fiscal year of 1913 is still worse. The increase for that time over 1912 is 6,552,848 gallons, thus increasing the revenue of the Government by $7,208,133.59 over last year. I know it seems hard to give up this large revenue. But after all it is no better than blood money. The wrecked lives of the victims of strong drink, the widows and orphans it has made, and the crowded prisons and asylums should cry out against this attempt for hire to legalize a business so terrible in its consequences. Besides, if the cost to the Government and the States in prosecuting and caring for criminals, made so by alcoholism, and the paupers and insane that must be cared for as a result of the use of alcoholic drinks were deducted, probably there would be no gain, but a positive loss to the public. Let this be as it may, whatever loss shall accrue to the Government from the taking away of the tax on distilled liquors should be made up by an increased tax on fermented liquors by which it could easily be borne, and I believe would be willingly.

The statement of facts to which I have referred shows a surprisingly small amount of capital invested and number of men employed in the manufacture of distilled liquors. The amount invested in distilleries is only $72,450,000, while in breweries there is invested in the manufacture of malt liquors $671,158,000, and in wineries $27,908,000, making a total investment not affected by this proposed amendment of $699,066,000. The number of men employed in breweries and the wine industry in 1911 was 54,579, while in distilleries it was only 6,437. There is other interesting data in this statement of Mr. Coovert that I will submit to the Senate in a moment.

It appears that the sacrifice of property and deprivation of employment will be comparatively small if this amendment is adopted.

Mr. President, this proposed amendment is not just as I would have submitted it if I had drawn it on my own account. It excepts from its effects liquors used for mechanical, scientific, and medicinal purposes. I do not believe that alcohol or distilled liquors are necessary for any of those purposes. I would make no such exceptions. I would make the prohibition absolute. But others will not agree with me, and I have, for the present, deferred to the views of others who are earnestly seeking this legislation. I hope it may receive the early consideration and conscientious attention of Congress.

I ask to make the statement of Mr. Coovert a part of my remarks, without reading.

The VICE PRESIDENT. In the absence of objection, permission to do so is granted.

The statement referred to is as follows:

WASHINGTON, D. C., June 20, 1913.

DATA IN SUPPORT OF PROPOSED AMENDMENT TO CONSTITUTION PROHIBITING MANUFACTURE, SALE, OR IMPORTATION OF DISTILLED LIQUORS.

(By E. E. Coovert.)

Proposed constitutional amendment prohibiting the sale, manufacture, and importation of distilled liquor containing alcohol after a limited period, say, of three years, after the ratification by the States, excepting for mechanical, scientific, and medicinal purposes under proper regulation of Congress, and giving Congress the power to enforce the same by proper legislation, the idea being not to interfere with the manufacture of fermented liquors, but placing upon such liquors the burden of supplying the revenue lost to the Government by reason of the suppression of the distilleries.

The following data will show this plan to be feasible, and from an economic standpoint highly desirable, eliminating entirely the moral equation.

CONSUMPTION OF WHISKY INCREASING.

On page 10 of the Report of Commissioner of Internal Revenue for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1912, we find that 178,249,985 taxable gallons of distilled spirits were produced in the United States, not counting brandy and other liquors produced from fruit. This is the largest in the history of the country, and exceeds all previous productions by 2,847,590 gallons.

The amount withdrawn from the bonded warehouses, which measures the amount consumed of such distilled spirits, not counting fruit brandy, was 133,259,147 gallons. This exceeded the withdrawals of the year previous by 1,200,511 gallons.

The amount of revenue paid to the Government for the year 1912 for whisky and alcohol was $146,715,203, and for brandy $2,694,264.

A comparison of these figures will show the relative proportion of each manufactured and consumed.

The increase of revenue from whisky and alcohol over the previous year is $1,332,440. (See p. 30, Report of Commissioner of Internal Revenue.)

The figures for the fiscal year ending July 1, 1913, are still more startling.

The Internal-Revenue Office shows that the receipts for distilled liquor for the first 10 months of the fiscal year ending May 1, 1913, were $135,167,534.86, while for the corresponding period last year same were $127,959,401.27, an increase of $7,208,133.59, which, at $1.10 per gallon, equals 6,552,848 gallons.

The amount of whisky produced for the year 1898 was only about 80,000,000 gallons.

Thus it will be seen that the production and consumption of spirituous liquors is increasing at a tremendous ratio.

DRY TERRITORY INCREASING.

The following table shows the large increase of prohibition States and dry territory under local option. This was obtained from the secretary of the National Brewery Association, New York City. I have checked this report, so far as I am able, and find it fairly accurate, although, of course, changes are constantly being made from dry territory to wet, and vice versa.

Local option States.	Dry towns and counties.	Wet towns and counties.	Population under dry territory.
California	647 towns		600,000
Delaware	2 counties	1 county	80,000
Florida	37 counties	8 counties	658,271
Michigan	35 counties	48 counties	750,000
Missouri	66 counties	49 counties	1,210,860
Montana		All counties
Ohio	45 counties	43 counties	2,300,000
Arkansas	63 counties	12 counties	1,435,000
Arizona		All counties
Colorado	10 counties; 7 cities	48 counties	435,602
Connecticut	87 towns	81 towns	200,000
Kentucky	97 counties; 3 cities	22 counties	1,721,000
Illinois	30 counties; 8 cities	72 counties	704,809
Louisiana	30 parishes	29 parishes	850,000
Massachusetts	49 towns; 15 cities		1,061,589
Minnesota	Half villages are dry		1,060,000
New Hampshire	2 counties	8 counties	238,536
New York	412 no-license towns; 155 partial-license towns.	366 full-license towns	646,710
Maryland			450,000
Idaho	17 counties; 3 cities	10 counties	217,159
Oregon	4 counties; 4 no-license cities.	29 counties	230,000
Rhode Island	7 towns		16,850
South Dakota	17 counties		400,000
Texas	243 counties	171 counties	3,409,474
Vermont	7 counties; 6 cities	7 counties	284,862
Virginia	75 counties	25 counties	1,500,000
Wisconsin	47 dry towns	731 towns and villages	586,144
Iowa	81 counties	11 counties	1,718,752
Indiana	27 cities; 300 towns		1,755,569
Utah	87 towns	23 towns	125,000
Washington	6 counties; 1 city	30 counties	480,500
Total			25,126,689

New Jersey: All wet; no local option.
Pennsylvania: No local option.
Wyoming: All wet, except country districts.
South Carolina: Dispensaries.

Population of prohibition States.

Constitutional prohibition:
Maine, 1884	742,371
Kansas, 1880	1,690,949
North Dakota, 1890	577,056
Mississippi, 1908	1,797,114
Tennessee, 1909	2,184,789
North Carolina, 1909	2,206,278
West Virginia, June, 1914	1,221,119
Statutory:
Georgia, 1907	2,609,121
Oklahoma, 1907	1,657,155
Total	14,685,952
Adding, then, the total population in local-option dry territory	25,126,689
Brings the total population under dry territory in the United States at the present time to	39,812,641

The total population in the United States is approximately 95,000,000.

With these facts of the increase of consumption of whisky and the increase of prohibition States and local-option territory, the conclusion is irresistible that prohibition in the States does not prohibit, that the States and local government are impotent to enforce the law, and that if the United States is to be saved from alcoholism the remedy must be applied at the root of the evil, and that is to abolish the distilleries and the importation of spirituous liquors.

ECONOMIC LOSS FROM DISTILLED LIQUOR.

The retail price paid by the consumer for spirituous liquors in the United States during the fiscal year of 1912 was approximately $1,000,000,000—a total loss to the consumer and his dependents. This is based upon an estimate of 135,659,000 gallons retailing over the bar at $7.50 per gallon—$1,017,442,000.

PRESENT POWERS OF CONGRESS LIMITED.

Congress has not the power under the present Constitution of the United States to stop its manufacture. The powers of Congress enumerated in the Constitution do not include the regulation of police power within a State, and when not so enumerated is reserved to the States under the eighth amendment.

So, it will take such an amendment as above proposed in order to accomplish the result desired.

FERMENTED LIQUORS AND TOTAL LIQUOR REVENUES.

The production of fermented liquors (beer) during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1912, was 62,176,694 barrels, a decrease of 1,106,429 barrels from the previous year. (See p. 13, Report of Commissioner of Internal Revenue.) This produced a revenue of $1 per barrel. The receipts on beer for the first 10 months this year were $52,217,423.55. The receipts for corresponding period last year were $49,893,406.41, an increase this year of 2,324,017 barrels.

The amount of whisky imported last year was 5,567,833 gallons. This paid a duty of $6,463,228. (See World Almanac, 1913, p. 249.)

Total receipts are estimated as follows:

Tax on whisky and alcohol	$146,715,203
Tax on brandy	2,694,264
Duty on importations	6,463,228
Tax on beer	62,176,694
Total	218,049,389

So it will be seen that the immediate suppression of the manufacture and importation of all liquors, including fermented liquors, would lose to the Government $218,049,389 per annum, besides the license fees.

This, of course, would be impracticable and would not be considered by Congress. The plan above suggested, however, minimizes to a large degree the evil effects of liquor and at the same time does not reduce the Government's revenue by leaving beer to stand the revenue thus lost, which will amount to approximately $150,000,000 per annum. The beer industry can and should stand this loss. If 63,000,000 barrels per annum is produced, by doubling the revenue upon this and continuing the tax on whisky or spirituous liquors at the same or increased rate for the limited period after the constitutional amendment shall have become effective, it is assumed that sufficient revenue would be produced to take care of the deficiency. The profit in a barrel of beer is so enormous that the increased tax will be absorbed by the manufacturer and retailer and thus remain the same price to the consumer.

I am assuming that the evil effects of beer and wine are greatly less than those produced from the use of spirituous liquors.

I am also taking into consideration the immense amount of capital and labor represented in the beer and wine industries of the country.

COMPARATIVE PERCENTAGES OF ALCOHOL IN FERMENTED AND DISTILLED LIQUOR.

From Dr. John Billing's work on The Liquor Problem, a standard authority, volume 2, page 337, we find that the average percentage of alcohol contained in the different liquors is as follows:

	Per cent.
American beer	3.8
German beer	4.7
English ale	5
American champagne	8
French claret	8
Rhine wine	8.7
American red wine	9
Champagne	10
French white wine	10.3
Madeira	15
Sherry	17.5
Port	18
SPIRITUOUS LIQUORS.
Gin	39
Whisky:
American, common	35
American, best	43
Scotch	49
Brandy	47
Absinthe	51
Rum	60

This percentage is by weight; the percentage of alcohol by bulk would be larger.

RELATIVE AMOUNT OF CAPITAL AND LABOR EMPLOYED.

The number of breweries operating in the United States is 1,461. (See p. 13, Report of Commissioner of Internal Revenue.)

The amount of capital invested in the manufacture of malt liquors is $671,158,000, not counting cooperage and bottling industry, and it is the sixth industry in capital invested in the United States. The capital invested in wineries is $27,908,000, which would bring this amount up to $699,066,000, while the amount invested in distilleries is only $72,450,000. (See U. S. Census Bureau Bulletin, 1910, p. 80.)

The number of men employed in breweries is 54,579, in wine industry 1,911, while the number of men employed in distilleries is only 6,450.

The wages paid out in the manufacture of whisky is $3,074,000 per annum. The wages paid out for the manufacture of beer is $41,206,000 per annum, and for manufacture of wine $972,000 per annum. (See Prohibition Yearbook for 1912, p. 39.)

The amount of grain used in the manufacture of whisky is only about one-half of 1 per cent of the total product of grain producing liquor in the United States. The total crop for 1910 of grain was 5,143,187,000 bushels. (World Almanac, p. 163.) Of this amount the following was used in distilled liquor in 1911:

Barley	3,407,325
Wheat	21,765
Rye	5,376,018
Corn	23,247,004
Oats	13,172
Total (being one-half of 1 per cent of total)	32,065,284

(See Prohibition Yearbook for 1912.)

The number of distilleries now in operation is as follows:

Grain	417
Molasses	17
Fruit	386
Total (a decrease of 103 over the previous year)	820

In 1908 there were in operation 1,587. (See Internal Revenue Report, 1912, p. 12.)

These comparisons are made for the purpose of showing the small injury to the welfare of the people that would result from the suppression of spirituous liquors as compared to the fermented.

Last year it will be seen the number of distilleries was decreased 103. As the amount manufactured has increased, it must be assumed that the capacity of those remaining has been increased.

It will be seen that the amount of whisky imported and the amount of brandy manufactured is nominal.

The time may come when fermented liquor should also be put under the ban of the Government, but the enormous good to be derived from the experiment above outlined and at the same time preserving the revenue to the Government for the present justifies the discrimination above mentioned.

The main object of the time extension is to get rid of the immense supply on hand without confiscation and to increase the revenue from the production of whisky pending the period and to increase it permanently on beer, so as to take care of the deficit occasioned by the suspension of its manufacture.

After such a resolution has been properly ratified by 36 States, it would then be an easy matter for Congress by appropriate legislation to regulate the manufacture of sufficient quantities of alcohol or brandy for the uses set forth in the above exception. Similar regulations are now in force in many ways, and there could be nothing complicated or difficult in the enactment of such provisions.

The provisions of the Federal law regulating distilleries, the sale of machinery to the same, the provisions under which bonded warehouses are operated, and the denaturizing of alcohol, and regulations for the sale of opium for medicinal purposes, which are in force now, are fair samples of the method Congress could use in the adoption of "appropriate legislation" to carry out the provisions of the exceptions set forth in the proposed amendment.

Mr. WORKS. I move that the joint resolution be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

The motion was agreed to.

THE TARIFF.

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (H. R. 3321) to reduce tariff duties and provide revenue for the Government, and for other purposes, which was referred to the Committee on Finance and ordered to be printed.

Mr. CUMMINS submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (H. R. 3321) to reduce tariff duties and provide revenue for the Government, and for other purposes, which was ordered to lie on the table and be printed.

Mr. BRADLEY submitted three amendments intended to be proposed by him to the bill (H. R. 3321) to reduce tariff duties and provide revenue for the Government, and for other purposes, which were referred to the Committee on Finance and ordered to be printed.

STATUE OF ZACHARIAH CHANDLER.

Mr. TOWNSEND (for Mr. SMITH of Michigan) submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 119), which was read and referred to the Committee on the Library:

Resolved, That exercises appropriate to the reception and acceptance from the State of Michigan of the statue of Zachariah Chandler, erected in Statuary Hall in the Capitol, be made the special order for Monday, July 28, 1913, after the conclusion of the routine morning business.

PROPOSED INCOME TAX.

Mr. BURTON submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 118), which was read and referred to the Committee on Printing:

Resolved, That there be printed in pamphlet form for the use of the Senate 1,000 copies of section 2 of H. R. 3321.

ADDITIONAL CLERKS TO SENATORS.

Mr. JONES. I submit a resolution which I ask may lie on the table and be printed.

The resolution (S. Res. 117) was ordered to lie on the table and be printed, as follows:

Resolved, That the Vice President be authorized and directed to appoint a committee of five Senators to consider what clerical help should be allowed Senators and Senate committees. Such committee is instructed to consider and report to the Senate within 30 days from the passage of this resolution what clerical assistance should be allowed Senators to do their individual official work and what help should be allowed the different Senate committees to do committee work and the compensation which in their judgment should be paid such help, with a view to securing economy, efficiency, and fair treatment in the performance of the public business of the Senate and Senators.

Mr. JONES submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 116), which was ordered to lie on the table and be printed:

Resolved, That during the remainder of the present session and during the next session of the Sixty-third Congress, until otherwise provided by law, each minority Senator having fewer than three employees shall be allowed one additional employee to be paid at the rate of $1,200 per annum out of the contingent fund of the Senate.

THE PUBLIC LANDS.

Mr. SHAFROTH. I have here resolutions of the governors who met in conference in Salt Lake City last week. They adopted certain resolutions with reference to the policy of the Government as to conservation, and I ask unanimous consent that they may be read.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the resolutions will be read.

The resolutions were read and referred to the Committee on Public Lands, as follows:

We, the governors of public-land States, in conference assembled, believing that upon the administration of the laws governing the disposal of the public lands in a very large measure depends the future prosperity of our States, do hereby agree to the following statement of what we believe should be the policy of the National Government in the administration of the public lands:

First. That the newer States having been admitted in expressed terms on an equal footing in all respects whatever with the original States, no realization of that condition can be obtained until the State jurisdiction shall extend to all their territory, the taxing power to all their lands, and their political power and influence be thereby secured.

Second. That as rapidly as the States become prepared to take over the work of conservation, the Federal Government withdraw its bureaus from the field and turn the work over to the States.

Third. The permanent withdrawal of any lands within our States from entry and sale we believe to be contrary to the spirit and letter of the ordinance of 1787, the policy of which was followed for over a century, and we urge that such lands be returned to entry and opened to sale as speedily as possible.

Fourth. Dilatory action on the part of executive departments of the Government in passing title to purchasers of public lands is unfair to the States, as it permits purchasers to occupy the lands indefinitely without the State having power to tax them.

Fifth. We believe that the best development of these States depends upon the disposal of the public land to citizens as rapidly as the laws can be complied with.

Sixth. Bona fide homestead entry within forest-reserve boundaries should be permitted in the same manner as on unreserved lands, subject only to protest where lands selected are heavily timbered with trees of commercial value or are known to contain valuable mineral deposits.

Seventh. That the Government grant to the public-land States 5 per cent of the public land remaining in each, to be administered by the States as the school lands are now administered, for the purpose of building national public highways.

Eighth. That liberal land grants be made for the purpose of establishing and maintaining forestry schools in the public-land States.

Ninth. That rights of way for all lawful purposes be granted without unwarranted hindrance or delay.

Tenth. That all mineral lands now withheld from entry or classified at prohibitive prices be reopened to entry at nominal prices under strict provision against monopolization.

Eleventh. That we express our appreciation of the splendid work done by the department at Washington in cooperation with the several States in experimentation and instruction. This assistance has been most valuable in the education of our children and the development of our States, and we commend the same principle to the administration at Washington as being the most feasible plan for the present advancement of true conservation.

Twelfth. We believe that the National Government should provide for expert experimental work in the solution of the mining problems of the mineral States in the same manner that the Agricultural Department now assists the farmers in solving the agricultural problems.

Thirteenth. We believe that the speedy settlement of these public lands constitutes the true and best interests of the Republic. The wealth and strength of the country are its land-owning population.

Fourteenth. The best and most economical development of this western territory was accomplished under those methods in vogue when the States of the Middle West were occupied and settled. In our opinion, those methods have never been improved upon, and we advocate a return to these first principles of vested ownership with joint interest and with widely scattered individual responsibility.

A. PIATT ANDREW'S ADDRESS ON CURRENCY.

Mr. WEEKS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed as a public document an address delivered by Hon. A. Piatt Andrew in the Page lecture course at Yale University, entitled "The Crux of the Currency Question."

Dr. Andrew was formerly an Assistant Secretary of the Treasury, was a professor in the economics department of Harvard University, and was connected with the National Monetary Commission in its work for four years. I think this address states the principles of the currency question as well as they have been stated by anyone, and I think it would be of general service if this address were printed as a public document.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, I move to amend the request by providing that not more than 2,000 copies shall be printed for the use of the Senate and House.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. BRISTOW. I object, Mr. President.

HOTEL ON FORT HUACHUCA MILITARY RESERVATION, ARIZ.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. I ask unanimous consent to call up Senate bill 103, authorizing the Secretary of War to grant permission for the erection of a hotel on the Fort Huachuca Military Reservation in Arizona. It is a matter of importance, to which there is no objection.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Arizona asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of a bill which will be read by the Secretary.

The Secretary read the bill; and there being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. I should like to ask a question of the Senator from Arizona. The bill authorizes the Secretary of War to grant permission for the erection of a hotel on a military reservation?

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. Yes; and it is recommended by the Secretary of War.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. That is what I wanted to ask, if it was agreeable to the War Department.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. It is recommended by the War Department as an essential to the post.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MEMBERS OF PUBLIC BUILDINGS COMMISSION.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Under the provisions of section 36 of an act to increase the limit of cost of certain public buildings, to authorize the enlargement, extension, remodeling, or improvement of certain public buildings, to authorize the erection and completion of public buildings, to authorize the purchase of sites for public buildings, and for other purposes, approved March 4, 1913, the Chair, for the President of the Senate, announces the appointment of Mr. SWANSON and Mr. SUTHERLAND as members from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds of the commission provided for in the act.

FOREIGN TARIFF SYSTEMS AND INDUSTRIAL CONDITIONS.

Mr. SMOOT. I understand that morning business is closed?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Morning business is closed.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, the work of a Government bureau should be free from anything akin to partisan bias——

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from Nebraska?

Mr. SMOOT. I do.

Mr. NORRIS. I should like to inquire what motion is before the Senate, or by what right the Senator from Utah is addressing the Senate.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I gave notice that on June 21, 1913, at the conclusion of the routine morning business, I should submit remarks upon foreign tariff systems and industrial conditions.

Mr. NORRIS. I wish to inquire what right that notice gives to the Senator, Mr. President.

Mr. SMOOT. I was recognized by the Chair at the close of the morning business, and this is the regular order.

Mr. NORRIS. Does giving notice that at the conclusion of the morning business a Senator intends to make a speech give him the right to the floor, without any motion pending before the Senate?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The practice is a general one. It has grown into a rule. The remarks of the Senator, according to the notice given, are directed to foreign tariff systems. A bill on the subject of the tariff is before the Senate; that is to say, it is before a committee of the Senate; and according to the universal rule the course adopted by the Senator from Utah entitles him to address the Senate at this time.

Mr. NORRIS. Does it not follow that unanimous consent must be given for it?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That has not been the rule heretofore. It would require some change in our practice.

Mr. NORRIS. If that were the case, all those who give notices—and there are several notices on the calendar similar to the one the Senator from Utah gave—could consume in that way, without any motion being before the Senate, all the time of the Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Whenever the practice grows into an abuse the Chair takes it for granted the Senate will take notice of it and will make provision for remedying it.

Mr. NORRIS. I would rather take notice of it now, Mr. President. I desire to inquire whether an objection now to the Senator proceeding without any motion being before the Senate would not cut him off?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair rules that it would not, according to the precedents of the Senate. There is no positive rule that covers that matter, but the universal custom in the Senate has been in accordance with the practice to which the Senator from Utah is now conforming.

Mr. NORRIS. Do I understand the Chair to say that if the practice went so far as to become obnoxious an objection then would cut off a Senator, or would it take a new rule in order to prevent Senators doing what the Senator from Utah is now doing?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair is inclined to believe he will conform to the precedents of the Senate at the present time and will not undertake to reverse them. The Chair does not feel called upon to make a declaration as to whether the observation of the Senator from Nebraska is timely. The Senator from Utah is recognized and will proceed.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, as I was proceeding to say, the work of a Government bureau should be free from anything akin to partisan bias. Fortunately it is rare that a charge has been made to the contrary, but I hold in my hand a 66-page publication, which purports to be a report prepared "by the Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce of the Department of Commerce at the request of the chairman of the Ways and Means Committee," which contains statements that are not founded on fact, and which should never have appeared in the report of any bureau. New converts are generally conceded to be overzealous. Perhaps that may be the explanation of this report. There is a good deal in what is said about foreign tariff systems and other things to which no objection can be made, but there are a number of tables with reading matter and explanation which are open to serious objection. The first table purports to give the average ad valorem duties imposed in Canada and six European countries. It is said that "comparisons of this kind between imports and duties, while indicative of the general level of duties, are liable to misconstruction," and it adds:

> It is particularly unsafe to compare variations for single years without examining the statistics in detail, since an abnormally heavy or light importation of a few articles, subject to specially high or low rates, may be responsible for the variation. The comparison between similar returns for different countries is even more liable to misconstruction; in some countries the bulk of the imports may be highly finished articles on which the rates are naturally higher than on raw products, which may be the chief imports of some of the other countries considered.

This liability to misconstruction is very clear in the table of the alleged ad valorem rates of different countries. No such rates are given for France and some other countries on dutiable imports alone, but an average ad valorem on all imports is given, apparently with the purpose of showing how much higher the rates are in the United States. Every one of the six countries for which these alleged ad valorem rates are given imposes specific duties on nearly every class of goods imported. Take France as an illustration. No effort whatever is made to appraise the value of imports in that country at the customhouse. The value is of no importance in assessing custom duties. But once a year a commission appointed by the Government assembles and estimates the value of all imports according to the average of prices for the preceding year. Of course, such an estimate is the rankest kind of guesswork. Consul General Mason, at Paris, and other American officials have repeatedly shown how these estimates are entirely worthless. It may be of value to France for political reasons to overvalue imports or undervalue exports, but it is impossible for such a commission to give anywhere near the actual values. French statistics of values, in regard to trade with the United States, are wholly at variance with our statistics. This fact in relation to the way values are assessed in countries imposing specific duties shows how utterly absurd is this table of ad valorem rates furnished by this bureau.

BOLSTERING UP THE SECRETARY'S HOBBY.

The genial head of the Department of Commerce, Secretary Redfield, as we all know, has a hobby, if I may so call it, about the alleged greater efficiency of labor, machinery, and so forth, in this country as compared with other nations, which, in his opinion, obviates the necessity of a protective tariff. Of course we on this side do not agree with that theory and think that the facts are directly to the contrary. But some one in the Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce evidently thought it was wise to try and bolster up the Secretary's theories.

I am aware that during political campaigns it is considered very popular by many partisan speakers to appeal to the vanity of the American laboring man with statements claiming that an American workman can do more work in eight hours than an Englishman, Frenchman, or German can do in two or three times that length of time. The most casual investigation proves the falsity of such a statement, and I have had many American workmen say that they are not deceived by such political claptrap. Many laboring men have worked in foreign factories as well as American factories, both institutions making the same class of goods, and have testified before committees of Congress that they produced in a given time as much of the manufactured product in their native countries as they produced in the same line of work in America. It is true that in a few lines of manufacture there is no doubt but that the American laboring man produces more of the finished product in a given time than the foreigner, for the reason that he is furnished with greater facilities, but this applies only to a limited number of industries.

The British Government, in 1907, undertook, for the first time, to make a census of production in that country. Our

Census Bureau makes a census of manufactures every five years. The census of production in the United Kingdom and the census of manufactures in this country are very different in a great many respects. This is partially explained in this report by the following statement:

In the British returns are represented many activities that are not generally understood as pertaining to manufactures, and are not embraced within this term as defined by the American and Canadian censuses. Building and other construction work, traction and the operation of telegraphs and telephones, and some other public utilities are included in the British as well as exploitation of mines and quarries and the operation of laundries.

Statistics for mines and quarries and steam laundries, and also for sawmills and gristmills, and such things, are excluded from the totals of our census returns. The British returns also take account of custom work and repairing carried on by small establishments, excluded from our census. Then the British returns fail to show the number of establishments in the country, or their capital, or miscellaneous expenses, all of which are given in our census returns. These facts will go to show how utterly impossible it is to make any comparison between the British returns and those in this country, but the Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce has made such a comparison, and a fearful and wonderful affair it is.

The British returns include Government work, navy, dock yards, and so forth, but our census does not include work of that kind. In their census of mechanical power they include all engines, whether used or not. If an establishment purchases its motive power, but has facilities for providing its own in the case of accidents or otherwise, the full capacity of such facilities is contained in the census, and also the purchased motor power is included in the returns of the corporation that furnishes it. Then, motor power for lighting purposes and for all other purposes is included. In this and other ways there is a wide difference between the British returns and those of our own Government, but that does not seem to interfere in the least with the comparison got out by the Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce.

MANIPULATING THE FIGURES.

A table is given showing for every $100,000 added by manufacture the capacity of the engines in the United States and the United Kingdom, the number of wage earners, and for every $1,000 added by manufacture the amount of wages paid. In explanation of these figures it is said:

For 1906 the board of trade made a series of elaborate investigations into the general subject of earnings and hours of labor. A number of more important industries were investigated separately and returns obtained from the establishment employing a proportion of wage earners in each group of industries. While no general average of wages for all industries can be given, it is believed that the figures of each separate industry may safely be used for comparison with the corresponding census returns of the United States.

That might appear reasonable to the uninitiated reader, but it is not correct, and the comparison is absolutely worthless. The report of the British Board of Trade on the cost of living distinctly states that "the English wages are the standard time rates recognized by the unions concerned, and the American rates, on the other hand, are on reports obtained from employers of actual earnings and from workers, public officials, and from other sources." It should be borne in mind that the British wages given in the report of the board of trade as to the cost of living are not the average of wages paid in any industry in that country, but are entirely the rates fixed by trade-unions. Only 14 men were employed in securing the returns for the volume on the cost of living and wages, and only the wages paid by the trade-unions in the building trades, foundries and machine shops, and hand compositors on job work in the printing trade were included.

DEFECTS IN THE BRITISH WAGE RETURNS.

A separate investigation was made of wages paid in various industries, but it was not a return such as is made by the census of the United States. For instance, in the textile trades returns were obtained for only 44 per cent of the workers, and those returns were furnished voluntarily by the employers. Home workers in those trades were not included. In the census returns in the United States full reports are received without any exception, and the wages paid are taken from the books by Government agents. In the clothing trades the British returns cover only 29 per cent of the employees, and those are all factory employees, and the returns were made by the employers. There are 1,500,000 persons employed in that industry in the United Kingdom, but only 789,000 work in factories and workshops.

This British return of wages is not made for any separate establishment, and the number of establishments is not given, making a comparison as to the cost of production, such as that given in this table by the Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce, altogether untrustworthy.

EVIDENCE FROM A ROYAL COMMISSION.

The British Government in 1906 appointed a royal commission, composed of eminent men and women, to investigate the poor laws and relief of distress in that country. That commission was engaged for some years in making a thorough investigation of the subject, and its report is contained in 41 volumes, a single volume containing 1,288 folio pages, and they are all of about the same size. There was no limit as to expenditures of this commission, and no question has ever been raised, so far as heard, of the thoroughness of its investigations and reports. The board of trade publishes every month the percentage of persons unemployed in Great Britain. This British commission, referring to that report of the board of trade, says:

The percentage of persons unemployed, regularly published by the board of trade, relates only to about 600,000 men out of about 2,000,000 trade-unionists and 12,000,000 adult wage earners, the 600,000 being those entitled to ordinary out-of-work pay; and there is reason to assume that this small sample includes an altogether exaggerated proportion of workmen, especially among shipbuilding and engineering trades, liable to great fluctuations of employment. Of this relatively small group of highly organized trade-unionists, in good years about 4 men out of 5 get almost constant employment, in bad years about 3 out of 5, while the minority who are unemployed suffer severely, even to being out of work for months at a time. This insufficient data tells us nothing as to the condition of the mass of wage earners. There are no statistics which enable us to compute even within the hundred thousands how many persons are at one time simultaneously in distress from unemployment.

The commission goes on, by way of illustration, to relate that the Amalgamated Society of Carpenters and Joiners, an old and highly organized trade-union established in 1860, pays unemployed benefits, but finds it an increasingly heavy burden. In 1908 it amounted to 1s. 10½d. (45 cents) a week, irrespective of sickness, superannuation, burial, and strike pay. In 1908 that organization lost nearly 100 persons a week, and there are four times as many carpenters outside of that organization as within it. The commission says there are at least 1,250,000 men—possibly twice that many—out of employment.

Dr. Downes, one of the members of that commission, who is the senior medical inspector for poor-law purposes of the local government board for England, in his report said:

The most disquieting index of urban pauperism is the increase in the proportion of able-bodied men in health who are dependent upon the poor rates and the growing percentage of applications to committees under the unemployed workmen act.

ENORMOUS NUMBER OF PAUPERS IN UNITED KINGDOM.

The British Government also publishes each month the number of paupers relieved, to show the number existing in the United Kingdom. This royal commission reporting on these published returns says:

These figures do not give an adequate idea of the numbers brought under the influence of the poor law authorities within a specified time. They are the number relieved on a given day and take no account of those relieved at other times. The number of persons, excluding lunatics in asylums and casual paupers, under the care of guardians of the poor in the year ending September 30, 1907, was 1,709,436, or 2.15 times greater than the mean of numbers relieved on January 1 and July 1. The rate of pauperism was 47.7 per 1,000, as against 22.7 per 1,000, shown by the counts as published by the Government for the same year. Omitting insane and casuals, 1 out of every 47 was a pauper on July 1, 1907, and 1 out of every 44 on January 1, 1908. Not only has there been a progressive increase in the number of men in receipt of indoor relief, but the rate of male pauperism to male population of the same age was higher in 1901 than in 1891 at every age from 45 years upward, and the break widens as age increases. The rate for 1906 is higher than for 1901 at every age group.

The commission then shows how greatly lacking is an estimate of unemployed when founded on the returns of the trade-unions, which only relate to such persons in the unions as receive pay for unemployment. In the same way the Government reports as to pauperism are absolutely worthless, not showing one-half the number, according to this royal commission's report, and in the same way the Government reports as to wages, founded altogether on the wages fixed by the trade-unions, which do not embrace more than 16 per cent of the adult workers in the United Kingdom, are also worthless. But when for comparison the British Government reported on wages in this country it did not confine itself to trade-unions by any means. In fact, they had very little to do with the reports.

A FICTITIOUS POWER CALCULATION.

The table given in the report of the Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce not only gives motor power which is largely fictitious, but it gives wages for every $1,000 added by manufacture that are absolutely fraudulent. For instance, it states, to add $1,000 by manufacture of cotton goods in the United Kingdom $597 are paid out as compared with $516 in the United States, and that in the same way in the production of cutlery and tools $640 is paid out in the United Kingdom as compared with $490 in this country, but in the production of gloves we are alleged to pay out $457 as compared with $439 in the United Kingdom. There is hardly a department store in the United States that does not have English gloves on sale, which pay duty at an equivalent, according to the Ways and Means Committee, of 44.15 per cent ad valorem. Yet, notwithstanding this fact, our free-trade opponents assert that it costs more to manufacture them in England; hence they propose to reduce the duty and enlarge the market here for British gloves. In shipbuilding, for instance, it is said that $679 is paid out in the United Kingdom as compared with $600 in this country. Any intelligent man knows that the British shipbuilding industry is one of the most efficient in the world. They construct ships at very much less cost than in this country, which no one will dispute, but according to this ridiculous statement of the Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce it costs in wages $79 more for every $1,000 added by manufacture in the production of ships in the United Kingdom as compared with this country. It only illustrates the ridiculous character of this table and the report relating to it. Mr. President, I wish every Senator had a copy of this report and could turn to page 39 and follow me as I call attention to some of the statistics presented, and may be quoted by some to prove that $1,000 of manufactured goods can be produced in the United States with a less wage cost than in the United Kingdom. It attempts to show another unbelievable thing, that $1,000 of manufactured goods of nearly every variety can be produced in Canada with a less wage cost than in the United Kingdom. I ask that the table be printed as a part of my remarks.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. BRISTOW in the chair). The Chair hears no objection, and it is so ordered.

The table referred to is as follows:

Mr. SMOOT. Before passing from this I will take the time to call particular attention to a few of the industries. For every $100,000 added by manufacture, the report claims, it takes engine capacity as follows:

	United States.	United Kingdom.
Sugar	415	254
Silk goods	110	224
Paper, paper goods, and wood pulp	839	487
Cotton goods	504	114
Woolen and worsted goods	223	358

Mr. STERLING. Will the Senator permit me to ask him what report he refers to? I was not in the Chamber when the Senator began his remarks.

Mr. SMOOT. It is the report on foreign tariff systems and industrial conditions prepared by the Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce of the Department of Commerce at the request of the chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means.

Again, to produce the same amount, the report states that the following number of wage earners are required:

	United States.	Canada.	United Kingdom.
Brick, tile, and pottery	108	104	265
Tin plate	88	.....	205
Clocks and watches	99	.....	239
Sugar	39	50	107

Hosiery and knit goods	144	124	312
Paper, paper goods, and wood pulp	60	75	220
Shipbuilding	96	99	198

Again, for every $1,000 added by manufacture it requires the payment of the following amount of wages:

	United States.	Canada.	United Kingdom.
Cotton goods	$516	$416	$597
Linen, jute, and hemp goods	454	299	490
Woolen and worsted goods	474	493	552
Silk goods	433	365	601
Shipbuilding	600	533	679

The British Government in reporting on wages in this country as compared with the United Kingdom, notwithstanding that it only took trade-union wages in the latter country, reported that the average weekly wage in this country was approximately two and one-third times greater than the wages in England and Wales, two and five-sixths times greater than the wages in Germany, three and one-half times the wages in France, and three and three-fourths times the wages in Belgium. It also found that the hours were shorter in this country. It found that in Germany there was an average increase in wages of 9 per cent between October, 1905, and March, 1908, but in England and Wales the level of wages in the building trades was the same in 1908 as in 1905, and in the engineering trades—that is, foundries and machine shops—the increase in that time was only 1½ per cent. There was a very marked increase in the wages in the United States, which only serves to show the difference between wages in a protective-tariff country, as in this country and Germany, and in free-trade England. As to the cost of living, the British report excludes London, though it includes New York and other cities in this country in making a comparison, but it finds a ratio of 138 for the United States, as compared with 100 for England and Wales, London excluded; but bakers' bread is a very large item in the British cost of living, amounting to 22 pounds a week in the average workingman's family in that country, whereas in the United States bakers' bread is not used at all in the great majority of workingmen's families, and in none of them to any large extent. It is acknowledged that the consumption of meat is larger in the United States, as well as the consumption of vegetables, and the reports state that "the dietary of the American workingman's family is more liberal and more varied than that of the corresponding families in the United Kingdom."

THE TESTIMONY OF MR. GOMPERS.

The truth is that the situation in Europe is very well shown by Samuel Gompers in writing about the result of his investigations in England, France, and Germany in 1909. Speaking about this subject he stated:

The deepest impression that England made upon me comes from its poverty. Physically thousands have become unfortunate and are almost irreclaimable from idleness. Vice and the result of idleness make of them ready victims of death. Poverty is on view in all parts of London; figures in dirt and rags slouch along amid gay and well-attired promenaders in the park. With regret I must confess that I came away from London with a sense of depression; from time to time since those numbers of degraded objects which ought to have been men and women have formed in my mind's eye a procession moving along together past me, mournful, helpless, a disgrace to our boasted civilization. The Old World is not our world. In the procession America is first.

In speaking of the work in the shipyards of England and Scotland, Mr. Gompers says that wages range from $6 to less than $9 per week. In American shipyards the highest-class labor is paid almost that much in a day. But if the statistics of the Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce were considered wages would be higher in England. Mr. Gompers said that in the matter of the cost of living that if an American workingman would live the same as the European wage earner is compelled to do, the cost of living would be about the same, and that is the fact which is not upset in any way by the British report, because it is acknowledged in that report that in bakers' bread and one or two other things not used in this country, but used extensively in the United Kingdom, the difference is made up.

GREATER EMPLOYMENT OF FEMALES IN GREAT BRITAIN.

Another fact which does not appear in this comparison of the Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce is the greater employment of female and child labor in the United Kingdom. In the pottery industry, for instance, the percentage of female labor as compared with male labor in this country is 100 males to 20 females; in England, 100 males to 80 females; in Germany, 100 males to 300 females. Sixty-two per cent of the textile employees in England are females, while in the United States in the wool and worsted industry 41.3 per cent are females, and in the cotton industry 38.7 per cent of those over 16 years of age. In the wool and worsted industry in England 56.7 per cent are females, and in the hosiery industry 74.6 per cent, and in the silk industry 68.7 per cent. This large employment of women and children in England may make the average number employed seem larger, although women are paid very much less in England in proportion to the male pay than is the case in the United States.

WHAT COMMERCIAL AGENTS FOUND.

It is said in this report of the Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce that the investigations of the United States commercial agents bear out the assertions as to the greater efficiency of labor, machinery, and so forth, in this country. But that is not true. Reports of commercial agents depend largely upon the men employed. I am sorry to say that a few agents who have gone abroad were not competent for the work which they undertook, and in at least one case were not even able to write the English language correctly. Capt. Carden, of the Revenue-Cutter Service, was detailed as a commercial agent, and made a thorough inquiry as to the large establishments of Europe and showed himself entirely competent to do the work. He found the same machinery in use in Europe that is used in the United States and the same effective methods of administration. The only difference he found in favor of this country was in the larger establishments, in some cases, which devoted themselves exclusively to one product, in that case producing it at a less cost than an establishment which manufactures several different articles at the same time. But that is not the case in everything by any means. For instance, in chemicals we are far behind Europe. One establishment in Germany employs 10,000 persons, which is exclusive of their numerous agencies. A chemical establishment in England employs 7,000 persons, and is interested in several other establishments; one in France has a large number of establishments and employs a force much greater than in any similar establishment in the United States. Then, the trusts and syndicates control the chemical industry in Europe and dump their surplus products in this country. In the chemical industry we are deficient as compared with Europe for the reason that sufficient protection has never been given fine chemicals to establish the industry in this country.

EFFICIENCY OF LABOR ABROAD.

As to efficiency of labor, while it is customary for some of our free-trade friends to assert that because of this superior efficiency we do not need any tariff in this country, when we have to compete with Europe the facts demonstrate quite to the contrary. A large proportion of the labor in this country came from Europe, particularly skilled labor. The European mills are filled with workmen who make the business a life study and stay in one place, thus producing greater efficiency. In this country it is customary to move about, and the apprenticeship system is not developed here to the extent that it is in Europe, while Government assistance is given there in the way of technical schools and other educational advantages for trades much greater than is the case in the United States.

Charles Delaney, president of the National Association of Glue & Gelatin Manufacturers, testified before the House Ways and Means Committee that the subject of the efficiency of wage earners in this country as compared with Europe has been repeatedly discussed in that association, and it was the experience of men in his business, who had knowledge of European conditions, that labor was not more efficient here.

The imports alone would demonstrate the falsity of the assertion that labor is more efficient here than abroad. Joseph Benn & Sons, who have a mill at Greystone, R. I., and another one at Bradford, England, announce that they will close their mill at Greystone if the rates proposed in the Underwood bill on wool and woolen goods take effect, for the reason that they can produce so much cheaper in Bradford that they could not afford to operate the mill at Greystone. They have already thrown some 400 workmen out of employment, and are ceasing to do any work except on orders, because of the menace of this Democratic tariff bill. Julius Forstman, a German who has been in the manufacturing business in Germany and who was a member of the tariff commission which formed the last tariff in that country, has a mill in Passaic, N. J. Mr. Forstman is a man of large experience, and he ridicules the talk of greater efficiency of labor in this country as compared with Europe. He finds it difficult to get reliable, competent labor in this country, but had no such difficulty in Germany. Legislation based on any talk of greater efficiency of labor, in many of the industries in the United States as compared with Europe, would be based on as false an assumption as are the statistics given in this report of the Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce.

EVIDENCE FROM BRITISH INVESTIGATORS.

Arthur Shadwell, M. A., M. D., made a long investigation as to the efficiency of labor in England and in other countries, including the United States, which was published by Longmans, Green & Co., of London, and a new edition was issued in 1909 after further investigation by Dr. Shadwell. In this last edition he says:

During the winter of 1907 and 1908 I went through a large number of workshops in several of the most important manufacturing centers in England, including some which I had visited five years before. The change was very noticeable. I found workshops reconstructed, reorganized, and reequipped, old appliances replaced by new, the most recent tools and machinery installed, and a general air of renovation. * * * British manufacturers took up the American idea of high-speed steel and machinery tools with great energy. Sheffield is without a single rival. British makers have recovered their lost ground and are once more ahead. Their machinery tools to-day are more varied and more economical than those of the United States. British makers are well ahead in actual speed for some classes of machinery. * * * Boot making by machinery is wholly an American development. English manufacturers not only equip their factories with machinery, but also adopt American styles and have succeeded in turning out goods equally attractive and cheap and of better quality. The factory trade was revolutionized. The whole situation has been changed by the patent act of 1907, nullifying the boycott agreements in leasing arrangements, and compelling American makers of boot machinery to manufacture in this country so that English makers can now compete on fair terms. This act is having a substantial effect in increasing productive employment in this country. The boot trade is only one of several affected by it.

Lord Brassey, an eminent Englishman, wrote a book a number of years ago on Foreign Work and English Wages. In 1908 Mr. S. J. Chapman, M. A., professor of political economy in the University of Manchester, issued two volumes, which were published by Longmans, bringing up to date the work previously done by Lord Brassey, who wrote an introduction to these books, in which he said:

In home industries labor-saving machinery has been increasingly used and better methods of work have been adopted. To-day the master builders of London can hold their own with every other great city at home or abroad, whether in workmanship, rate of progress, or lowness of cost.

COST OF LIVING NO LESS IN ENGLAND.

Speaking of the cost of living in England and efficiency of labor, as compared with this country, Lord Brassey says—and he made a personal investigation:

The cost of living is about the same here as in the United States. The rough work around blast furnaces is not attractive to Americans. The workers in that branch (in the United States) are mostly foreigners, inferior in efficiency to the skilled men in British establishments. We possess unrivaled advantages in shipbuilding. Our workmen are second to none. The cost of a steamship in the United States, according to Mr. Chapman, is 15 per cent to 25 per cent greater than with us. In the manufacture of locomotives, in efficiency the English makers can hold their own. English makers retain the leadership in cotton and linen machinery. British machine-tool makers hold their own even in competition with the United States. The cotton industry of Great Britain has been long in a commanding position. Factory operatives are trained from childhood. We have an advantage in the humidity of our climate. American operatives are a migratory body, recruited from every nationality. In silk the French are preeminent.

In chemicals and dyes we have allowed our German competitors to pass ahead. They have succeeded through the care and liberality bestowed by their Government. French exports of chemicals are only about one-half those of England; but the exports of the United States are little more than half those of France. It is satisfactory to know that Great Britain, the pioneer in the construction of railways, has maintained an ever-advancing standard of efficiency. British workmen are second to none.

NO DIFFERENCE IN EFFICIENCY OF LABOR.

That is the testimony of an eminent Englishman who has been honored by his own and other Governments, and who speaks of the efficiency in that and other countries from personal inquiries. With just as efficient workmen, trained for life in their callings, the British employers have all of the advantages of machinery, the same as an American manufacturer, and pay wages that are in many cases two-thirds less than the rates paid in the United States, and that is substantiated by the report of the British Government. In the volume issued by the British Government reporting wages in that country it is stated that bricklayers in the United States in 1905 received an average for several hours less work a week than their British competitors of 110s. 6d., but the average paid in the building trades in Great Britain for full time for men was 32s., while the highest paid in any industry under that classification was 40s. a week, paid only to 13 per cent of the workers. In the same way a mason is credited with receiving 96s. in the United States as compared with less than 30s. in Great Britain. As a matter of fact, these wages quoted for the United States are much below the rates paid in New York and some other cities. The British Government credits plumbers with receiving 94s. in the United States, and compositors in printing offices 95s. as compared with wages in similar industries in the United Kingdom of less than a third as much.

In the building trades, according to British official returns, in the United Kingdom 5 per cent of the men working full time receive less than 20s. a week—$5—and 37 per cent of them received between 20 and 30s.—between $5 and $7—a week, while the average in all the building trades for full-time summer work is a little over $7 a week. In some of the trades in this classification in the United States men earn almost that much in a day. It is admitted that the pay in Great Britain is less in the winter than in the summer.

WOMEN IN THE BUILDING TRADES.

Women are employed in the building trades there, and the average rate of wages for them is $3.10 a week, while boys under 20 years of age get $2.28 a week. It is stated in this official British report that since 1900 there has been no change in wages in building trades; that is, the "general level" is the same; but in the United States there has been a very marked increase in that period. Of course rates of wages differ in various parts of the United Kingdom. The average earnings of a man in full time in the building trades, in United States money, in Ireland is $6.66 a week. That includes plumbers, masons, bricklayers, carpenters, and various other workers in that line, and serves to show the absurdity of asking the American workman to compete with such wages. Locomotive engineers receive on an average $9.22 a week. Men working full time in machine joinery, sawmills, and so forth, average in the United Kingdom $6.56 a week, while boys under 20 years who are employed in the same work average $2.98 a week. Thank God women are not employed in such work as the building trades in the United States, and I never want to see the day arrive when they will be. These are official British Government returns, concerning which there can be no dispute.

These returns state that in the public utilities service—roads and sanitation, gas, electricity, tramways, and omnibuses—the average pay for men in the United Kingdom is $6.48 a week, and for boys under 20 years of age, $2.88 a week. Men at work on the roads and in sanitary employment in the rural districts receive $4.30 a week on the average. Men at work on tramways or street cars and omnibuses receive on the average $7.32 a week. The situation is much worse in the agricultural districts, where men working full time, including everything allowed them, receive in the summer in England an average of $4.40 a week and in Ireland $2.70 a week. It is difficult to believe that able-bodied men can live on such wages. Those wages include all allowances of any kind for living purposes, as stated in the British report. In five counties in Ireland, according to this report, the average wages for men on farms employed full time is $2.40 a week. The highest pay in any county in Ireland for farm labor is $3.36 a week and the lowest $2.32 a week. In Oxfordshire, England, the average farm pay for men working full time is $3.92 a week, and the hours of employment are from 11 to 12 a day. It is no wonder that there has been such an enormous decrease in the number of farm laborers in England and that millions of acres of land have ceased to be cultivated. How anyone can live on such wages while the cost of living, according to such an eminent authority as Lord Brassey, is practically the same as in the United States is hard to understand. It is further stated that there has been no change in farm wages since 1902.

WHAT SOME TRADE WORKERS ARE PAID.

The average pay for boot and shoe workers, full time of from 52½ to 54 hours a week, in England is from $6.22 to $7.20 a week. The British reports show a decrease of 20 per cent of the land under cultivation in Ireland in 1906 as compared with 1851, and a further large reduction in England. In the cotton industry 16 per cent of the men working full time earn less than 20 shillings a week, or $5, while there is nearly the same percentage in the woolen industry. Forty-four per cent of the men in the linen industry earn less than 20 shillings a week, 49 per cent in the jute industry, 51 per cent in the hair industry, 19 per cent in the silk industry, and 22 per cent in the hemp industry. Nearly 44 per cent of the men in the cotton industry earn between 20 and 30 shillings a week, or from $5 to $7.20. Thirteen per cent of the women in that industry working full time earn less than $2.40 a week, while 39 per cent earn between 10 and 15 shillings, or between $2.40 and $3.60 a week. The average for women working full time in the woolen and worsted industry is $3.32 a week, and in the linen industry $2.58 a week, and in the hemp industry $2.62 a week, and so on in other industries. How women can live on such wages passes understanding in this country. Boys under 20 years of age working full time in the linen industry receive $2.02 a week and in the woolen industry $2.44 a week. Girls under 18 years of age in the linen industry receive $1.76 a week, and they are paid still less in the hemp industry and little more in the woolen and cotton industries. The average hours of labor in the cotton industry are 55.5 a week and in the silk industry 54.5. In the clothing industry, which, under the proposed new tariff bill will be afforded little, if any, protection in the United States, the average men's earnings in England, according to the Government report, are $6.78 a week, while the average for women is $3.12 a week, with correspondingly low wages for boys and only an average of $1.36 a week for girls under 18 years of age. Even then the employment is irregular. The full average wage for women in millinery, clothing, artificial flowers, gloves, furs, and so forth, is only $3.24 a week. But women predominate in nearly all of these industries, and there are 38,000 in the boot and shoe industry alone. Over 21 per cent of the women in this industry earn less than $2.40 a week for full time.

In 1889 there were 49,000 persons employed in boot and shoe factories, but in 1904 there were 102,489. This was the result of improved machinery and of doing the work in factories instead of in private houses. It would be easy to go on quoting from these Government statistics to show the remarkably low wages paid in the United Kingdom, and it must not be forgotten that our British friends claim that the wages are higher in that country than in some of the other countries of Europe. But when a comparison is made with the United States and the fact considered that it is proposed to cut down the tariff rates to the great extent contemplated by this Democratic tariff bill, no one need be surprised over the fact that there has been a loss in a few months of hundreds of millions of dollars in the values of stocks and bonds of corporations in this country.

Whenever statistics are gathered from the realm of speculation, and with no other object in view than to demonstrate some pet idea, the information sought to be conveyed by them necessarily becomes misleading, and such a practice should be condemned, no matter by whom indulged in. I leave the Senate to judge if this report should not be condemned.

OKANOGAN RIVER BRIDGE, WASHINGTON.

Mr. STONE. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. JONES. Will the Senator consent to yield to me to ask unanimous consent for the consideration of a bridge bill? It will take but a moment.

Mr. STONE. I withdraw the motion at the request of the Senator.

Mr. JONES. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 1353) to authorize the board of county commissioners of Okanogan County, Wash., to construct and maintain a bridge across the Okanogan River at or near the town of Malott.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. STONE. I renew my motion that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to, and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After 15 minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened, and (at 1 o'clock and 45 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until Monday, June 23, 1913, at 12 o'clock meridian.

SENATE.

MONDAY, June 23, 1913.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. Forrest J. Prettyman, D. D.

The Journal of the proceedings of Saturday last was read and approved.

REUNION CELEBRATION AT GETTYSBURG, PA.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Under the resolution of the Senate, adopted on Saturday last, the 21st instant, the Chair appoints as the committee on the part of the Senate to attend the reunion celebration at Gettysburg, Pa., July 1, 2, 3, and 4, Mr. NEWLANDS, Mr. BANKHEAD, Mr. SHIVELY, Mr. THORNTON, Mr. NELSON, Mr. WORKS, Mr. BRADLEY, and Mr. DU PONT.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. WORKS. I have received several telegrams from the Chamber of Commerce of Stockton, from grape growers and business men of Lodi, and from Chester H. Rowell, in my State, relative to the proposed change in the tariff bill imposing a tax on spirits contained in California sweet wines. I ask that the telegrams be printed in the RECORD and referred to the Committee on Finance.

There being no objection, the telegrams were referred to the Committee on Finance and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

FRESNO, CAL., June 21, 1913.

Hon. JOHN D. WORKS,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.:

Proposed change tariff bill imposing internal-revenue tax on spirits contained in California sweet wines would practically ruin the industry; would not produce more than small fraction of the revenue estimated, since little fortified wine would be produced. Sugar instead of alcohol would be added and the alcohol produced by complete fermentation of sugar in grapes in place of present incomplete fermentation; fortification of wines is primarily for purpose of increasing sugar rather than alcohol. Amendment is proposed primarily to give unfair advantage to sophisticated Ohio wines and to eastern alcoholic products used in patent medicines. Proposed tax would be staggering blow to Fresno grape industry already sufficiently menaced by decrease in raisin tariff and proposed reduction Zante currant tariff to 1 cent. Hope you can urge restoration of both wine and currant schedules to figures of House bill.

CHESTER H. ROWELL.

STOCKTON, CAL., June 21, 1913.

Senator JOHN D. WORKS,
Washington, D. C.:

Grape growers appalled at magnitude of disaster threatened by repeal of sweet-wine law. Please do all in your power to impress upon Congress, and especially Finance Committee, that repeal of the sweet-wine law will add only a paltry sum to internal revenues; the imposition of tax of $1.10 would be practically prohibitive, and while a little wine might be made and sold at very high prices, the bulk of our business would be lost and the Government would fail to get its revenue; would be impossible to compete with foreign wines fortified with free brandy. San Joaquin County has 40,000 acres of grapes affected by sweet-wine industry; tax would amount to $25 per ton on grapes, which would be fatal to the industry. The sweet vineyards of this State have been planted under the belief that brandy would continue to be subject only to a very nominal tax necessary to reimburse Government for its cost of gauging. You can appreciate the situation, and insist upon at least a proper hearing being accorded by the Finance Committee to the grape growers of California.

LODI, CAL., June 21, 1913.

Senator JOHN D. WORKS,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: Our business men and grape growers were astonished at the action of the Finance Committee of the United States Senate in introducing a measure in the Underwood tariff bill providing for the repeal of the sweet-wine law, and feeling the vital interest which this community has in the sweet-wine industry of this State, a mass meeting of the grape growers of this district was called at our theater today. We were again astonished at the tremendous response to our call and the size and magnitude of the meeting. The grape growers here are very much excited, as they all realize the disaster that threatens them should the sweet-wine law be repealed. The following resolutions were passed unanimously with great enthusiasm at the mass meeting, and we have been requested to forward them to you by wire:

"Whereas there are in this district more than 15,000 acres of wine grapes devoted to the manufacturing of sweet wines; and

"Whereas there are in this district more than 15,000 acres of table grapes, a large part of which are used in the production of California sweet wines; and

"Whereas we were induced to engage in the business of growing both table and wine grapes, believing that our outlet through the manufacture of sweet wines was assured by the passage of the sweet-wine bill of 1890: Be it

"Resolved by the grape growers of Lodi and northern San Joaquin County in mass meeting assembled, That we protest against the great injury which will be done to this community if our present sweet-wine law is repealed. It takes many years to bring a vineyard into bearing, and our investments represent at least $9,000,000. The revenue which will be derived by the United States Government is entirely overestimated in the Senate committee, because the amount of wine which would be produced under a tax of $1.10 as proposed would be very small."

We sincerely hope that your efforts in this matter will accomplish something and that our industry here will be protected.

Very respectfully, yours,

GRAPE GROWERS AND BUSINESS MEN OF LODI,
By C. E. LAWRENCE, Chairman.

Mr. NELSON presented a resolution adopted by sundry citizens of Duluth, Minn., property owners in the Isle of Pines, West Indies, favoring the retention by the United States of the sovereignty over the Isle of Pines, which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. GALLINGER presented petitions of the Audubon Society of Bridgeport, Conn.; Augusta M. Kennedy, of Whitman, Mass.; the California Associated Societies for the Conservation of Wild Life, of Berkeley, Cal.; the Wild Flower Club, of Concord, N. H.; the fish and game commissioners of Trenton, N. J.; the Board of Game Commissioners of Harrisburg, Pa.; E. H. Jewett, of Detroit, Mich.; and from Elsa Tudor de Pierrefeu, of Lakeside, Mich., praying for the adoption of the clause in Schedule N of the pending tariff bill, prohibiting the importation of the plumage of certain wild birds, which were referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also presented a petition of the Commercial Club of Watertown, S. Dak., praying for the exemption of commercial organizations not organized for profit from the operations of the income-tax clause of the pending tariff bill, which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I have received telegrams from the Chamber of Commerce of Stockton, Cal., and from the grape growers and business men of Lodi, Cal., relative to the proposed repeal of the sweet-wine law. I ask that the telegrams be printed in the RECORD and referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. NORRIS. I have received resolutions adopted by the Nebraska Association of Postmasters, recommending certain changes in the postal service. I ask that the resolutions be printed in the RECORD and referred to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads.

There being no objection, the resolutions were referred to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

RESOLUTIONS ADOPTED BY NEBRASKA ASSOCIATION OF POSTMASTERS.

The Nebraska Association of Postmasters, in its eleventh annual convention assembled, reiterates its purpose to be the betterment of and progress in the Nebraska postal service. To this end it pledges itself as an organized body and its individual members to exercise the utmost effort to the end that the standard of postal-service efficiency shall ever be raised, regardless of any change in the generalship under which we serve, and to the further end that we leave to our successors an organization that shall be a source of greatest possible aid to them, and that those who follow us individually may promptly and effectively take up the tasks with which we have hitherto been engaged. Pursuant to this, our definite aim, be it

Resolved, That the conviction repeatedly expressed by this organization, and reiterated in 1912, with reference to civil-service extension, still voices the opinion of this body. We are firmly persuaded that civil service should be extended to postmasters of all classes in manner similar to its recent application to fourth-class offices; and it is desired again to call the attention of the public and the press to the merits of such extension, not, however, without the emphatic declaration at this time that such extension should apply and can reasonably be expected to apply only to our successors. We recommend that after these shall have been appointed the general features of the German mayoralty system in connection with our own civil-service regulations be provided by Congress, eventually permitting the promotion of assistant postmasters, superintendents, railway and local clerks and carriers, upon merit and efficiency system purely, from the lowest to the highest position in the service.

Resolved, That both economy and accuracy in accounting suggest the utmost simplification of the stamp system possible rather than a multiplicity of designs and denominations, and that we respectfully convey to the department our conviction that parcel-post or other distinctive stamps should at least be issued in the same decimal-sheets form used as to first-class postage.

Resolved, That money-order fees be reduced to the same basis upon which other great systems of exchange are conducted.

Resolved, That we recommend the consolidation of the third with the present parcel-post class of mail.

Resolved, That we favor a reduction of the strictly local parcel-post rate.

BILLS AND A JOINT RESOLUTION INTRODUCED.

Bills and a joint resolution were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. SMITH of Maryland:

A bill (S. 2608) granting an increase of pension to Mary C. Whitson; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. NELSON:

A bill (S. 2609) to amend an act entitled "An act permitting the building of a dam across the Mississippi River at or near the village of Sauk Rapids, Benton County, Minn.," approved February 26, 1904; to the Committee on Commerce.

By Mr. PERKINS:

A bill (S. 2610) granting to the city and county of San Francisco certain rights of way in, over, and through certain public lands, the Yosemite National Park, and Stanislaus National Forest, and certain lands in the Yosemite National Park, the Stanislaus National Forest, and the public lands in the State of California, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Public Lands.

By Mr. BRADLEY:

A bill (S. 2611) to carry out the findings of the Court of Claims in the cases of Louis Landram, administrator of William J. Landram, deceased, and the legal representatives of James Harvey Dennis; and

A bill (S. 2612) to carry out the findings of the Court of Claims in the cases herein enumerated by payment of the several sums mentioned to those named herein; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. BURTON:

A bill (S. 2613) for the relief of Marian E. Gibbon; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. JONES:

A bill (S. 2614) granting a pension to William M. Swart; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. CHAMBERLAIN:

A bill (S. 2615) granting an increase of pension to William A. Custer (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. SWANSON:

A bill (S. 2616) to promote the efficiency of the Public Health Service; to the Committee on Public Health and National Quarantine.

By Mr. JONES:

A joint resolution (S. J. Res. 51) authorizing the delivering to the Dan McCook Post, No. 105, Grand Army of the Republic, at Wenatchee, Wash., of one condemned bronze or brass cannon or fieldpiece and a suitable outfit of cannon balls; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

RAILROADS IN ALASKA.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The morning business is closed.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I ask unanimous consent for the consideration of the bill (S. 48) to authorize the President of the United States to locate, construct, and operate railroads in the Territory of Alaska, and for other purposes.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there any objection? The Chair hears none, and——

Mr. OVERMAN. Let the bill be read.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be read for the information of the Senate.

Mr. OVERMAN. Before unanimous consent is given I should like to hear the bill read.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be read.

The SECRETARY. The Committee on Territories report to strike out all after the enacting clause of the bill and to insert:

That the President of the United States is hereby authorized and directed to cause to be located such main lines for railroads from points on tidewater to the interior as will, in his judgment, best promote the settlement of Alaska, develop its resources, and provide adequate and suitable transportation for coal for the Army, Navy, and other Government services; of troops, arms, and munitions of war; of the mails, and for other Government and public uses, together with such branch lines, feeders, sidings, switches, and spurs as he may deem necessary; and when such line or lines are located he is hereby authorized to cause to be constructed, completed, equipped, and operated thereon (until otherwise provided by Congress) a railroad or railroads, with the necessary equipment, docks, wharves, and terminal facilities: Provided, That the President may cause said road or roads to be operated by contract or lease, but no contract or lease shall be for a longer period than 10 years.

SEC. 2. That to enable the President to construct and operate the railroad or railroads and works appurtenant and necessary thereto, as provided in this act, he is hereby authorized to employ, in the ascertainment of the location of said railroad lines and in the construction, completion, equipment, and operation of the same, any of the engineers of the United States Army, at his discretion, and likewise to employ any engineers in civil life, at his discretion, and such other persons as he may deem necessary for the proper and expeditious prosecution of said work. The duties, powers, and compensation of such engineers and other persons employed under this act shall be fixed by the President. The official salary of any official appointed or employed under this act shall be deducted from the amount of salary or compensation provided for or which shall be fixed under the terms of this act. The officers or other persons placed in charge of the work by the President shall make to the President annually and at such other periods as may be required by the President or by either House of Congress full and complete reports of all their acts and doings and of all money received and expended in the construction of said work and in the operation of said work or works, and in the performance of their duties in connection therewith. The annual reports herein provided for shall be by the President transmitted to Congress. The President may acquire, by purchase or condemnation, all property he may deem necessary for the purpose of carrying out the provisions of this act, and he may exercise in the name of the United States the power of eminent domain in the courts of Alaska in accordance with the laws now or hereafter in force for that purpose. A right of way over the lands of the United States in Alaska shall be acquired for such railway lines upon filing in the General Land Office a map or maps approved by the President showing the line of the railroad or railroads and the boundaries of the lands reserved for such road or roads, and the President may, in this manner or otherwise, make reservation of such lands as are or may be useful for furnishing materials for construction and for stations, terminals, docks, and for such other purposes in connection with the construction and operation of such railroad lines as he may deem necessary and desirable; and he may utilize in carrying on the work herein provided for any and all machinery, equipment, instruments, material, and other property of any sort whatsoever used or acquired in connection with the construction of the Panama Canal, so far and as rapidly as the same is no longer needed at Panama; and the said Isthmian Canal Commission is hereby authorized to deliver said property to such officers or persons as the President may designate, and to take credit therefor at such percentage of its original cost as the President may approve, but this amount shall not be charged against the fund provided for in section 5 of this act.

SEC. 3. Subject to the approval of the President the Interstate Commerce Commission shall have the power to fix, change, and modify rates for the transportation of freight and passengers on any railroad or railroads constructed and operated under the provisions of this act, which rates shall be the same to all.

No free transportation or passes shall be permitted and no discrimination as to rates shall be made in favor of the Government or its officers or agents: Provided, That the provisions of the interstate commerce laws relating to the transportation of employees and their families shall be in force as to lines constructed under this act.

SEC. 4. That any line of railroad designated and constructed under the provisions of this act may connect with the line of any railroad existing or which may hereafter be constructed in Alaska, or with any steamship line for joint transportation of freight and passengers, and in such case the lines thus connected shall be operated as a through route with through rates upon a fair and reasonable apportionment of revenue and expenses.

SEC. 5. That the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized to borrow, on the credit of the United States, from time to time, as the proceeds may be required to defray expenditures authorized by this act (such proceeds when received to be used only for the purpose of meeting such expenditure, the sum of $40,000,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, and to prepare and issue therefor coupon or registered bonds of the United States, in such form as he may prescribe, and in denominations of $20 or some multiple of that sum, redeemable in gold coin at the pleasure of the United States after 10 years from the date of their issue, and payable 30 years from such date, and bearing interest, payable quarterly in gold coin, at the rate of 3 per cent per annum; and the bonds herein authorized shall be exempt from all taxes or duties of the United States, as well as from taxation in any form by or under State, municipal, or local authority: Provided, That said bonds may be disposed of by the Secretary of the Treasury at not less than par, under such regulations as he may prescribe, giving to all the citizens of the United States an equal opportunity to subscribe therefor, but no commissions shall be allowed or paid thereon, and there is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $1,000,000, to be used for carrying out the provisions of this act, including the expense of preparing, advertising, and issuing the bonds herein authorized, to continue available until expended: Provided, That so much of the said sum of $1,000,000 as shall have been expended shall be reimbursed to the Treasury out of the first proceeds of the sale of said bonds.

SEC. 6. That there is hereby created a redemption fund in the United States Treasury, to be known as the "Alaska railways redemption fund," into which shall be paid 75 per cent of all moneys derived from the sale or disposal of any of the public lands in Alaska, or the coal or mineral contents thereof, or the timber thereon, and into which fund shall be paid the net earnings of said railroad or railroads above maintenance charges and operating expenses; the said redemption fund, or any part thereof, may be used from time to time, upon the order of the President, to pay the interest on the bonds authorized and issued under the provisions of this act, and to redeem, cancel, and retire said bonds, under such rules and regulations as the President may establish.

SEC. 7. That it is the intent of this act to authorize and empower the President to do any and all things necessary to carry out and accomplish the purposes of this act.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, I feel compelled to object to the consideration of the bill, because it involves the Government ownership of railroads and a large expenditure of money. I think it ought to be considered at another time. I hope the Senator from Oregon will not insist upon the consideration of the bill now. It is one of the most important measures that can possibly come before the Senate.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Mr. President, it is for that very reason I asked that the bill might be considered. I will say that if the Senate will consent to the consideration of the bill now neither I nor any of the friends of the measure would have it interfere with the business for which this session of Congress was convened, and we would be glad to lay it aside at any time when other matters were pressing for consideration.

I may say in this connection, Mr. President, that the Committee on Territories of the Senate has had this bill under consideration for more than a month; it has given extensive hearings to all parties interested, not only private interests, but officials of the Government as well, and the report on the subject is printed and is accessible to all Members. I think the report will furnish all the information necessary for an intelligent consideration of the measure.

I believe I can safely say, without violating any confidence, that the President of the United States himself, while not committed to any bill, favors the construction of a railroad in Alaska by the Government of the United States, and, in a communication received by the Committee on Territories from the Secretary of the Interior, he expresses his full approval of a measure which will authorize the construction of a railroad into Alaska by the Government.

I know, Mr. President, that there are Senators and there are Representatives who do not approve of the Government construction of railroads in Alaska or elsewhere, but I think it is proper for me to say that Alaska is sui generis. It has practically been bottled up from development by the Congress of the United States and by the Executive by the creation of different sorts of reserves, so that private capital has not been invested in Alaska as it ought to be. To some of us at least it seems that for the development of this magnificent empire, the gold and mineral storehouse of the United States, Government assistance and action will be absolutely necessary.

Mr. President, while, as I said, there are Members of Congress who oppose the construction by the Government of a railroad in Alaska, it is not essentially different from the course which the Government has pursued in days gone by. While it is true the Government itself has not constructed a railroad in any part of the country, nevertheless, Mr. President, vast areas of the public domain have been granted to railway corporations for the construction of railroads; and if the United States itself, instead of granting lands to the Northern Pacific, the Union Pacific, the Central Pacific, and other great railway corporations in the country, had saved the lands and expended the moneys which might have been realized from their sale the Government might have sold the land for more than enough to have constructed those or any other railroads in the country.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, will the Senator permit me?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I yield to the Senator from New Hampshire.

Mr. GALLINGER. I desire to ask the Senator from Oregon if this report was unanimously agreed to by the Committee on Territories.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I will say that it was, so far as the quorum present was concerned. There were a few members who were not able to be there on account of other business.

Mr. GALLINGER. I do not find that any minority report has been filed.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. There is no minority report. I will state that the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. NELSON], the Senator from Montana [Mr. WALSH], and possibly one or two others were engaged on other committee work and they would have preferred to have been heard, but they have filed no protest or minority report.

Now, Mr. President, as I said a while ago, in view of the fact that Alaska is practically owned by the Government of the United States, in view of the fact that it contains the coal reserve for the Government, which, in case of trouble, must be utilized by the Government itself for the proper equipping of our Navy, in view of the fact that efforts have been made to acquire valuable mineral deposits in that country by private interests, it seems to me that, owning it as it does, the Government itself ought to enter upon the construction of a railroad in Alaska.

I do hope, Mr. President, in view of the importance of this measure, that the Senate will at this time give consent that the bill may be taken up for consideration. I promise that at any time I will gladly lay it aside for the consideration of the other important bills which the Senate will have to consider.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President, being a member of the Committee on Territories, from which this bill was reported, I beg leave to state that while I have filed no minority report, I was not present when the bill was agreed to be reported by the majority of the committee, and though I am in favor of giving Alaska aid to a reasonable extent in building railroads, I am utterly opposed to the Government embarking upon the construction and operation of railroads. Therefore, I am opposed to the bill in its present form; but I am not opposed to giving the people of Alaska reasonable and proper aid in securing railroads in that country. However, this is an entirely new proposition, involving the expenditure of $30,000,000 by the Government in building a road in a country as large as Alaska.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I ask if the morning business has been concluded.

The VICE PRESIDENT. It has.

Mr. OVERMAN. I believe I objected to the consideration of the bill, and all debate is out of order, I think.

Mr. LODGE. Yes; it is. I ask for the regular order.

Mr. BRISTOW. I beg the Senator's pardon; I understood that unanimous consent was given for the consideration of the bill.

Mr. OVERMAN. I only gave consent with the understanding that I would first hear the bill read, and then I would object. That was the understanding. After the bill had been read I interposed an objection. So unanimous consent was not given.

The VICE PRESIDENT. There is objection to the present consideration of the bill.

Mr. BRISTOW. Do I understand that the Senator from North Carolina objects to its consideration?

Mr. OVERMAN. Yes; I object to its present consideration.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The calendar under Rule VIII is in order.

ASSIGNMENT OF DISTRICT JUDGES.

Mr. O'GORMAN. I ask unanimous consent for the consideration of an emergency bill. It is the bill (S. 2254) to amend chapter 1, section 18, of the Judicial Code. There is a great accumulation of business in the Federal Court for the Southern District of New York, in the city of New York, owing to the insufficient number of judges. There is no request for an increase of judges, but the bill provides that the Chief Justice of the Supreme Court, on the request of the senior circuit judge in any circuit, may assign a justice from another circuit to hold court for a limited time. I ask that the bill may be considered.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from New York asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill which he has indicated. It will be read.

The Secretary read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That chapter 1, section 18, of the Judicial Code be amended by adding thereto the following:

"Whenever it shall be certified by any senior circuit judge of any circuit, or, in his absence, by the circuit justice of the circuit in which the district lies, that on account of the accumulation or urgency of business in any district court in said circuit it is impracticable to designate and appoint a sufficient number of district judges of other districts within the circuit to relieve such accumulation or urgency of business, the Chief Justice may, if in his judgment the public interests so require, designate and appoint the judge of any district court in another circuit to hold a district court, and to have and exercise within the district to which he is so assigned the same powers that are vested in the judge thereof: Provided, That such judge so designated and appointed shall have consented, in writing, to such designation and appointment: And provided further, That the senior circuit judge of the circuit within which such judge so designated and appointed resides shall certify, in writing, that the business of the district of such judge will not suffer thereby. Such appointment shall be filed in the clerk's office and entered on the minutes of the said district court, and a certified copy thereof, under the seal of the court, shall be transmitted by the clerk to the judge so designated and appointed. Each of the said district judges may, in the case of such appointment, hold separately, at the same time, a district court in such district, and discharge all of the judicial duties of the district judge therein."

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. O'GORMAN. I may say, Mr. President, that the Judiciary Committee has unanimously recommended the passage of this bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair hears no objection to the request for the present consideration of the bill.

Mr. REED. What is the bill, Mr. President? It has been impossible on this side of the Chamber to hear what has been going on.

Mr. O'GORMAN. The bill provides that whenever there be an accumulation of business in any circuit and the local judges are not able to cope with it, the Chief Justice of the Supreme Court may, on the request of the senior judge of the circuit, appoint a district judge from some other circuit to hold court for a limited time.

Mr. REED. In the circuit court or the district court?

Mr. O'GORMAN. In the district court.

Mr. REED. That he shall designate a circuit judge or a district judge?

Mr. O'GORMAN. A district judge. It requires the approval of the senior circuit judge in each of the two circuits and then the approval of the Chief Justice of the Supreme Court. The bill has been very carefully considered by the entire Judiciary Committee and has its approval.

Mr. REED. When was this bill before the committee?

Mr. O'GORMAN. Some weeks since. There is a crying urgency for this relief at the present time.

Mr. REED. I was not present at the meeting of the committee when the bill was considered.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. REED. There may not be, if the Vice President will be patient just a moment. [A pause.]

Mr. O'GORMAN. Mr. President, I understand there is no objection to the consideration of the bill.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. I enter a motion to reconsider the votes by which the bill which has just been passed was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, so as to leave the bill on the calendar until I can look into it.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The motion of the Senator from Arkansas will be entered.

PRESIDENT'S ADDRESS—PROPOSED CURRENCY LEGISLATION.

Mr. KERN (at 12 o'clock and 25 minutes p. m.). Mr. President, I move that the Senate repair to the Hall of the House of Representatives in accordance with the terms of the concurrent resolution heretofore agreed to.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Indiana moves that the Senate repair to the Hall of the House of Representatives.

The motion was agreed to.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Sergeant at Arms will carry out the order of the Senate.

Thereupon the Senate, headed by the Sergeant at Arms and the Assistant Doorkeeper, and preceded by the Vice President and the Secretary of the Senate, proceeded to the Hall of the House of Representatives.

The Senate returned to its Chamber at 1 o'clock and 15 minutes p. m.

The address of the President of the United States, this day delivered to both Houses of Congress, is as follows:

Mr. Speaker, Mr. President, gentlemen of the Congress, it is under the compulsion of what seems to me a clear and imperative duty that I have a second time this session sought the privilege of addressing you in person. I know, of course, that the heated season of the year is upon us, that work in these Chambers and in the committee rooms is likely to become a burden as the season lengthens, and that every consideration of personal convenience and personal comfort, perhaps, in the cases of some of us, considerations of personal health even, dictate an early conclusion of the deliberations of the session; but there are occasions of public duty when these things which touch us privately seem very small; when the work to be done is so pressing and so fraught with big consequence that we know that we are not at liberty to weigh against it any point of personal sacrifice. We are now in the presence of such an occasion. It is absolutely imperative that we should give the business men of this country a banking and currency system by means of which they can make use of the freedom of enterprise and of individual initiative which we are about to bestow upon them.

We are about to set them free; we must not leave them without the tools of action when they are free. We are about to set them free by removing the trammels of the protective tariff. Ever since the Civil War they have waited for this emancipation and for the free opportunities it will bring with it. It has been reserved for us to give it to them. Some fell in love, indeed, with the slothful security of their dependence upon the Government; some took advantage of the shelter of the nursery to set up a mimic mastery of their own within its walls. Now both the tonic and the discipline of liberty and maturity are to ensue. There will be some readjustments of purpose and point of view. There will follow a period of expansion and new enterprise, freshly conceived. It is for us to determine now whether it shall be rapid and facile and of easy accomplishment. This it can not be unless the resourceful business men who are to deal with the new circumstances are to have at hand and ready for use the instrumentalities and conveniences of free enterprise which independent men need when acting on their own initiative.

It is not enough to strike the shackles from business. The duty of statesmanship is not negative merely. It is constructive also. We must show that we understand what business needs and that we know how to supply it. No man, however casual and superficial his observation of the conditions now prevailing in the country, can fail to see that one of the chief things business needs now, and will need increasingly as it gains in scope and vigor in the years immediately ahead of us, is the proper means by which readily to vitalize its credit, corporate and individual, and its originative brains. What will it profit us to be free if we are not to have the best and most accessible instrumentalities of commerce and enterprise? What will it profit us to be quit of one kind of monopoly if we are to remain in the grip of another and more effective kind? How are we to gain and keep the confidence of the business community unless we show that we know how both to aid and to protect it? What shall we say if we make fresh enterprise necessary and also make it very difficult by leaving all else except the tariff just as we found it? The tyrannies of business, big and little, lie within the field of credit. We know that. Shall we not act upon the knowledge? Do we not know how to act upon it? If a man can not make his assets available at pleasure, his assets of capacity and character and resource, what satisfaction is it to him to see opportunity beckoning to him on every hand, when others have the keys of credit in their pockets and treat them as all but their own private possession? It is perfectly clear that it is our duty to supply the new banking and currency system the country needs, and it will need it immediately more than it has ever needed it before.

The only question is, When shall we supply it—now, or later, after the demands shall have become reproaches that we were so dull and so slow? Shall we hasten to change the tariff laws and then be laggards about making it possible and easy for the country to take advantage of the change? There can be only one answer to that question. We must act now, at whatever sacrifice to ourselves. It is a duty which the circumstances forbid us to postpone. I should be recreant to my deepest convictions of public obligation did I not press it upon you with solemn and urgent insistence.

The principles upon which we should act are also clear. The country has sought and seen its path in this matter within the last few years—sees it more clearly now than it ever saw it before—much more clearly than when the last legislative proposals on the subject were made. We must have a currency, not rigid as now, but readily, elastically responsive to sound credit, the expanding and contracting credits of everyday transactions, the normal ebb and flow of personal and corporate dealings. Our banking laws must mobilize reserves; must not permit the concentration anywhere in a few hands of the monetary resources of the country or their use for speculative purposes in such volume as to hinder or impede or stand in the way of other more legitimate, more fruitful uses. And the control of the system of banking and of issue which our new laws are to set up must be public, not private, must be vested in the Government itself, so that the banks may be the instruments, not the masters, of business and of individual enterprise and initiative.

The committees of the Congress to which legislation of this character is referred have devoted careful and dispassionate study to the means of accomplishing these objects. They have honored me by consulting me. They are ready to suggest action. I have come to you, as the head of the Government and the responsible leader of the party in power, to urge action now, while there is time to serve the country deliberately and as we should, in a clear air of common counsel. I appeal to you with a deep conviction of duty. I believe that you share this conviction. I therefore appeal to you with confidence. I am at your service without reserve to play my part in any way you may call upon me to play it in this great enterprise of exigent reform which it will dignify and distinguish us to perform and discredit us to neglect.

DIFFERENCES BETWEEN RAILWAY COMPANIES AND EMPLOYEES.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Mr. President, are reports from committees in order?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The morning business has closed. If there be no objection, however, the report will be received out of order.

Mr. NEWLANDS. In behalf of the Committee on Interstate Commerce, I make a favorable report upon the bill (S. 2517) providing for mediation, conciliation, and arbitration in controversies between certain employers and their employees, the members of the committee reserving the right to offer amendments on the floor.

I will state, Mr. President, in connection with this report that the bill presented has the sanction of the various brotherhoods connected with the employees of the railways of the country and of the Civic Federation and the railway managers. It has also the approval of Judge Knapp, presiding judge of the Commerce Court, and of Mr. Neill, the former Commissioner of Labor, who figured so conspicuously in labor disputes between the railway companies and their employees.

The members of the committee, in view of the preparations that are being made for a strike regarding differences between the railroad companies and their employees, thought it of the highest importance that this effort of the parties interested to arrange a method of conciliation and arbitration should receive the immediate sanction of Congress, and that the methods selected by the parties interested should be adopted, unless they were in conflict with the public good.

I will state that the Secretary of Labor, Mr. Wilson, whilst in sympathy with the general purposes of the bill, has suggested certain amendments, and those amendments will be taken up within a day or two under the auspices of the Civic Federation by the employees and the managers of the railways in consultation with Secretary Wilson.

The view of the railway employees seems to be—and they are very fixed and determined in that view—that the board of mediation and conciliation should not be attached to any department. They fear that political complications may in some way arise in the future, though they have the highest confidence in the man who now presides over the Department of Labor, and they desire these matters to be under the jurisdiction of an independent board, just as Congress has seen fit to give the jurisdiction relating to railroad rates of freight and fare to an independent commission not connected with any department. That is the sole question of difference, I believe, between the Secretary of Labor and the railway employees.

I imagine that within a few days this matter will be adjusted, I hope to the satisfaction of all, and I shall urge at an early day the consideration of this bill. It is hoped in case any amendments are desired by the railway employees that they will be presented at an early date; otherwise it might be advisable to pass the bill in the Senate immediately and have it go to the House, where a similar bill has been presented to the Judiciary Committee of that body, and where all questions of difference between the Secretary of Labor and the railway employees may be thrashed out.

I will state further, Mr. President, that at an early day I shall file a report upon this bill.

I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD the authorization to report and the bill as reported by the committee.

There being no objection, the authorization of the committee and the bill were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

UNITED STATES SENATE, COMMITTEE ON INTERSTATE COMMERCE,
June 23, 1913.

The undersigned, members of the Committee on Interstate Commerce, hereby authorize a favorable report on Senate bill No. 2517, providing for mediation, conciliation, and arbitration in controversies between certain employers and their employees, reserving the right to offer amendments on the floor.

A bill (S. 2517) providing for mediation, conciliation, and arbitration in controversies between certain employers and their employees.

Be it enacted, etc., That the provisions of this act shall apply to any common carrier or carriers and their officers, agents, and employees, except masters of vessels and seamen, as defined in section 4612, Revised Statutes of the United States, engaged in the transportation of passengers or property wholly by railroad, or partly by railroad and partly by water, for a continuous carriage or shipment from one State or Territory of the United States or the District of Columbia to any other State or Territory of the United States or the District of Columbia, or from any place in the United States to an adjacent foreign country, or from any place in the United States through a foreign country to any other place in the United States.

The term "railroad" as used in this act shall include all bridges and ferries used or operated in connection with any railroad, and also all the road in use by any corporation operating a railroad, whether owned or operated under a contract, agreement, or lease; and the term "transportation" shall include all instrumentalities of shipment or carriage.

The term "employees" as used in this act shall include all persons actually engaged in any capacity in train operation or train service of any description, and notwithstanding that the cars upon or in which they are employed may be held and operated by the carrier under lease or other contract: Provided, however, That this act shall not be held to apply to employees of street railroads and shall apply only to employees engaged in railroad train service. In every such case the carrier shall be responsible for the acts and defaults of such employees in the same manner and to the same extent as if said cars were owned by it and said employees directly employed by it, and any provisions to the contrary of any such lease or other contract shall be binding only as between the parties thereto and shall not affect the obligations of said carrier either to the public or to the private parties concerned.

A common carrier subject to the provisions of this act is hereinafter referred to as an "employer," and the employees of one or more of such carriers are hereinafter referred to as "employees."

SEC. 2. That whenever a controversy concerning wages, hours of labor, or conditions of employment shall arise between an employer or employers and employees subject to this act interrupting or threatening to interrupt the business of said employer or employers to the serious detriment of the public interest, either party to such controversy may apply to the board of mediation and conciliation created by this act and invoke its services for the purpose of bringing about an amicable adjustment of the controversy; and upon the request of either party the said board shall with all practicable expedition put itself in communication with the parties to such controversy and shall use its best efforts, by mediation and conciliation, to bring them to an agreement; and if such efforts to bring about an amicable adjustment through mediation and conciliation shall be unsuccessful, the said board shall at once endeavor to induce the parties to submit their controversy to arbitration in accordance with the provisions of this act.

In any case in which an interruption of traffic is imminent and fraught with serious detriment to the public interest, the board of mediation and conciliation may, if in its judgment such action seem desirable, proffer its services to the respective parties to the controversy.

In any case in which a controversy arises over the meaning or the application of any agreement reached through mediation under the provisions of this act either party to the said agreement may apply to the board of mediation and conciliation for an expression of opinion from such board as to the meaning or application of such agreement and the said board shall upon receipt of such request give its opinion as soon as may be practicable.

SEC. 3. That whenever a controversy shall arise between an employer or employers and employees subject to this act, which can not be settled through mediation and conciliation in the manner provided in the preceding section, such controversy may be submitted to the arbitration of a board of six, or, if the parties to the controversy prefer so to stipulate, to a board of three persons, which board shall be chosen in the following manner: In the case of a board of three, the employer or employers and the employees, parties respectively to the agreement to arbitrate, shall each name one arbitrator; and the two arbitrators thus chosen shall select the third arbitrator; but in the event of their failure to name the third arbitrator within five days after their first meeting, such third arbitrator shall be named by the board of mediation and conciliation. In the case of a board of six, the employer or employers and the employees, parties respectively to the agreement to arbitrate, shall each name two arbitrators, and the four arbitrators thus chosen shall, by a majority vote, select the remaining two arbitrators; but in the event of their failure to name the two arbitrators within 15 days after their first meeting, the said two arbitrators, or as many of them as have not been named, shall be named by the board of mediation and conciliation.

In the event that the employees engaged in any given controversy are not members of a labor organization, such employees may select a committee which shall have the right to name the arbitrator, or the arbitrators, who are to be named by the employees as provided above in this section.

SEC. 4. That the agreement to arbitrate—

First. Shall be in writing;

Second. Shall stipulate that the arbitration is had under the provisions of this act;

Third. Shall state whether the board of arbitration is to consist of three or six members;

Fourth. Shall be signed by duly accredited representatives of the employer or employers and of the employees;

Fifth. Shall state specifically the questions to be submitted to the said board for decision;

Sixth. Shall stipulate that a majority of said board shall be competent to make a valid and binding award;

Seventh. Shall fix a period from the date of the appointment of the arbitrator or arbitrators necessary to complete the board, as provided for in the agreement, within which the said board shall commence its hearings;

Eighth. Shall fix a period from the beginning of the hearings within which the said board shall make and file its award: Provided, That this period shall be 30 days unless a different period be agreed to;

Ninth. Shall provide for the date from which the award shall become effective and shall fix the period during which the said award shall continue in force;

Tenth. Shall provide that the respective parties to the award will each faithfully execute the same;

Eleventh. Shall provide that the award and the papers and proceedings, including the testimony relating thereto, certified under the hands of the arbitrators, and which shall have the force and effect of a bill of exceptions, shall be filed in the clerk's office of the district court of the United States for the district wherein the controversy arises or the arbitration is entered into, and shall be final and conclusive upon the parties to the agreement unless set aside for error of law apparent on the record;

Twelfth. May also provide that any difference arising as to the meaning or the application of the provisions of an award made by a board of arbitration shall be referred back to the same board or to a subcommittee of such board for a ruling, which ruling shall have the same force and effect as the original award; and if any member of the original board is unable or unwilling to serve another arbitrator shall be named in the same manner as such original member was named.

SEC. 5. That for the purposes of this act the arbitrators herein provided for, or either of them, shall have power to administer oaths and affirmations, sign subpœnas, require the attendance and testimony of witnesses, and the production of such books, papers, contracts, agreements, and documents material to a just determination of the matters under investigation as may be ordered by the court; and may invoke the aid of the United States courts to compel witnesses to attend and testify and to produce such books, papers, contracts, agreements, and documents to the same extent and under the same conditions and penalties as is provided for in the act to regulate commerce, approved February 4, 1887, and the amendments thereto.

SEC. 6. That every agreement of arbitration under this act shall be acknowledged by the parties thereto before a notary public or a clerk of the district or the circuit court of appeals of the United States, or before a member of the board of mediation and conciliation, the members of which are hereby authorized to take such acknowledgments; and when so acknowledged shall be delivered to a member of said board or transmitted to said board to be filed in its office.

When such agreement of arbitration has been filed with the said board, or one of its members, and when the said board, or a member thereof, has been furnished the names of the arbitrators chosen by the respective parties to the controversy, the board, or a member thereof, shall cause a notice in writing to be served upon the said arbitrators, notifying them of their appointment, requesting them to meet promptly to name the remaining arbitrator or arbitrators necessary to complete the board, and advising them of the period within which, as provided in the agreement of arbitration, they are empowered to name such arbitrator or arbitrators.

When the arbitrators selected by the respective parties have agreed upon the remaining arbitrator or arbitrators, they shall notify the board of mediation and conciliation; and in the event of their failure to agree upon any or upon all of the necessary arbitrators within the period fixed by this act they shall, at the expiration of such period, notify the board of mediation and conciliation of the arbitrators selected, if any, or of their failure to make or to complete such selection.

If the parties to an arbitration desire the reconvening of a board to pass upon any controversy arising over the meaning or application of an award, they shall jointly so notify the board of mediation and conciliation, and shall state in such written notice the question or questions to be submitted to such reconvened board. The board of mediation and conciliation shall thereupon promptly communicate with the members of the board of arbitration, or a subcommittee of such board appointed for such purpose pursuant to the provisions of the agreement of arbitration, and arrange for the reconvening of said board or subcommittee, and shall notify the respective parties to the controversy of the time and place at which the board will meet for hearings upon the matters in controversy to be submitted to it.

SEC. 7. That the board of arbitration shall organize and select its own chairman and make all necessary rules for conducting its hearings; but in its award or awards the said board shall confine itself to findings or recommendations as to the questions specifically submitted to it or matters directly bearing thereon. All testimony before said board shall be given under oath or affirmation, and any member of the board of arbitration shall have the power to administer oaths or affirmations. It may employ such assistants as may be necessary in carrying on its work. It shall, whenever practicable, be supplied with suitable quarters in any Federal building located at its place of meeting or at any place where the board may adjourn for its deliberations. The board of arbitration shall furnish a copy of its award to the respective parties to the controversy, and shall transmit the original, together with the papers and proceedings and a transcript of the testimony taken at the hearings, certified under the hands of the arbitrators, to the board of mediation and conciliation, to be filed in its office. The clerk of any court of the United States in which awards or other papers or documents have been filed by boards of arbitration in accordance with the provisions of the act approved June 1, 1898, providing for mediation and arbitration, is hereby authorized to turn over to the board of mediation and conciliation, upon its request, such awards, documents, and papers. The United States Commerce Court, the Interstate Commerce Commission, and the Bureau of Labor are hereby authorized to turn over to the Board of Mediation and Conciliation, upon its request, any papers and documents heretofore filed with them and bearing upon mediation or arbitration proceedings held under the provisions of said act.

SEC. 8. That the award, being filed in the clerk's office of a district court of the United States as hereinbefore provided, shall go into practical operation, and judgment shall be entered thereon accordingly at the expiration of 10 days from such filing, unless within such 10 days either party shall file exceptions thereto for matter of law apparent upon the record, in which case said award shall go into practical operation and judgment be entered accordingly when such exceptions shall have been finally disposed of either by said district court or on appeal therefrom.

At the expiration of 10 days from the decision of the district court upon exceptions taken to said award as aforesaid, judgment shall be entered in accordance with said decision, unless during said 10 days either party shall appeal therefrom to the circuit court of appeals. In such case only such portion of the record shall be transmitted to the appellate court as is necessary to the proper understanding and consideration of the questions of law presented by said exceptions and to be decided.

The determination of said circuit court of appeals upon said questions shall be final, and, being certified by the clerk thereof to said district court, judgment pursuant thereto shall thereupon be entered by said district court.

If exceptions to an award are finally sustained, judgment shall be entered setting aside the award in whole or in part; but in such case the parties may agree upon a judgment to be entered disposing of the subject matter of the controversy, which judgment when entered shall have the same force and effect as judgment entered upon an award.

SEC. 9. That whenever receivers appointed by a Federal court are in the possession and control of the business of employers covered by this act the employees of such employers shall have the right to be heard through their representatives in such court upon all questions affecting the terms and conditions of their employment; and no reduction of wages shall be made by such receivers without the authority of the court therefor, after notice to such employees, said notice to be given not less than 20 days before the hearing upon the receivers' petition or application, and to be posted upon all customary bulletin boards along or upon the railway or in the customary places on the premises of other employers covered by this act.

SEC. 10. That each member of the board of arbitration created under the provisions of this act shall receive such compensation as may be fixed by the board of mediation and conciliation, together with his traveling and other necessary expenses. The sum of $25,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, is hereby appropriated, to be immediately available and to continue available until the close of the fiscal year ending June 30, 1914, for the necessary and proper expenses incurred in connection with any arbitration or with the carrying on of the work of mediation and conciliation, including per diem, traveling, and other necessary expenses of members or employees of boards of arbitration and rent in the District of Columbia, furniture, office fixtures and supplies, books, salaries, traveling expenses, and other necessary expenses of members or employees of the board of mediation and conciliation, to be approved by the chairman of said board and audited by the proper accounting officers of the Treasury.

SEC. 11. There shall be a commissioner of mediation and conciliation, who shall be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, and whose salary shall be $7,500 per annum, who shall hold his office for a term of seven years and until a successor qualifies, and who shall be removable by the President only for misconduct in office. The President shall also designate not more than two other officials of the Government who have been appointed by and with the advice and consent of the Senate; and the officials thus designated, together with the commissioner of mediation and conciliation, shall constitute a board to be known as the United States board of mediation and conciliation.

There shall also be an assistant commissioner of mediation and conciliation, who shall be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, and whose salary shall be $5,000 per annum. In the absence of the commissioner of mediation and conciliation, or when that office shall become vacant, the assistant commissioner shall exercise the functions and perform the duties of that office. Under the direction of the commissioner of mediation and conciliation, the assistant commissioner shall assist in the work of mediation and conciliation, and when acting alone in any case he shall have the right to take acknowledgments, receive agreements of arbitration, and cause the notices in writing to be served upon the arbitrators chosen by the respective parties to the controversy, as provided for in section 5 of this act.

The act of June 1, 1898, relating to the mediation and arbitration of controversies between railway companies and certain classes of their employees, is hereby repealed: Provided, That any agreement of arbitration which, at the time of the passage of this act, shall have been executed in accordance with the provisions of said act of June 1, 1898, shall be governed by the provisions of said act of June 1, 1898, and the proceedings thereunder shall be conducted in accordance with the provisions of said act.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be placed on the calendar.

DECISIONS OF UNITED STATES SUPREME COURT.

Mr. SHAFROTH. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of Senate resolution No. 103, which has heretofore been reported.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Colorado asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of Senate resolution No. 103, which the Secretary will read.

The Secretary read the resolution, as follows:

Resolved, That Senate resolution, adopted on the 20th day of February, 1885, providing for furnishing to Senators pamphlet printed copies of the decisions of the Supreme Court of the United States be, and the same is hereby, annulled.

Mr. SMOOT. I will ask the Senator to let the resolution go over to-day.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Objection is made. The resolution will go over.

ADJOURNMENT TO THURSDAY.

Mr. KERN. I move that when the Senate adjourns to-day it adjourn to meet on Thursday next at 2 o'clock in the afternoon.

The motion was agreed to.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. BACON. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to, and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After 15 minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened, and (at 1 o'clock and 40 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until Thursday, June 26, 1913, at 2 o'clock p. m.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

MONDAY, June 23, 1913.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D., offered the following prayer:

O righteous God, our heavenly Father, we bless Thee that we can come to Thee in prayer, detaching ourselves for the moment from the visible world, entering into the invisible; that we may commune with Thee, be strengthened, purified, ennobled, and passing from the mount of transfiguration down into the valley where with renewed zeal and energy we may do the work Thou hast given us to do, and receive Thy benediction; so receive us, so bless and guide us that we may be Thy servants now and always, in the spirit of the Master. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of Friday, June 20, 1913, was read and approved.

CONTESTED-ELECTION CASE—WILLIAM J. MACDONALD AGAINST H. OLIN YOUNG.

The SPEAKER. The House will be in order. The Chair will admonish the occupants of the galleries that they are there through the courtesy of the House; and a very little talk on the part of each one in the galleries makes a tremendous uproar down here upon the floor of the House.

The Chair lays before the House the following letter from the Clerk of the House, with accompanying documents.

The Clerk read as follows:

JUNE 23, 1913.

Hon. CHAMP CLARK,
Speaker of the House of Representatives.

SIR: I have the honor to lay before the House of Representatives the contest case of William J. MacDonald against H. Olin Young, twelfth district of Michigan, for a seat in the House of Representatives for the Sixty-third Congress of the United States, notice of which has been filed in the office of the Clerk of the House, and also transmit herewith all original testimony, papers, and documents relating thereto.

The Clerk has opened and printed the testimony in the above case. In compliance with the act approved March 2, 1907, entitled "An act relating to contested-election cases," such portions of the testimony in the above case as the parties in interest agreed upon or as seemed proper to the Clerk, after giving the requisite notices, have been printed and indexed, together with the notices of contest and the answers thereto, and such portions of the testimony as were not printed with the original papers have been sealed up and are ready to be laid before the Committee on Elections.

Two copies of the printed testimony in the case have been mailed to the contestant and the same number to the contestee.

SOUTH TRIMBLE,
Clerk of the House of Representatives.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk informs the Chair that there are about 500 copies of this evidence, and so forth, printed, and therefore there does not seem to be any necessity, unless some gentleman thinks there is, of printing any more copies; and the case is referred to the Committee on Elections No. 1.

SWEET WINES.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to print some telegrams in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from California [Mr. RAKER] asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, what is the matter the gentleman has?

Mr. RAKER. Telegrams in relation to the repeal of the sweet-wines law of 1890.

Mr. MURDOCK. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman tell us what he desires, as we can not hear him over here?

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman yield to the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. MURDOCK]?

Mr. RAKER. I do.

Mr. MURDOCK. I merely ask the gentleman to speak so we can hear him over here. The gentleman from Illinois asked the gentleman from California in regard to what he desired to extend his remarks, and the gentleman from California answered, but we could not hear him.

Mr. RAKER. I desire to extend my remarks by inserting some telegrams I have received from various associations, organizations, and so forth, of grape growers in California in relation to the tariff bill as it has now gone before the Senate caucus committee in reference to the repeal of the act of 1890 relative to sweet wines.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

The telegrams are as follows:

STOCKTON, CAL., June 21, 1913.

Hon. J. E. RAKER,
Congress Hall, Washington, D. C.:

Grape growers appalled at magnitude of disaster threatened by repeal of sweet-wine law. Please do all in your power to impress upon Congressmen, and especially Finance Committee, that repeal of the sweet-wine law will add only a paltry sum to internal revenues. The imposition of $1.10 would be practically prohibitive, and while a little wine might be made and sold at very high prices, the butt of our business would be lost, and the Government would fail to get its revenue; would be impossible to compete with foreign wines fortification with free brandy. San Joaquin County has 30,000 acres of grapes affected by sweet-wine industry. Tax would amount to $25 per ton on grapes, which would be fatal to the industry. The sweet-wine vineyards of this State have been planted under the belief that brandy would continue to be subject only to a very nominal tax, necessary to reimburse Government for its cost of gauging. You can appreciate the situation and insist upon at least a proper hearing being accorded by the Finance Committee to the grape growers of California.

STOCKTON CHAMBER OF COMMERCE,
By LOUIS S. WETMORE, President.
By JNO. P. IRISH, Jr., Acting Secretary.

SAN FRANCISCO, CAL., June 21, 1913.

Hon. JOHN E. RAKER,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.:

The proposed tax of $1.10 on brandy to fortify wines will vastly increase the cost and will positively decrease the consumption to a great extent. This will in reality constitute the confiscation of vineyards in California, as it will paralyze the industry, and the revenue to Government will therefore fall far below the estimated amount. We earnestly urge you to oppose the tax to utmost.

ITALIAN-SWISS COLONY.

LODI, CAL., June 21, 1913.

Hon. J. E. RAKER, M. C.,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: Our business men and grape growers were astonished at the action of the Finance Committee of the United States Senate in introducing a measure in the Underwood tariff bill providing for the repeal of the sweet-wine law; and feeling the vital interest which this community has in the sweet-wine industry of this State, a mass meeting of the grape growers of this district was called at our theater to-day. We were again astonished at the tremendous response to our call and of the size and magnitude of the meeting. The grape growers here are very much excited, as they all realize the disaster that threatens them should the sweet-wine law be repealed. The following resolutions were passed unanimously with great enthusiasm at the mass meeting, and we have been requested to forward them to you by wire:

"Whereas there are in this district more than 15,000 acres of wine grapes devoted to the manufacturing of sweet wines; and

"Whereas there are in this district more than 15,000 acres of table grapes, a large part of which are used in the production of California sweet wines; and

"Whereas we were induced to engage in the business of growing both table and wine grapes, believing that our outlet through the manufacture of sweet wines was assured by the passage of the sweet-wine bill of 1890: Be it

"Resolved by the grape growers of Lodi and northern San Joaquin County in mass meeting assembled, That we protest against the great injury which will be done to this community if our present sweet-wine law is repealed. It takes many years to bring a vineyard into bearing, and our investments represent at least $9,000,000. The revenue which will be derived by the United States Government is entirely overestimated in the Senate committee, because the amount of wine which would be produced under a tax of $1.10, as proposed, would be very small."

We sincerely hope that your efforts in this matter will accomplish something and that our industry here will be protected.

Very respectfully, yours,

GRAPE GROWERS AND BUSINESS MEN OF LODI,
By G. E. LAWRENCE, Chairman.

SAN FRANCISCO, CAL., June 21–22, 1913.

CLOVERDALE WINE CO.

SAN FRANCISCO, CAL., June 21, 1913.

Hon. J. E. RAKER,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.:

A tax of $1.10 on brandy used for fortification of sweet wines will increase their cost 150 per cent, curtailing consumption to an extent ruinous to the grape growers and winemen of California. The industry can not carry this burden and the Government will not be able to collect the estimated revenue. Earnestly appeal to you to oppose the imposition of this tax and save grape growers from loss of investment in their vineyards.

CALIFORNIA WINE ASSOCIATION.

SAN FRANCISCO, CAL., June 21, 1913.

Hon. JOHN E. RAKER,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.:

Amendment to Underwood bill which would repeal act of 1890 allowing use of free brandy in fortification of sweet wines would absolutely ruin California's vitacultural industry. It would make the cost of sweet-wine production so great that sale would fall off two-thirds and no sweet wine could be exported. As a result, cheap, inferior dry wines would be made in Sacramento and San Joaquin Valleys and counties south of Tehachapi, thus demoralizing the dry-wine production and lowering standard of our dry wines. Price of grapes would drop to nothing and thousands of acres of vines would be pulled up. Please talk over matter with other members of delegation and advise us.

GRAPE GROWERS' ASSOCIATION OF CALIFORNIA,
E. M. SHEEHAN, President.

MARSHALL ARNOLD.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. RUSSELL].

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by inserting a well written and a deserved tribute to the life, character, and memory of the late Hon. Marshall Arnold, written by his lifetime friend and neighbor, Albert de Reign.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Missouri asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD by inserting a tribute to the life, character, and memory of the late Hon. Marshall Arnold, written by Albert de Reign. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. Speaker, Mr. Arnold was formerly a Member of this House, serving in the Fifty-second and Fifty-third Congresses. He was one of Missouri's most brilliant sons, an able lawyer, a gifted orator, faithful to every trust, a noble character, and a true friend.

A TRIBUTE TO THE MEMORY OF MARSHALL ARNOLD, BY ALBERT DERREIGN.

"Hon. Marshall Arnold, ex-Congressman of the fourteenth congressional district of Missouri, and for 40 years one of the leading lawyers of southeast Missouri, after a lingering illness of about two years' duration, died at his home in Benton, Mo., on June 12, 1913.

"He was a native of St. Francois County, Mo., where he was born October 21, 1845. Elisha Arnold, his father, as well as his mother, were natives of Virginia. The early boyhood days of 'Marsh,' as he was familiarly called by his numerous friends and acquaintances, were spent upon his father's farm and in the acquirement of such rudimentary education as the country schools of that day afforded. While yet in his teens he served in the Confederate Army shortly before the close of the Civil War. After the close of the war he returned to farming and working in the mines of his native county for a short time, when he received an appointment as deputy circuit clerk of St. Francois County. He was also deputy county and probate clerk of said county. His father, Elisha Arnold, a man of marked integrity, held the office of sheriff and collector of St. Francois County, and he assisted him in that office about this period of his life.

"At an early age Marshall attended Arcadia College, which was at that time one of the leading educational institutions in the State, where he rapidly distinguished himself as a brilliant and hard-working student. He graduated with honor at the college, and became one of its instructors, holding the position of professor of mathematics until he severed his connection with the institution to enter other fields of endeavor.

"During the time that he held the office of deputy circuit clerk he was studying law in the office of Mr. Bush, at that time one of the leading lawyers of St. Francois County, and in 1870 Marshall obtained his license to practice law at the St. Francois County bar.

* * * * * * *

"His experience was that common to most young lawyers having little or no capital beyond their brains and ambition, and while waiting for the patronage of prospective clients and to enable him to meet the demands of his livelihood he taught school for a term or so. * * * He took up his residence at Commerce, at that time the county seat of Scott County. Here he soon attracted the favorable attention of the best citizens by his attractive personality, his scholarly attainments, his ability as a lawyer, his eloquence as a public speaker, and his all-round qualities for good citizenship. Joseph T. Anderson, one of the Democratic leaders in southeast Missouri, then holding the office of sheriff and collector, at once began to interest himself, his friends, and the public in behalf of the young lawyer, and but a short time elapsed when through his political influence Marsh was elected prosecuting attorney of Scott County. At this period in the history of Missouri, particularly the southeastern portion, public affairs were miserably out of joint. 'The body politic,' as George Vest would say, was having sores all over it. The country had just been subdued by the loyal legions of the North. When these had returned to their homes and laid down their arms there followed in their wake a swarm of cormorants, known as carpetbaggers, who in the name of the Republican Party took charge of the county government and made their headquarters at Commerce. They removed the county seat away from Benton, where it had been for 40 years, in fact ever since the organization of the county, and took it to Commerce. They sold the county's public lands and made way with the proceeds. Exorbitant taxes were exacted from the citizens, yet the treasury was habitually empty. County warrants were hawked about and sold for a few cents on the dollar. Persons who had been in the rebel army or who had sympathized with the late rebellion were disfranchised, their property looted, their peace destroyed by threats and intimidations.

"Gangs of horse and cattle thieves, murderous robbers, midnight assassins, thugs, and unscrupulous gamblers infested the western borders of the Mississippi River for hundreds of miles along its tortuous shores. It was during this abnormal condition of public affairs in the early seventies that the reform element under the ensign of the Democratic Party, with such leaders as Joe Anderson and Marsh Arnold, often at the risk of their lives, met in the public arena the forces of corruption battling under a grand old party that then ruled the country and swept them from the field of action. This defeat was so thorough that more than 40 years have elapsed and the said grand old party still suffers for the evils of its long-ago vanquished partisans.

"From the moment of his installation into the prosecuting attorney's office Marsh Arnold instituted a vigorous crusade against lawlessness. Gangs of horse thieves, who had regularly established stations for hundreds of miles up and down the Mississippi River, were ferreted out and sent to the penitentiary in droves. Murderers were tried, convicted, and hung. Many of those who had enriched themselves by looting the county's funds departed for other sections of the common country, and law and order assumed the reign over a county that had for several years suffered the tortures of a terrible nightmare of lawlessness and political and official corruption. It must not be assumed that this reform was brought about by ordinary effort. On the contrary, it required herculean powers to clean this Augean stable. It could not have been performed by other than such men as Marsh Arnold. 'It took the highest degree of courage, the greatest integrity, and the sublimest powers of oratorical persuasion to turn the corrupted, timid, and discouraged political tide back into the proper channels of orderly government. Numerous threats of bodily harm and death were openly and clandestinely conveyed to him to deter him from his vigorous prosecution of criminals. It is needless to say that all such agencies fell short of their purpose. It was thus developed to the law-abiding element of the county, to their agreeable surprise, that there was such a thing as government by the law, and that they had within their midst an avowed champion pledged to its enforcement with all the powers of a born leader of men.

"It is, perhaps, needless to add that the successful conduct of the prosecuting attorney's office, as indicated above, permanently established the fame of Marshall Arnold as a lawyer and advocate of the first rank. Clients flocked to his office from all directions. At the age of 35 years he had, perhaps, as great a clientage as any lawyer in the State. His services were eagerly and anxiously sought in important causes in Scott, Mississippi, Cape Girardeau, New Madrid, Pemiscot, Stoddard, and other counties in the southern end of the State. Not only were his legal services in great demand, but the charm of his eloquence as a public speaker was so infectious and had spread with such rapidity over a large section of the State that he constantly had to decline many importunities for addresses and political speeches for lack of time.

"He was one of the most powerful advocates before a jury or popular audience within the State. He had a voice of great volume and splendidly modulated, an incisive and distinct articulation, a naturally dignified posture, and the serious manner of his beginning an address, the magnetic flashes of his eyes as the whirlwind of his eloquence neared its zenith to end in a thunderous peroration often wrought like hypnotism upon his hearers. He was the most successful jury lawyer the writer ever knew. For many years, in jury trials, it was not a question before the local courts as to the merits of the case, but usually 'on which side is Marsh Arnold?' That settled it, for the fellow who got Marsh was sure going to win the case. This supremacy as a jury lawyer before the courts in southeast Missouri, for the last 30 years at least, I think is cheerfully conceded by all his confrères at the bar. With all this fame as a leader of his chosen profession, he was with all the personification of modesty and simplicity, and lived up to the high ethics of the profession of law to the admiration and emulation of the legal fraternity of his acquaintance. But he did not believe in Quixotic ethics, such as have been caricatured by humorous artists in personations of 'Alphonse and Gaston.' As an illustration of this I call to mind an incident which happened some years ago. Marsh was passing through the courthouse one day when a stranger stepped up to him and said:

"'Would you please tell me who is the best lawyer in Benton?'

"'Certainly,' replied Marsh. 'His name is Arnold.'

"'Would you kindly tell me where I can find him, for I have an important matter to submit to him?'

"'Certainly—you are talking to him right now.'

"After consulting with the stranger about his case, Marsh declined the employment. The stranger said he was sorry that he couldn't get him and asked for the next best lawyer in town. 'Here he comes now,' Marsh replied, as he good-humoredly introduced the writer and related what he had just told the stranger.

"In making this claim to first rank in his profession Marsh was simply saying of himself what he knew to be the judgment of a vast majority of the people of the community. In his active years of practice in the courts, as well as in his declining ones on account of ill health, he held the continuous respect and esteem of all members of the bar. He was the friend of the young and inexperienced lawyer making his first venture into the legal arena, and acts of assistance to such in the trials of their first cases are no doubt remembered by many. While somewhat reserved in his manner by nature, he was, nevertheless, one of the most companionable men with his associates. He was an interesting conversationalist upon all questions of human concern—historical, scientific, religious, political, literary, or forensic.

"He was by education and heredity a Democrat of the Jeffersonian type. Simple and unaffected in his habits, he enjoyed the society of the farmer, the artisan, and the common laborer. As a result of his interest in their welfare and the welfare of the county as a whole, as evidenced by the great reforms he had brought about as prosecuting attorney, he was at the age 32 elected a member of the Thirty-first General Assembly of Missouri in 1877 and reelected to the same body in 1879. As a legislator he immediately distinguished himself, both in important committee assignments and upon the floor of the house. His services as a member of the legislature brought him a State-wide acquaintance with the leading men of the State, and the many friends he made there among men who, like himself, afterwards distinguished themselves as Congressmen, United States Senators, governors, etc. In 1880 he declined further service in the legislature, but accepted the appointment of presidential elector of the fourteenth congressional district tendered him by his party in convention, on account of his distinguished qualifications as a party leader and popularity as a public speaker. He made a canvass of the entire district, one of the largest at that time in the State, consisting of 17 counties, and the result of his labors was evidenced by the tremendous majority his party received at the polls on the day of election. This success naturally furthered his ambition to enter the National Congress, and in 1884 he became a candidate for Congress before the Democratic convention. But the fourteenth district at that time had several ambitious and worthy sons who desired to serve their country in that distinguished office, and after a long and hotly contested convention, where each aspirant was long and loyally supported by his delegates, the choice fell to William Dawson, of New Madrid.

"In 1886 he was again enthusiastically put forward by his numerous friends for the same office, but the gods of war and of politics again handed the nomination to one of his rivals, James P. Walker, of Stoddard County. Finally, in 1889, his popularity had made such successful headway that he obtained the nomination almost unanimously and was elected by a good majority to the Fifty-second Congress and with a like good fortune to the Fifty-third in 1893. In 1894 he was again unanimously nominated by the Democrats of the district, but at the election which followed, which, by the way, was one of the most disastrous in the history of the party, brought about by division of opinion on the currency question, he suffered defeat at the hands of his Republican opponent, N. A. Moseley. His defeat was not the result of want of confidence in him personally, for the entire Missouri Democratic delegation to Congress were defeated that year, and he but shared the fate of such eminent leaders in Congress as Richard P. Bland, David A. De Armond, CHAMP CLARK, Cowherd, and others. After this defeat Marsh retired from active politics and devoted his time and energy to the practice of his profession, which he practically abandoned during his activities in the field of politics. His short career in Congress, however, demonstrated the wisdom of the people in sending him there as their Representative. He was faithful, as he had ever been, to the trust they had reposed in him. His voice and his vote were at all times in favor of such measures as he and his party believed were for the general welfare of all. His reported speeches made before Congress on the tariff, currency, and other questions are models of deliberate effort.

"From 1894 to 1910, a period of 16 years, Arnold declined all political offices and devoted his time to the practice of the law. It is true his party interest did not flag during that time. He was sent as a delegate to various State and National conventions, and was one of the delegates to the national convention at Chicago when Bryan won the nomination for President over Dick Bland by his 'Cross of Gold—Crown of Thorns' speech. He made many political speeches during campaign years. His last stand for public office was made at the earnest solicitation of his many friends in 1910 when he became a candidate for the Democratic nomination for the office of circuit judge of the twenty-eighth judicial district. And though he received a majority in four of the five counties in the circuit he could not overcome the popularity of his distinguished opponent, Hon. Charles B. Faris, now a member of the supreme court.

"He was now 65 years old, and the relentless disease which was destined to carry him to the grave had fastened its fangs upon him. With his Spartan fortitude, without complaint to those about him, throughout long days and nights of weariness and pain, he was at last forced to surrender to that inexorable decree denounced upon our first parents in the garden of Eden, and under the doom of which we all rest: 'Dust thou are and to dust shalt thou return.'

"Thus passed from the scene of action a native Missourian who had for more than 40 years wielded the best that was in him to steer aright the great ship of state, both local and national, and who was prominently identified with every progressive movement for the betterment of mankind in the home and county of his adoption.

"In early manhood Marshall Arnold was married to Miss Annie E. Parrott, an only daughter of Col. James M. Parrott and Maria Parrott, who survives him. Col. Parrott was a brave and gallant officer of the Confederate Army and lost his life on the field of battle. Of this marriage the following children were born: Eva M. (Mrs. Burton), Surry A., Blanche (deceased), James M., Lucile, Robert Lee (deceased), and Irene (deceased), all of whom now living have arrived at their respective majorities. To his wife and children Marsh Arnold was one of the kindest and most affectionate husbands and fathers. I have known him intimately for 33 years, and I have never heard a cross word, even in the way of reprimand, to any member of the family.

"Before disease had made its inroads upon his body he was a man of commanding appearance. Though small of stature, his figure was impressive, somewhat of the Napoleonic type, particularly when he was animated in forensic argument. He had that notable magnetism of the eyes peculiar to great leaders of men. The writer has on many occasions noted this distinguishing feature of orators in the persons of Daniel Voorhees, John J. Ingalls, Senator George G. Vest, Sam Jones, and others. I mention these celebrities because Marsh Arnold belonged to their type both in the matter of temperament and style of oratory. He had a discriminating literary taste. His intimate familiarity with the best works of the great masters of prose and poetry was notable. Blessed with a wonderfully retentive memory, I have heard him on many occasions reproduce the masterpieces of Shakespeare, Tennyson, Byron, Poe, Burns, Longfellow, Bryant, Prentice, Webster, Calhoun, Kent, and others without break or hesitation long years, no doubt, after he had committed them to memory.

"Thus in the life and character of Marshall Arnold we have a notable example of the rewards of industry, perseverance, courage, fortitude, honesty, and patriotism by the high estimation in which he was held by his many friends and the well-earned fame he achieved in the minds of the people of his native State.

"And thus amidst the fragrant scent of flowers, the hum of bees, the sweet songs of care-free birds, the myriad murmurs of insect life, commingled with the solemn requiem of funeral rites and tears of those who loved him, under the opal sky of this glorious morn in June, with the majestic sun looking down in all his undiminished splendors—the same as 'when first the flight of years began'; among the graves into whose open, yawning mouths the dead friend had often gazed with the same sad thoughts we entertain to-day, his Masonic brethren, in the presence of a large throng of friends, committed his frail body to its mother earth to await the glad clarion of the resurrection day."

CURRENCY.

Mr. LEVY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. In relation to what matter?

Mr. LEVY. In relation to the currency question.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Mr. LEVY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by inserting the bill introduced by me in the last as well as the present Congress amending the national banking laws, together with the remarks made by me before the Banking and Currency Committee of the House in support of my bill during the Sixty-second Congress and an editorial which appeared in to-day's New York Times on the financial problem. I consider the currency question of vast importance to the prosperity and welfare of our country, and the bill introduced by me would give prompt relief to the people without causing any uneasiness in the financial community, as it is permissible instead of compulsory.

The matter referred to is as follows:

A bill (H. R. 1937) to amend the national banking laws.

Be it enacted, etc., That any holder of any obligation of the United States bearing interest at the rate of 2 per cent per annum may present the same to the Treasurer or any Assistant Treasurer thereof and receive in exchange therefor an equal amount of noninterest-bearing certificates of deposit in appearance and form similar to the present gold and silver certificates and in denominations of $5, $10, $20, $50, and $100 each, at the holder's option. Such certificates shall be receivable at their face value for all taxes, debts, and demands due the United States, and when so received may be reissued.

SEC. 2. That the holder of any such certificate may, at his option, present the same to the Treasurer of the United States and receive in exchange therefor, when presented in multiples of $500, interest-bearing obligations of the Government to the face value of such certificates, bearing interest from the date of such exchange at the rate of 2 per cent per annum, and payable on the same terms and conditions as the original obligation represented by such certificates.

SEC. 3. That the exchange of interest-bearing obligations for certificates of deposit and the reexchange thereof shall be subject to such rules and regulations as the Secretary of the Treasury may adopt in order to facilitate the free exchange thereof.

SEC. 4. That any United States note when presented in multiples of $500 may be converted at par into United States bonds bearing 2 per cent interest per annum, and payable at the option of the Government, and when so converted shall be canceled and destroyed.

SEC. 5. That any national banking association may, upon application, receive from the Comptroller of the Currency circulating notes to the full amount of its capital stock, provided such notes are secured either by a deposit of United States bonds, as now required by law, or by a gold coin reserve of 50 per cent of the amount not thus secured by United States bonds; of such gold coin reserve, at least one-half shall always be kept with the United States Treasury, to the credit of such banking association, available for the redemption of its circulating notes upon presentation. Certificates of deposit for gold coin, issued by the United States Treasury, shall be considered as equivalent to gold coin.

SEC. 6. That all circulating notes issued under the provisions hereof shall constitute a prior lien on all the assets of the issuing bank, and in case of liquidation, whether voluntary or involuntary, all such outstanding notes shall be redeemed and canceled, or a sufficient amount therefor deposited with the United States Treasurer, before any division of assets among other creditors. In the event there should be insufficient assets to pay the outstanding circulating notes of the liquidating bank any deficit shall be assessed and paid pro rata by all other banks having outstanding circulating notes under the provisions of this act at the time of such assessment.

SEC. 7. That the act of May 30, 1908, is hereby amended as follows: In section 1 the word "National," where it first appears, is hereby erased, and in section 1 and section 3 the words following the word "outstanding" are hereby repealed and erased, to wit, "secured by the deposit of bonds of the United States to an amount not less than 40 per cent of its capital stock." Section 20 of said act of May 30, 1908, limiting its duration, is also hereby repealed.

SEC. 8. That all circulating notes issued under the provisions of the act of May 30, 1908, shall be subject to the same rate of taxation as was provided by section 5214 of the Revised Statutes prior to the passage of said act, for circulating notes issued against a deposit of United States bonds bearing 2 per cent interest.

SEC. 9. That for the purpose of the daily exchange of checks and drafts among the bank members composing a national currency association, such members may assume, by a majority vote, the functions necessary for such exchanges, thus constituting themselves a clearing-house association, under such rules and regulations as they may adopt for their own governance, subject to the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury.

SEC. 10. That any national currency association may issue certificates of indebtedness to any bank member of such association against a deposit of satisfactory security, which indebtedness shall bear interest at the rate of 6 per cent per annum, chargeable to the bank member receiving the same. Such certificates shall be receivable at par by other bank members of all such associations in settlement of clearing-house debit balances, and for a period not exceeding 60 days from the date of issuance may be counted as a part of any bank's legal reserve, not exceeding 25 per cent thereof.

SEC. 11. That whenever the available cash balance in the Treasury shall exceed the sum of $30,000,000 it shall be the duty of the Secretary of the Treasury, in his discretion, to require such excess to be distributed equitably and deposited to the credit of the Treasurer of the United States in such designated banks as may by him be selected. Such deposits shall bear interest as may be determined by competitive bids, and are to be payable on demand to the order of the Treasurer, or such person as he may designate, and are to be limited in amount as to any one bank to 50 per cent of its capital and surplus, but the Secretary shall require, before any deposit is made, adequate security to the full extent of such deposit. They may be secured by a deposit with the Treasurer of bonds which are a legal investment for postal savings banks, or by approved commercial bills or notes maturing within four months, indorsed by the depository bank, with the right of substitution, the face value of such notes to be at least 50 per cent in excess of the amount secured thereby. Such deposits may also be secured by the guaranty or indorsement of the National Currency Association (organized under the act approved May 30, 1908), of which the depository bank is a member. In case of voluntary or involuntary liquidation, and in the event the collateral security held therefor is insufficient, such deposits shall constitute a prior lien on all the assets of the depositary bank, after the payment of the circulating notes has been provided, as specified in section 6 of this act.

SEC. 12. That any national banking association having a paid-up capital and surplus amounting to $5,000,000 may establish one or more places of business in the capital or a seaport city of any foreign country, or dependencies of the United States, for the purpose of facilitating exchanges, granting commercial letters of credit and incident thereto accepting time drafts, dealing in gold coin or bullion, and such other business as is authorized by its charter; but such association shall not issue or receive from the Comptroller of the Currency circulating notes in any other unit of value than the dollar of the present standard, though it may be expressed upon the face of such circulating note the equivalent in foreign gold coin at which it is redeemable on presentation. Such place of business shall be denominated a foreign department or branch, and shall be subject to the same visitorial and other powers as are now conferred by law on the Comptroller of the Currency for all national banking associations; any additional expense attending the periodical examination of such foreign department or branch or the issuance of its circulation shall be assessed and paid by the parent institution.

SEC. 13. That it shall be lawful for any national banking association to loan of its assets not exceeding in the aggregate 25 per cent of its capital and 75 per cent of its surplus upon real estate security.

SEC. 14. That all provisions of the national-bank act allowing balances due from other banks located in designated reserve cities to be counted as a part of a bank's "legal money reserve" are hereby repealed.

SEC. 15. That the total liabilities of any national banking association (exclusive of its capital stock and surplus) now required by law to keep 15 per cent lawful money reserve shall not exceed 5 times its capital and surplus, and the similar liabilities of any national banking association now required by law to keep 25 per cent lawful money reserve shall not exceed 10 times its capital and surplus, unless in each case such excess liabilities are fully covered by additional cash assets equal to such excess, but any such association may voluntarily elect to keep 25 per cent lawful money reserve and be entitled to assume liabilities to the extent of 10 times its capital and surplus.

SEC. 16. That the Treasurer or any Assistant Treasurer of the United States is hereby authorized to transfer funds without charge from any depository bank or subtreasury to another against a deposit with him of gold coin or currency, and hereafter it shall be unlawful for any national banking association to make any charge for exchange in making similar domestic transfers.

SEC. 17. That all acts and parts of acts inconsistent with the provisions of this act are hereby repealed.

BANKING AND CURRENCY REFORM.

STATEMENT OF HON. JEFFERSON M. LEVY, A REPRESENTATIVE IN CONGRESS FROM THE STATE OF NEW YORK.

"Mr. LEVY. Mr. Chairman, in considering the matter of currency reform and the legislation necessary to remedy the evils of the system, or want of system, under which our monetary affairs are conducted, I feel sure that in reflecting upon the various suggestions which have been made to you you must have found the necessity of fixing some guiding principles to direct your thoughts, or else you would be lost in the maze of varied standpoints from which the subject is considered and treated by those who have appeared before you.

"I have tried to put myself in your place and consider the question from the standpoint exclusively of the welfare of the whole country, irrespective of benefit to any particular interest.

"It appears to me that the problem to be solved is this: To legislate whereby the debts of the banks may be safely substituted by the people for coin in their daily interchange of property and service with a reasonable profit to the banks.

"There is much confusion of thoughts in the public mind and in our minds about many banking terms, such as 'money,' 'deposit,' and 'credit,' unless we look into fundamental facts and be sure we mean the same thing when we use them.

"Let us eliminate the idea that the business of this country, or of any country, is done with 'money,' used in the sense of the thing which cancels debt. It is the 'substitute for money' which is used—'credit' it is usually called; 'debt' it is in reality. Credit can not exist unless debt is created.

"All banking everywhere is but a transfer and interchange of debts, except where the ownership of coin is changed, and coin is not thus used to the extent of 1 per cent of such interchange.

"I have said we must legislate whereby the debts of the banks may be safely substituted for coin. These debts are 'deposits' and 'circulating notes.' Deposits are utilized through the medium of checks, and circulating notes by delivery without recourse. The former constitutes about 95 per cent of the medium of exchange, and the latter less than 5 per cent. These are called 'credit instruments,' but the 'credit' comes from the people who accept them—they are in reality the debt of the banks which create them, and are accepted by the people as a 'substitute for coin.'

"Now, our problem is that the people may safely make this substitution with a reasonable profit to the banks.

"In the bill, H. R. 27139, now before you I have endeavored to offer a solution for this problem. In my remarks before the House on January 11 last, I have already considered in detail each of the provisions of the bill, and I would respectfully call your attention to them as a part of what I say to-day.

"The general scope of the provisions of the bill may, however, be stated in principles involved and recapitulated as follows:

"First. To restore the bank function of note issue.

"I maintain that banking is a business necessity in every commercial community, and that its functions are the growth and development of that necessity. These functions are called 'discount,' 'deposit,' and 'circulation,' and all of them are the various modes of interchange of debts between the banks, its customers, and the public.

"I maintain that the function of 'circulation' or note issue is as much a necessity to the public as is the function of 'discount' or 'deposit,' and that we have destroyed the function of note issue by the 10 per cent prohibitory tax of the national-bank act.

"I maintain that the present bank note, or 'bond-secured currency' is not an exercise of the bank function of note issue, because it does not come into being in response to a trade demand; that it is a mere certificate of indebtedness, which represents an assumed debt of the Government, by the banks, or, in other words, an exchange of debts; that the real debt is the Government bond pledged as security for the bank note. The Government's necessity required that the bank function of note issue should be destroyed in order that the Government debt would be carried by the people, and such debt is now carried in the form of the existing bank note, though the necessity no longer exists. The public is the creditor, the Government is the debtor, and the bank is the go-between, or medium of transfer.

"This condition should be remedied by allowing the true relations between the parties to be restored and the bank to resume its normal functions. This can be done by getting rid of the bond-secured bank currency, or by allowing the banks to issue circulating notes in addition to those outstanding, and hence in excess of their capital stock.

"It has appeared to me that the former plan is best, and by the method I have suggested, to wit, the interchangeable bond, we retain this Government debt, where it now is carried by the people in the form of a circulating note, as a certificate of deposit issued by the Government. We save the Government interest on the debt when in the form of a circulating note, and we pay the same interest as now when the debt is in the form of bonds. We leave the public to determine in what proportions the debt shall be carried in response to business demands, i. e., whether in the form of bonds or bond-currency certificates, and thereby establish to the extent of the present outstanding 2 per cent bonds a Government elastic currency.

"This currency is fixed as to its maximum amount by the authorized amount of 2 per cent bonds which can be issued. There are now outstanding about $730,000,000 of these bonds, of which about $698,000,000 are held by the Treasury as security for bank notes and public deposits. Those held by the Treasury for bank notes, about $684,000,000, can not be exchanged into bond certificates until the bank notes for which they are now held are canceled or their redemption otherwise provided for, and hence in practice the initial exchange of nearly all the bonds into bond certificates must be made by the banks themselves.

"The bill allows banks to issue circulating notes, against a gold reserve of 50 per cent, of which at least one-half must be kept with the United States Treasurer for their redemption upon presentation. This allows the banks to resume the bank function of note issue under restrictions which afford ample protection to the public, and at the same time gives them an inducement in the way of profit about 1 per cent better than the present bond-secured currency offers, figuring on the basis of a 6 per cent interest rate.

"The effect of these two provisions will be that the present bond-secured bank currency will be gradually replaced by the bond-secured Government currency. A proper bank currency on a gold basis can then be utilized by the public as the demands of trade require, responsive in volume to those demands through the redemption feature at the Treasury. The United States Treasury will become the clearing house for all bank debts in the form of circulating notes, and they will have the same elasticity that bank debts in the form of deposits now have, through the daily cancellation of checks by means of bank clearing houses.

"Second. To remove from our statutes the evidences of fruitless efforts to create values by legislation.

"Value with us must be fixed as it is with the rest of the world by the ratio between demand and supply. We can not override commercial laws, and time only serves to demonstrate that all efforts in this direction are attended with penalties which enforce themselves and prove the futility of the effort. I may recall some of these inconsistencies, viz:

"We have legislated that governmental 'paper promise to pay' (greenbacks) shall be accepted in discharge of private debts, whether the promise is kept or broken, and we have declared this law unconstitutional and then reversed the decision.

"We have legislated that this Government circulating note shall be paid off, retired, and canceled, and then legislated it shall not be.

"We have legislated that silver shall be purchased and coined into dollars at a fixed sum per month, and, finding they would not circulate, have legislated that paper representatives shall be given for these coins; then by legislation have doubled the monthly purchase, and then repealed both laws.

"We have legislated that silver bullion shall be purchased and held in order that the paper representative of such purchase might be used as a circulating medium, and then called an extra session of Congress to repeal such legislation.

"We have bought our own bonds in the market at a high premium for cancellation, virtually prepaying interest to maturity, in order to get our paper promises into circulation, and then been forced to sell new bonds at a lower premium in order to retire these paper promises without discredit.

"We have been forced by the necessities of the case to provide a gold reserve for the redemption of our money and to pledge our good faith that such reserve shall be held inviolate.

"We adopt another fiction as a corollary of this fiction and say 'paper promises' and debts due by certain banks shall be 'legal reserve' for the people's deposits in other banks. We know that the proper reserve against all indebtedness must be the thing which finally cancels and discharges debt, and that this thing is gold; and yet we attempt to deceive ourselves by affixing before the word 'reserve' the word 'legal' and imagine thereby we have created value.

"I want to do away with these fictions and let our banking system be founded on sound, economic principles which the experience of mankind has demonstrated to be sound.

"The bill provides that greenbacks may be funded into 2 per cent bonds (made interchangeable as indicated), and that 'Due from reserve agents' shall not be counted as any part of a bank's reserve.

"We might fund greenbacks into a bond paying a higher rate of interest, but it has appeared to me it would be wiser to allow the privilege of converting them into these 2 per cent interchangeable bonds, for the reason that greenbacks now form a part of the circulating medium, and it would be unwise to interfere with the volume thereof, except as business interests may automatically adjust it.

"You will see from the provisions of the bill that greenbacks would be gradually replaced by bond-currency certificates as the demands of trade might require, and that the exchange or funding is entirely voluntary.

"My remarks of January 11 show conclusively, I think, the pernicious effects of allowing the debts due from banks located in reserve cities to be considered as a part of the required reserve of country banks.

"It seems to have been a strange inconsistency in the framers of the national-bank act to draw a distinction between the debt of a bank located in the city from that of the bank located in the country, especially when this differentiation was made in the same law, simply by calling these cities 'reserve cities.'

"It may have been intended, in view of the fact that it was provided that circulating notes of country banks should be redeemable by the 'reserve agent,' that the reserve of the country bank would be partly kept with such agent, losing sight of the fact that such reserve, when converted into a 'deposit' with the city bank, was no longer the reserve of the country bank but only the debt of the city bank.

"As country bank notes are no longer redeemable by reserve agents, the supposed reason for this provision does not now exist, and I feel sure you will approve the suggestion of doing away with the fiction that 'due from reserve agents' constitutes a proper 'reserve.'

"Third. To provide some reserve source of credit.

"Experience has shown us that in periods of financial disturbances, which periods seem to be inseparable from the frailties of human nature, and to come as a result of overtrading and speculative excesses, that in order to preserve the commercial organism we must have some reserve source which will maintain credit and allay panic. We have found this source in clearing-house certificates. These, as you know, are the joint obligations or debts of the banks which compose clearing-house associations, and have always served the purpose of their issuance without loss to anybody.

"The act of May 30, 1908, legalizes this issuance of joint indebtedness, and under it national currency associations have been organized with an aggregate capital and surplus of over $575,000,000, which means that practically more than one-fourth of the national banking capital of the country is already combined, and thereby provided the necessary machinery for meeting panicky conditions.

"This law expires by limitation in 1914, which provision it is necessary to repeal, and also the provison requiring an outstanding issue of 40 per cent of capital in bond-secured notes before its benefits can be availed of. In addition to this there is a prohibitory tax of 5 per cent per annum, increasing additionally at the rate of 1 per cent per month.

"H. R. 27139 repeals these clauses and leaves the measure available as a reserve source of credit. Since the introduction of this bill subsequent reflection and consultation with others has induced me to suggest a further amendment of the act of May 30, 1908, so as to allow the banks composing the national currency associations to legally issue a joint 'certificate of indebtedness' available only for the settlement of clearing-house balances, and hence confined in circulation among themselves. This will enable the banks composing the association to pool their assets in identically the same manner as clearing-house associations have heretofore found it necessary to do (when clearing-house certificates were issued), and thus adopt the remedy which has heretofore been effective without calling upon the public for the general circulation of emergency notes, as is contemplated in the act of May 30, 1908.

"With such provision the banks would be in the position to adopt either remedy in whole or in part, as in their combined judgment would be best, and they necessarily are best qualified for such decision.

"The proposed amendment is as follows:

"[Amendment, act of May 30, 1908.]

"Any national currency association may issue certificates of indebtedness to any member of such association, against a deposit of satisfactory security, which indebtedness shall bear interest at the rate of 6 per cent per annum, chargeable to the bank member receiving the same, and shall be receivable at par by other bank members of such association in settlement of clearing-house debit balances, and for a period not exceeding 60 days from its date may be counted as a part of the bank's required reserve, not exceeding 25 per cent thereof.

"This act of May 30, 1908, contemplates the exercise of the bank function of note issue only in times of emergency. It has been suggested that the corporate powers of the national currency associations should be enlarged so that the bank function of note issue may be confined to these associations, and that the reserves of other banks may be consolidated and kept with them, or, following the same idea, that zones or territories should be designated in which all the banks of each zone may be consolidated into one association for the purpose of note issue and to hold the reserves of other banks in that zone. This follows somewhat the Aldrich idea of centralization of the banking power, though not to so great an extent. I believe the plan is open to some, though not all, of the objections to a central bank.

"We must remember that the concentration of reserves into one or more banks necessarily implies that the debt of the reserve or zone bank shall be considered the reserve of the depositing bank. It may be argued that this concentration of reserves will prevent competition among the banks themselves for increased reserves in times of panic; but if the law provides an ample minimum reserve to be held in the banks' vaults and the banks know that there is always available a reserve credit through the national currency associations, there will be no occasion for this competition or struggle to increase individual bank reserves.

"The competitive struggle has been occasioned in the past by the nonexistence of sufficient total reserve in the whole country to meet the requirements of the law in times of shaken confidence. This insufficiency was due to the fact that 'due from reserve agents,' though legally called 'a reserve,' was found to be, temporarily, an unavailable debt in the form in which it was needed.

"Again, it is argued that these zone banks will afford opportunity or market for rediscounting paper by individual banks through the issuance of circulating notes by the zone banks. It must be remembered that the circulating note, whether issued by the zone bank or the individual bank, represents a debt for which the credit must be supplied by the public, and that the coin reserve for such debt must come from somewhere. If the individual banks are to supply this coin, wherein is the advantage to the individual bank or the public over issuing its own notes and retaining the coin reserve in its own vaults? Besides this, I doubt the wisdom or expediency of encouraging the rediscount of paper under normal conditions. I consider the facilites ample to-day for rediscounting paper through bank connections for all ordinary business requirements. We can not create capital by legislation, and the fact that a bank continuously wants paper rediscounted indicates that it is trading beyond its normal resources and requires additional capital.

"I am inclined to the opinion that it is wiser and better to preserve the individual units of our banking system by strengthening them with the ability to utilize all normal bank functions—'discount,' 'deposit,' and 'note issue'—under reasonable restrictions consistent with the public welfare, and to provide the opportunity for them to voluntarily combine legally in financial emergencies in order to meet the necessities of industrial crises or commercial panic.

"If I have stated the problem correctly, I believe the provisions of the bill (H. R. 27139) will furnish a reasonable and rational solution that will conform to the business interests of the country, and one which its industrial, commercial, and unselfish banking representatives will indorse.

"I leave you to examine critically the provisions of the bill in detail, to each of which I have referred in my remarks of January 11. I think the three general propositions which I have announced and commented on cover the essential features of the measure.

"There are other provisions which, though perhaps not involving principles, will, in my opinion, be highly advantageous as affecting the mechanism of banking and conducive to its safety as well as to the benefits the public will derive therefrom. These may be briefly summarized as follows:

"First. Limit the amount which the circulating medium of the country may be reduced through the collection of revenues by fixing a maximum amount for the 'working balance' of the Treasury, beyond which the excess is to be deposited with the banks.

"Second. Allow banks of fixed minimum capital to establish branches in foreign countries for the purpose of encouraging and facilitating foreign trade, enlarging the powers of these banks so as to enable them to follow the necessary requirements of this trade.

"Third. Allow loans upon real estate security to a limited extent so as to meet the requirements of banks established in agricultural communities, in accordance with the expressed wish of a majority of the banks.

"Fourth. Establish some reasonable limit of indebtedness by the banks in proportion to capital and surplus, as a matter of security to the public, so as to fix a safe point beyond which they may not be used to foster overtrading and inflation through excessive loans or discounts and the deposits thereby created.

"Fifth. Consider what provision is necessary to establish the circulation of checks at par everywhere, as is now the case with circulating notes. I have suggested and provided in the bill the prohibition of any 'exchange' charge, which, I believe, will lead to the establishment of one central clearing house to be composed of other clearing-house associations.

"At the time the Committee on Rules was considering the resolution providing for an investigation of the so-called Money Trust, I appeared before that body and told them that what we needed was remedial legislation and not investigation, and that statement has proven to be correct. Even though the committee appointed by the House to investigate the so-called Money Trust spent large sums of money, they have learned very little, if anything, of importance, and what they did ascertain could and would have been furnished without an investigation if a written request had been made of the witnesses who appeared before the committee.

"The investigation has created great disturbance in the financial world. The effects have been far-reaching and will take a long while to overcome. As yet no remedial legislation, such as the proposition I have before you, has been adopted, and, in my judgment, the consideration of this bill alone would have been of much more service to the country than all the investigations which have taken place.

"I thank you, gentlemen, for your attention and assure you that it is my most earnest desire to contribute everything in my power toward the proper solution of this monetary question, which I believe to be the most important in its far-reaching results and benefits of any now before this Congress or likely to come before the next."

POLITICAL FINANCE.

The party in power is construing its mandate on the tariff into a mandate for enacting the sort of finance with which it is connected historically, and which the country has rejected even oftener than it has voted for the revision of the tariff. It is necessary to admit that the bill contains some good things and that it is better than the Democratic platforms of the last several campaigns. But not for that reason should the banking of the country be submitted to the strain through which its business interests are passing. Politics makes strange bedfellows, and fairness of discussion makes it necessary to admit the necessity which compelled the President to allow his partners to make the experiment of the proposal of Government—that is, of political—finance.

The result is a welcome demonstration that the country will have none of it, not even to secure at that price much that it wants. The country never had a sounder or stronger appreciation of the fact that banking and business both require less governmental interference rather than more. There are specific reasons in the case of banking, but the underlying principles are stronger and broader than banking alone. The tariff is under revision because of the excess of paternalism, and it is at the time that the evils of paternalism are under demonstration and illustration in the case of general business that the party which represents opposition to paternalism proposes to set it up in exaggerated form for banking. The party of opposition to centralization of government, and which is offended by the name "central bank," proposes to establish a form of banking which is more centralized than even the Aldrich proposal and which leaves the United States Bank "tied to the post" as an illustration of speed in getting away from ancient party traditions.

The country is in no mood for such mockery. It has repudiated the Republicans' preposterous proposal to guarantee profits by the tariff, and it knows exactly what to do with a Democratic proposal to give the Government "absolute control" of the national banking system with a view to "promote a stable price level." No owner of bank shares is going to give absolute control to anybody else. A bank is not a helpless public utility like a railroad, and there is no necessity that any national bank should remain in the system. Those who appreciate the situation are already plainly declaring that their capital will not participate in the plan. Nor is the proposal to regulate prices any happier. The regulation of prices is no more a suitable function of government than the regulation of profits or of wages. Every man has a right to profits or wages as high as he can make in compliance with the customs imposed by that universal conscience called the common law. Limitation of profits or wages is handicapping of efficiency at unendurable loss to the total welfare. The regulation of prices is artificial disturbance of prices. At what level shall prices be stabilized? Shall "a rate of discount be made mandatory" to keep prices up or down, and how is it that this simple expedient has not been discovered before? How shall discount be made both mandatory and different for different Federal reserve banks? Shall the mandate be applied to the banks alone; and if so, to what purpose? What is the use of a mandate to regulate discount by the banks unless there is also a mandate that borrowers shall pay the mandate rate?

These questions are asked in the hope that they will suggest the broader principles which are of as specific application to banking as to other business. Power and responsibility should never be separated, because all action should be with regard to the consequences of the acts done. The idea that the banking of the Nation should be at the mercy of politicians of second or third class caliber rather than in the care of bankers whose interests are inextricably bound up with the prudence of their management is foolish beyond expression. Not less absurd is the idea that good banking is the product of statutes. The world's best banking is where banking is most free from interference except by laws applying to all trade. In China there is a custom that when a bank fails the officers' heads shall be thrown in among the assets. If the Government's appointees as bank managers should submit themselves to a similar requirement they would act under a sense of responsibility which might make them as careful as the men representing those who own the capital they administer. We are seeing the railways administered with indifference to the woes of their owners, and we are seeing the trusts disintegrated with especial severity against the largest and best of them. To expect the owners of banking capital to allow themselves to be subjected to the experiences testified to by Mr. Gary and Mr. Perkins is to expect the impossible. The proposal carries with it the possibilities of greater embarrassments than are being experienced with such disillusionment in the industrial world. Stop it, gentlemen, before you suffer through the country's suffering.

ANNIVERSARY CELEBRATION, BATTLE OF GETTYSBURG.

Mr. BARTON. Mr. Speaker, I rise for information. An editorial printed in the Washington Times of yesterday, under the caption "The Gettysburg Danger," says:

It would be disgraceful carelessness if the great reunion of the blue and the gray on the battlefield of Gettysburg a few days hence should be turned into a tragedy of suffering and very likely deaths for want of adequate preparation.

That is the very condition that Secretary of War Garrison plainly fears. He has notified the commission managing the reunion that the Government appropriation is inadequate to care for more than 40,000. Beyond that number the veterans will be without housing or rations, and after they are dumped off the railroad trains at the battlefield it will be of small benefit to them that their pockets may be well filled with money if the money will buy nothing.

It goes on further and says:

The weather right now suggests the awful possibilities of such a situation. It is impossible, of course, to know how many people will be attending, but the Secretary of War fears that the number will be far in excess of provision for care. It would be a national scandal if this semicentennial of the great battle should bring another slaughter of veterans on that immortal field. Not many more times will there be such reunions, for there will be none to reunite.

Now, is this true that the appropriation is not adequate and that the Secretary of War is asking for more money?

The SPEAKER. What is it that the gentleman wants to know?

Mr. BARTON. I desire to know whether the Secretary has filed any complaint or request for an additional appropriation or any bill with the committee or with the Speaker of the House.

The SPEAKER. He has not filed any with the Speaker of the House.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I submit there is only one way in which the Secretary of War can communicate with the House, and that is by a communication to the Speaker.

The SPEAKER. No such communication has come to me.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Tulley, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed bills of the following titles, in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

S. 1353. An act to authorize the board of county commissioners of Okanogan County, Wash., to construct and maintain a bridge across the Okanogan River at or near the town of Malott; and

S. 103. An act authorizing the Secretary of War to grant permission for the erection of a hotel on the Fort Huachuca Military Reservation in Arizona.

The message also announced that the Senate had insisted upon its amendments to the bill (H. R. 1917) making appropriations for the contingent expenses of the Bureau of Indian Affairs, for fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes, and for other purposes, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1914, disagreed to by the House of Representatives, had agreed to the conference asked by the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. STONE, Mr. MYERS, and Mr. CLAPP as the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed without amendment the following resolution:

House concurrent resolution 10.

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That the two Houses of Congress assemble in the Hall of the House of Representatives on Monday, the 23d day of June, 1913, at 12.30 in the afternoon, for the purpose of receiving such communications as the President of the United States shall be pleased to make them.

SENATE BILL REFERRED.

Under clause 2, Rule XXIV, Senate bill of the following title was taken from the Speaker's table and referred to its appropriate committee, as indicated below:

S. 103. An act authorizing the Secretary of War to grant permission for the erection of a hotel on Fort Huachuca Military Reservation in Arizona; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

OPIUM.

Mr. HARRISON of New York. Mr. Speaker, by direction of the Committee on Ways and Means, I desire to submit a report on the bill H. R. 1967 (H. Rept. 22).

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I ask that it be reported from the Clerk's desk, so that we may know what it is.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read the title of the bill (H. R. 1967) regulating the manufacture of smoking opium within the United States, and for other purposes.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I think it should be referred to the Union Calendar.

The SPEAKER. It will be referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

RECESS.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the House stand in recess until 12.25 p. m.

Mr. MANN. Make it 12.30.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Then I will make it 12.30.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD] asks unanimous consent that the House stand in recess until 12.30 p. m. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Accordingly (at 12 o'clock and 14 minutes p. m.) the House stood in recess until 12.30 p. m.

At the expiration of the recess the House resumed its session.

JOINT SESSION OF SENATE AND HOUSE.

At 12 o'clock and 30 minutes p. m. the Doorkeeper announced the Vice President of the United States and the Members of the United States Senate.

The Members of the House rose.

The Senate, preceded by the Vice President and by their Secretary and Sergeant at Arms, entered the Chamber.

The VICE PRESIDENT took the chair at the right of the Speaker and the Members of the Senate took the seats reserved for them.

The SPEAKER. The Chair announces as a committee on the part of the House to wait upon the President Representatives UNDERWOOD, FITZGERALD, and MANN. The Vice President will announce the committee on the part of the Senate.

The VICE PRESIDENT announced as the committee on the part of the Senate Senators KERN, REED, and GALLINGER.

At 12 o'clock and 55 minutes p. m. the President of the United States, attended by members of his Cabinet and escorted by the joint committee of Senators and Representatives, entered the Hall of the House, standing at the Clerk's desk, amid applause on the floor and in the galleries.

The SPEAKER. Senators and Representatives, I present to the Sixty-third Congress the President of the United States.

The PRESIDENT. Mr. Speaker, Mr. President, gentlemen of the Congress, it is under the compulsion of what seems to me a clear and imperative duty that I have a second time this session sought the privilege of addressing you in person. I know, of course, that the heated season of the year is upon us, that work in these Chambers and in the committee rooms is likely to become a burden as the season lengthens, and that every consideration of personal convenience and personal comfort, perhaps, in the cases of some of us, considerations of personal health even, dictate an early conclusion of the deliberations of the session; but there are occasions of public duty when these things which touch us privately seem very small; when the work to be done is so pressing and so fraught with big consequence that we know that we are not at liberty to weigh against it any point of personal sacrifice. We are now in the presence of such an occasion. It is absolutely imperative that we should give the business men of this country a banking and currency system by means of which they can make use of the freedom of enterprise and of individual initiative which we are about to bestow upon them.

We are about to set them free; we must not leave them without the tools of action when they are free. We are about to set them free by removing the trammels of the protective tariff. Ever since the Civil War they have waited for this emancipation and for the free opportunities it will bring with it. It has been reserved for us to give it to them. Some fell in love, indeed, with the slothful security of their dependence upon the Government; some took advantage of the shelter of the nursery to set up a mimic mastery of their own within its walls. Now both the tonic and the discipline of liberty and maturity are to ensue. There will be some readjustments of purpose and point of view. There will follow a period of expansion and new enterprise, freshly conceived. It is for us to determine now whether it shall be rapid and facile and of easy accomplishment. This it can not be unless the resourceful business men who are to deal with the new circumstances are to have at hand and ready for use the instrumentalities and conveniences of free enterprise which independent men need when acting on their own initiative.

It is not enough to strike the shackles from business. The duty of statesmanship is not negative merely. It is constructive also. We must show that we understand what business needs and that we know how to supply it. No man, however casual and superficial his observation of the conditions now prevailing in the country, can fail to see that one of the chief things business needs now and will need increasingly as it gains in scope and vigor in the years immediately ahead of us is the proper means by which readily to vitalize its credit, corporate and individual, and its originative brains. What will it profit us to be free if we are not to have the best and most accessible instrumentalities of commerce and enterprise? What will it profit us to be quit of one kind of monopoly if we are to remain in the grip of another and more effective kind? How are we to gain and keep the confidence of the business community unless we show that we know how both to aid and to protect it? What shall we say if we make fresh enterprise necessary and also make it very difficult by leaving all else except the tariff just as we found it? The tyrannies of business, big and little, lie within the field of credit. We know that. Shall we not act upon the knowledge? Do we not know how to act upon it? If a man can not make his assets available at pleasure, his assets of capacity and character and resource, what satisfaction is it to him to see opportunity beckoning to him on every hand when others have the keys of credit in their pockets and treat them as all but their own private possession? It is perfectly clear that it is our duty to supply the new banking and currency system the country needs, and it will need it immediately more than it has ever needed it before.

The only question is, When shall we supply it—now or later, after the demands shall have become reproaches that we were so dull and so slow? Shall we hasten to change the tariff laws and then be laggards about making it possible and easy for the country to take advantage of the change? There can be only one answer to that question. We must act now, at whatever sacrifice to ourselves. It is a duty which the circumstances forbid us to postpone. I should be recreant to my deepest convictions of public obligation did I not press it upon you with solemn and urgent insistence.

The principles upon which we should act are also clear. The country has sought and seen its path in this matter within the last few years—sees it more clearly now than it ever saw it before—much more clearly than when the last legislative proposals on the subject were made. We must have a currency, not rigid as now, but readily, elastically responsive to sound credit, the expanding and contracting credits of everyday transactions, the normal ebb and flow of personal and corporate dealings. Our banking laws must mobilize reserves; must not permit the concentration anywhere in a few hands of the monetary resources of the country or their use for speculative purposes in such volume as to hinder or impede or stand in the way of other more legitimate, more fruitful uses. And the control of the system of banking and of issue which our new laws are to set up must be public, not private, must be vested in the Government itself, so that the banks may be the instruments, not the masters, of business and of individual enterprise and initiative.

The committees of the Congress to which legislation of this character is referred have devoted careful and dispassionate study to the means of accomplishing these objects. They have honored me by consulting me. They are ready to suggest action. I have come to you, as the head of the Government and the responsible leader of the party in power, to urge action now, while there is time to serve the country deliberately and as we should, in a clear air of common counsel. I appeal to you with a deep conviction of duty. I believe that you share this conviction. I therefore appeal to you with confidence. I am at your service without reserve to play my part in any way you may call upon me to play it in this great enterprise of exigent reform which it will dignify and distinguish us to perform and discredit us to neglect. [Applause on the floor and in the galleries.]

At 1 o'clock and 6 minutes p. m. the President and his Cabinet retired from the Hall of the House.

The SPEAKER. The joint convention is dissolved.

Thereupon the Vice President and the Members of the Senate returned to their Chamber.

The SPEAKER. The House will be in order.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 1 o'clock and 11 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned to meet to-morrow, June 24, 1913, at 12 o'clock noon.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII,

Mr. HARRISON of New York, from the Committee on Ways and Means, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 1967) regulating the manufacture of smoking opium within the United States, and for other purposes, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 22), which said bill and report were referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

PUBLIC BILLS, RESOLUTIONS, AND MEMORIALS.

Under clause 3 of Rule XXII, bills, resolutions, and memorials were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. WILSON of Florida: A bill (H. R. 6276) for releasing and quitclaiming of all claims of the United States to arpent lot No. 28, in the old city of Pensacola, Fla.; to the Committee on the Public Lands.

By Mr. WICKERSHAM: A bill (H. R. 6277) to authorize the Secretary of the Treasury of the United States to cause to be sold at auction to the highest bidder a certain wharf site, wharf and buildings thereon, and other tracts of land situate at Sitka, in the Territory of Alaska; to the Committee on the Public Lands.

Also, a bill (H. R. 6278) to provide for the preliminary examination and survey of the mouth of Snake River and the harbor of Nome, Alaska, to cause plans and estimates to be made for the improvement thereof, to make an appropriation to pay for the same, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors.

Also, a bill (H. R. 6279) to authorize the Secretary of the Treasury to erect a public building at Fairbanks, Alaska, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

By Mr. LEVY: A bill (H. R. 6280) to amend an act entitled "An act to regulate commerce," approved February 4, 1887, and all acts amendatory thereof, by conferring jurisdiction on the Interstate Commerce Commission over certain contracts and combinations; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

By Mr. RAKER: A bill (H. R. 6281) granting to the city and county of San Francisco certain rights of way in, over, and through certain public lands, the Yosemite National Park, and Stanislaus National Forest, and certain lands in the Yosemite National Park, the Stanislaus National Forest, and the public lands in the State of California, and for other purposes; to the Committee on the Public Lands.

By Mr. HARRISON of New York: A bill (H. R. 6282) to provide for the registration of, with collectors of internal revenue and to impose a special tax upon, all persons who produce, import, manufacture, compound, deal in, dispense, sell, distribute, or give away opium or coca leaves, their salts, derivatives, or preparations, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. TEMPLE: A bill (H. R. 6283) to create a national rivers commission; to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors.

By Mr. SMITH of Maryland: A bill (H. R. 6284) providing for a survey for a military and post road from the city of Washington, D. C., to Indianhead, Charles County, Md.; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. KAHN: Resolution (H. Res. 180) instructing the Attorney General to transmit to the House of Representatives copies of all correspondence and other memoranda and papers relating to the postponement or delay of trial of cases against the Western Fuel Co.; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Also, resolution (H. Res. 181) instructing the Attorney General to transmit to the House of Representatives copies of all correspondence and other papers and memoranda relating to the prosecution or trial of Maury Diggs and Drew Caminetti; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. HINEBAUGH: Resolution (H. Res. 182) directing the Judiciary Committee to investigate fully and completely the facts in the case of the resignation of United States District Attorney John L. McNab and report their findings to the House of Representatives; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. BARTLETT: Joint resolution (H. J. Res. 99) to repeal the provisions of the sundry civil act approved August 24, 1912, relating to vacancies upon the commissions in charge of military parks, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Also, joint resolution (H. J. Res. 100) to continue in effect the provisions of the act of March 9, 1906 (Stat. L., vol. 34, p. 56); to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. MURRAY of Oklahoma: Joint resolution (H. J. Res. 101) for the maintenance, management, protection, and improvement of Platt National Park, Okla.; to the Committee on the Public Lands.

PRIVATE BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 1 of Rule XXII, private bills and resolutions were introduced and severally referred as follows:

PETITIONS, ETC.

Under clause 1 of Rule XXII, petitions and papers were laid on the Clerk's desk and referred as follows:

By Mr. DALE: Petition of the Turlock irrigation district, Turlock, Cal., protesting against the diversion of any and all waters from the watershed of the Tuolumne; to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors.

By Mr. DICKINSON: Petition of Lycurgus Fooch, of Chilhowee, Mo., protesting against additional pension at this time; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. HELGESEN: Petition of sundry business men of Egeland, Rollette, Starkweather, Cando, and Alice, N. Dak., all favoring the passage of legislation compelling concerns selling goods direct to the consumer by mail to contribute their portion of the funds for the development of the local community, county, and State; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

By Mr. HENSLEY: Petition of sundry citizens of Fredericktown, Mo., protesting against the passage of House bill 4653; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

By Mr. MOTT: Petition of the people of the Turlock irrigation district, to protect waters of the Tuolumne; to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors.

By Mr. ROGERS: Petition of the Jewelers' Association of Boston, protesting against the provisions of House bill 2972 which forbids the guaranteeing of watchcases to wear for a term of years; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

By Mr. TAVENNER: Petition of R. E. Swanson, Rock Island, Ill., protesting against exempting mutual life insurance companies from the income-tax bill; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. TOWNSEND: Petition of the Socialist Party of the State of New Jersey, relating to deprivation of the rights of a citizen of the United States; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

TUESDAY, June 24, 1913.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Father of all souls, preserver of life, source of all good, keep these Thy servants and their respective families in health and strength that as representatives of a great people they may render faithful and efficient service to their country; that the measures they enact into law may reduce evil and promote the influence of good; that the hearts of our people may rejoice in peace and prosperity, and everlasting praise we will give unto Thee in gratitude and love; through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

BRAZIL.

The SPEAKER. The Chair lays before the House a letter from the Secretary of State, transmitting a communication from the president of the Chamber of Deputies of the United States of Brazil. The Secretary of State has been kind enough to have attached to the original communication, which is in Portuguese, a translation of it into English. There being no one in the House who understands Portuguese, the Clerk will read the letter of the Secretary of State and also the translation of the communication from the president of the Chamber of Deputies of Brazil.

The Clerk read as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF STATE,
Washington, June 17, 1913.

The Hon. CHAMP CLARK,
Speaker of the House of Representatives.

SIR: The inclosed message addressed by Senhor Sabino Barros, president of the Chamber of Deputies of the United States of Brazil, to the President of Congress was forwarded to this department from the White House, where it appears to have been erroneously delivered.

I have the honor to inclose it, with a translation into English, for the information of the House of Representatives.

I have the honor to be, sir,
Your obedient servant,
W. J. BRYAN.

[Translation.]

PRESIDENT CONGRESS, Washington, United States:

I have the honor to apprise Your Excellency that the Chamber of Deputies of the United States of Brazil at its session of to-day, on the motion of the diplomacy committee, supported by Deputy Coelho Netto, approved the following resolution:

"We desire that through its officers the Chamber of Deputies express by telegram to the American Congress the gratitude of the Brazilian people for the gracious reception given on the territory of the United States to Dr. Lauro Muller, ambassador of the Brazilian Republic, on a mission of friendship."

I avail myself of this opportunity to present to Your Excellency my personal salutations.

SABINO BARROS,
President Chamber Deputies.

The original communication is as follows:

[Telegram.]

RIO JANEIRO, June 13, 1913—10.05 p. m.

PRESIDENTE CONGRESSO,
Washington, Estados Unidos:

Tenho a honra de communicar a v. ex. que a camara dos snrs. deputados dos Estados Unidos do Brasil na sessão de hoje por proposta da commissão de diplomatia justificada, pelo snr. deputado Coelho Netto, approvou a seguinte moção: Requeremos que por intermedio da nosso camara dos deputados demonstra por telegramma ao Congresso Americano a gratidão do povo brasileiro pela gentileza com que foi acolhido no territorio dos Estados Unidos o Dr. Lauro Muller, ambaixador da Republica brasileira, em missão de amizade. Aproveito o ensejo para apresentar v. ex. as minhas saudações pessoaes.

SABINO BARROS,
Presidente Camara Deputados.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, should not that communication be referred to the Committee on Foreign Affairs?

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks perhaps it should. Anyway, it will do no harm to refer it, and the Chair will do so.

ANNIVERSARY CELEBRATION, BATTLE OF GETTYSBURG.

The SPEAKER. It turns out that four of the gentlemen who were appointed members of the committee to attend the Gettysburg celebration—Messrs. SHERLEY, RICHARDSON, SHERWOOD, and MANN—can not attend; and the Chair has appointed Mr. THOMAS, of Kentucky, Mr. LEE, of Pennsylvania, Mr. FLOOD, of Virginia, and Mr. MOORE, of Pennsylvania, in their stead.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, the Chaplain of this House is a former soldier, wounded on the battle field, and I ask unanimous consent that the Chaplain be added to this committee. [Applause.]

Mr. FITZGERALD. And the Postmaster.

The SPEAKER. The Chair wishes the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD] would include in that motion one of the pages, who usually attends the Chaplain.

Mr. HARDWICK. And also the Postmaster.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I also ask that the Postmaster, who was likewise a soldier, be included, and one of the pages to attend Dr. Couden.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama moves that Dr. Couden, Chaplain of the House, of whom we are all very fond, and the Postmaster of the House, who was a Confederate soldier, both of them badly maimed, and the page who usually attends the Chaplain, be added to this committee of 21.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Chair requests the members of this Gettysburg committee to meet in the Speaker's room this afternoon at half past 4, so that we can determine when we are going and when we are coming back.

THE PRESIDENT'S ADDRESS (H. DOC. NO. 103).

The SPEAKER. Yesterday, when the President read his message or address, he carried it away with him, and there was no way that the Chair could think of to refer it to a committee, but it seems to the Chair that it ought to be referred. Therefore the printed copy that is in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD this morning will be referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

COMMITTEE ON PRINTING.

Mr. BARNHART. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the resolution which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Indiana asks unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of a resolution which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

House resolution 184.

Resolved, That the Committee on Printing be authorized to have such printing and binding done as shall be necessary for the discharge of the work of said committee.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The resolution was agreed to.

ZACHARIAH CHANDLER.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of a resolution which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Michigan asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of a resolution which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

House resolution 185.

Resolved, That exercises appropriate to the reception and acceptance from the State of Michigan of the statue of Zachariah Chandler, erected in Statuary Hall in the Capitol, be made the special order for Monday, July 28, 1913.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The resolution was agreed to.

JOHN L. M'NAB.

The SPEAKER. The Chair desires to submit a request for a change of reference.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Committee on the Judiciary is hereby discharged from further consideration of House resolution 182, directing the Judiciary Committee to investigate fully and completely the facts in the case of the resignation of United States District Attorney John L. McNab, and report their findings to the House of Representatives, and the same is referred to the Committee on Rules.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, is that a request from the Judiciary Committee?

Mr. HARDWICK. If the gentleman will pardon me, this is a resolution directing the Committee on the Judiciary to make an investigation, and under the rules and the unbroken precedents it belongs to the Committee on Rules.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I have no objection.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

RAILROAD EARNINGS AND DIVIDENDS.

Mr. CULLOP. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by printing an editorial which appeared in the Washington Post of this morning on the earnings of railroads.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Indiana asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD, as indicated. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The editorial is as follows:

EARNINGS AND DIVIDENDS.

Railroad earnings for April foot up $238,000,000, a gain of $22,900,000 over the same month last year, or 10 per cent per mile of line. July interest and dividend disbursements will exceed $263,000,000, a gain of upward of $11,000,000 over a year ago. Truly, we have in these actual performances irreparable proof of national solvency and earning power on an ascending scale. We are not slowing up but going forward.

The universal story of bounteous crop growth gives assurance that railroad earnings in 1914 will run ahead of this year's magnificent showing. So, too, as regards disbursements on dividend-paying account. The tendency is upward, but as the funds thus distributed naturally flow back into the banks the wherewithal to meet the larger outlay will be on hand then as now.

The foreign demand for American products climbs steadily to new high levels. Europe is hard pressed to pay for what she buys abroad, but her wants are imperative. The alternative is to let go of the vast accumulation of American securities which had been purchased as an investment. Repurchased on this side at bargain-counter prices, future dividends will be kept at home.

Europe's steady and at times enormous liquidation of American stocks has extinguished the big balance of trade in our favor and permitted a serious raid on our gold reserve, but at a heavy cost to herself ultimately. It is our good fortune also to be in a commercial position better and better calculated as time goes on not only to overcome outside developments, but to combat inside political instrumentalities that militate against business confidence here and there. How long can the sporadic cases of doubt and hesitation prevail against the combined influence of a series of banner-crop years with the product quoted at the highest wholesale prices in 30 years?

THE COMMERCE COURT.

Mr. SIMS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. SIMS. Mr. Speaker, no caucus action is sought or needed to ascertain the position of Democrats in the House or Senate as to the abolishment of the Commerce Court. No caucus can make its abolition more binding upon Democrats than the unanimous votes of the Democrats in the House when the court was created and when the yea-and-nay votes were taken on the direct question of abolishing the court in the Sixty-second Congress, and also by the action of the House in refusing to appropriate for the expenses of the court for the fiscal year 1913–14.

When the court was created, in spite of all the pressure that was brought to bear from the White House and from the Department of Justice, the chairman of the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, Hon. JAMES R. MANN, and the present ranking Republican member of that committee, Hon. FRED. C. STEVENS, both voted in the committee for an amendment offered by the then ranking Democratic member and now its distinguished chairman, Hon. W. C. ADAMSON, striking out the first six sections of the bill creating the court, as did every Democratic member of the committee except Judge RUSSELL, who was paired in favor of the amendment with Mr. Hubbard, a Republican member, who was absent.

When the bill was being considered in Committee of the Whole the same motion was made and, although the House had a Republican majority of about 50, the vote was a tie. On this motion every Democrat who was present voted in the affirmative.

When the bill was reported from the Committee of the Whole to the House Mr. ADAMSON made a motion to recommit the bill with instructions to report the same back forthwith with all the Commerce Court provisions stricken out. There was a yea-and-nay vote on this motion, and every Democrat who voted voted for the motion, there being 157 yeas to 176 nays, or only 19 majority against the amendment. On this vote 9 Republicans voted with the Democrats.

Coming down to the Sixty-second Congress, every Democratic member of the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce voted to report a bill favorably to abolish the court, except Mr. BROUSSARD. After the action of the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce in reporting a bill to abolish the court, Hon. JOHN J. FITZGERALD, chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, introduced a resolution making committee amendments to the legislative and judicial appropriation bill in order that otherwise would have been subject to a point of order. The resolution was reported favorably from the Committee on Rules and was adopted by the House, and as a result of the adoption of this rule the said appropriation bill was reported to the House with legislative provisions abolishing the Commerce Court, which bill was passed by the House by a large majority far in excess of the Democratic majority. The same bill passed the House three times by overwhelming majorities, the last time over the veto of the President by a majority of three to one, with only one Democrat voting against the bill.

The same bill passed the Senate over the veto of the President by a substantial majority, but less than the required two-thirds, in order to make it a law notwithstanding the veto. On this vote only one Democratic Senator voted against the bill.

The Democratic caucus having limited legislation during the pendency of the tariff bill to certain specific matters, it is thus necessary to have the permission of the caucus to act on Commerce Court legislation, as there is no appropriation for its continuance beyond the 1st day of July, 1913.

No sort of caucus action can make the abolition of this court more of a party mandate than has already been done by the uniform and repeated votes of the Democrats of both the House and Senate in former Congresses. Only 12 cases on appeals from the Commerce Court have been decided by the Supreme Court of the United States, and the Commerce Court has been reversed in all of the 12 but 2. Some persons who were in favor of creating this court, and are now in favor of continuing it, have been clamoring for uniformity of decisions in the class of cases of which the Commerce Court has jurisdiction. Well, they have had uniformity of decision, I am ready to admit, but it is uniformity of error, and it takes too much of the time of the Supreme Court to correct these erroneous decisions, and it costs the taxpayers of the country too much money to defray the expenses of a court that has been reversed in more than 80 per cent of the cases appealed from it that have thus far been passed on by the Supreme Court.

Mr. GARDNER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Massachusetts asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection?

Mr. MURDOCK. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, during the absence of the gentleman from Illinois the other day it developed here as the practice on the floor, for the first time at least, of requesting each gentleman to make known the subject matter upon which he was to extend remarks. I would like to ask the gentleman from Illinois upon what subject he expects to extend his remarks?

Mr. MANN. I am not able to say at present.

Mr. MURDOCK. I object.

THE CURRENCY.

Mr. CALDER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend remarks in the RECORD, with a few observations on currency legislation, and also for the purpose of incorporating in the RECORD an article by the deputy comptroller of the city of New York on the same subject.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York [Mr. CALDER]?

There was no objection.

The article above referred to is as follows:

BANKING ECONOMICS WITH PARTICULAR REFERENCE TO BANKING AND CURRENCY LEGISLATION.

[By Edmund D. Fisher, deputy comptroller, city of New York, before Finance Forum, New York City, Apr. 9, 1913.]

"In approaching the subject of banking economics with particular relation to banking legislation it is necessary to emphasize a few primary principles. When men individually produced and consumed all that was required to maintain life there was no necessity for any medium of exchange because they had nothing to exchange. Division of labor has been coincident with the advance of civilization and now men largely confine themselves to the production or manufacture of single things. Consequently single things in volume now have to be exchanged for many things, and a common medium as the basis of this exchange, generally acceptable to all, is therefore necessary. That medium must be a commodity unit of a definite value, or representative of it and exchangeable for it.

"Banking is the business of handling and developing the mediums of exchange, and a bank the center through which those mediums are transferred or transported for the account of the individual owner who is its customer.

"The history of exchange has been an evolution from the use of the less convenient forms of value to those most easily handled. The present mediums are money (both a medium and a standard of exchange) and credit based upon commodities sold or to be sold—expressed in banking in the terms of money and represented by deposits of the proceeds of notes, bills of exchange, or collateral loans. Both money and credit are largely used for exchange purposes through the instrumentality of the check.

FUNCTIONS OF BANKING.

"The modern bank is, in the first instance, a warehouse for the storage of money, ownership being expressed by entries in pass books which are in the nature of receipts. Transfers of money are made through the medium of a check. Another view of the bank is that it is a manufacturing establishment. It can not manufacture money in the strict sense of the word, but it can manufacture that which is exchangeable for money, namely, deposit currency. It makes loans based upon actual value, discounting future payments, and credits the amounts of those loans to the account of the borrower. These deposit credits can also be transferred by means of checks in a manner similar to the transfer of actual money. It will thus be readily seen that commodities in various forms, shares of corporate business, dwelling houses, and other evidences of value are brought into competition with gold as mediums of exchange. Good bankers, however, are cautious in making loans on these fixed investments. Practice has decreed that all transactions shall be in the terms of actual money and that there shall be a certain relation between the actual money in the bank and the volume of credit thus manufactured, which is, under banking practice, exchangeable for it. Thus the principle of banking reserve, which is a fixed relation of cash to deposit credit, has been developed.

"From still another standpoint banking may be considered as public bookkeeping—the function of recording shares of ownership in circulating wealth and, in the case of savings banks, in recording shares in fixed wealth.

"The principle of clearing is expressed in the practice of banks making a single debit and credit transaction between themselves cover the many individual transactions between the banks concerned and their customers. This practice reduces the labor of the payment and collection of individual transactions to a minimum, and is usually effected daily. The banks settle the aggregate difference involved in the many transactions by paying to, or receiving from, the clearing house which represents them all the aggregate difference in cash. After the 'clearing' has been effected, each bank charges up the separate items drawn upon it to the respective depositors.

BANKING INSTRUMENTS.

"The two great mediums of exchange, therefore, are money, which is actual value, and credit, which generally is presumed to represent actual value and is usually exchangeable for money. From the standpoint of ideal banking all reserve money should be gold, because that commodity is equally desirable in all parts of the world. It is for this reason that it is used as the medium for effecting international exchanges. Credit expressed in the terms of money takes the form of notes issued either by governments or banks, or deposits resulting from the storing of actual money, the transfer of funds from other banks, and the proceeds of loans.

BANKING RELATIONS.

"The relations of a bank to its customers are those of agent and principal. As deposits may be withdrawn by the customer upon demand, or at a stated time, they are under the control and ownership of the customer. The bank simply acts as an agent in loaning amounts deposited by its customers which are not likely to be demanded. The bank acts as a principal only to the extent to which it loans money or purchases securities for investment with money which is the property of its shareholders; that is to say, its capital or surplus.

COLLATERAL FUNCTIONS.

"As the bank is the intermediary between the individual and the community in providing the means for effecting exchanges of commodities, it is evident that its function is one of a quasi-public character. Consequently the principle of government oversight and control over banking is logical and in the interest of the community. The good banker fully realizes this relation and endeavors, as far as possible, to maintain the equilibrium of business and meet the legitimate demands of his customers at all times. He is confronted with difficult problems, however, among which are the relation of banking to speculation, the relation of banking to prices, the relation of banking to investments, and the maintenance of adequate reserves. Business in the aggregate is more or less chaotic. His task is not simple by any means. Inevitably he looks to the dominant banking forces in the nation for advice and assistance in times of difficulty.

INTERNAL MANAGEMENT.

"The banker who thoroughly understands his business can do much as an individual unit to prevent those difficulties which are more or less inherent in banking and business life. He must have full knowledge of the relations between 'fixed' and 'fluid' capital. As his deposits are largely on demand, he must make loans which are likely to be promptly paid. He must discriminate against those which are slow in payment and must suggest to prospective borrowers that requests for such accommodation should more properly be made to those who have permanent funds to invest. He must see that loans made on collateral security, the calling of which in the aggregate will affect the price of securities or the commodities on which they are based, are offset by time deposits that can not be drawn. He must have a definite knowledge of how the bank's funds can be profitably used, be in close touch with the business conditions of his community, and have an intimate knowledge of the wealth, ability, and responsibility of individual borrowers.

BANKING AND BUSINESS.

"Modern business is largely conducted through the banks, and the total 'clearings'—the aggregate of daily exchanges—of any period of business activity is fairly expressive of the grand total of business. It is therefore evident that the problems of banking and currency are of vital moment to the business community and that the condition of business is the direct concern of the banker. The merchant wants undisturbed credit relations with the banker. The banker wants continuing ability to meet the legitimate demand of the merchant. Experience shows, however, that this ideal is far from being realized. There are certain elusive difficulties which are inherent in all periods of business activity. In this country we have no central banking organization to analyze even the simple facts.

PSYCHOLOGICAL ELEMENT.

"The average business man, and oftentimes the supposedly skilled banker, is affected psychologically. Business is active, men are making money, prices are going up. It is very hard to get men under such conditions to do anything to stop production and speculation. They do not realize as reserves increase and deposit currency increases, and there is more to spend, that prices correspondingly increase in automatic preservation of the banking and business balance; that it is a relation based upon inflation, and that there must be a point where the balance will be upset. There comes a time in our American practice when the basic reserves fail to support the credit structure, either because the structure is growing too rapidly or the support is in part being withdrawn. In the fall, for instance, when there are many crops to be moved, and there is not enough money or credit for the purpose, people finally say, 'This thing must stop; we must have more money.' Rates for money go up, and with the impetus of demand there is, sometimes, inability to get money at any rate. Then comes the strain and forced liquidation.

MARGINAL CONTROL.

"Through the lack of definite regulations in our existing system the 'straining point' is often the 'breaking point,' and is invariably followed by a great force of deflation, with the consequent disastrous banking and commercial failures and serious disturbance to prices and wages. In countries where credit principles are more thoroughly understood there has been developed what may be termed 'marginal control' of credit inflation and deflation, tending to stability in the mediums of exchange and resulting in a minimum of financial and commercial difficulty. The Bank of England and the Bank of France are merely automatic regulators upon the great machines that manufacture the mediums of exchange in their respective countries.

"A comparison of the results of regulation and nonregulation, based upon the experience of 30 years preceding 1910, shows that during this period the Bank of France maintained an average relation of liabilities to reserves of 1.46 to 1; the Bank of England 2.19 to 1; and the associated banks of New York 3.57 to 1. During this 30-year period the discount rate of the Bank of France fluctuated from a minimum of 2 per cent to the extreme of but 5 per cent; the rate of the Bank of England from 2 to 7 per cent, while the dominant but nonregulating call rate of the New York money market fluctuated from one-half to 1,100 per cent, with commercial paper ranging from 2½ to 15 per cent.

"On December 30 and 31, 1912, it was difficult to sell commercial paper in New York at 7 per cent. Only three days later, on January 2 of the present year, the rate had dropped to an average of from 4½ to 5 per cent. During the first week of January, 1913, New York banks received from out-of-town correspondents $15,000,000 and during the second week $20,000,000. These large amounts were unavailable in New York during December when sorely needed, and were absolutely useless in the districts from which they came.

"The extremes of New York experience, of course, indicate that under our inflexible system of banking reserves there is great stringency as deposits reach the reserve limit with no means of regulating the strain, whereas the 'marginal' expansion and contraction in foreign systems, meeting all the demands of good business, form a basis for readjustment without undue interest costs or commercial disturbance.

THE COMPOSITE DOLLAR.

"The volume of inflation and deflation in our alternate periods of business activity and depression has been mainly developed through the medium of bank deposits, which are now generally understood to be largely a credit form. In order to establish this more definitely, however, attention is directed to the following analysis of the growth of deposits in the United States during the past 10 years, taken in round numbers from the last published report of the Comptroller of the Currency:

Ten years' growth in deposits		$3,570,000,000
Ten years' growth in cash	$350,000,000
Ten years' growth due from banks	470,000,000
Ten years' growth in loans	2,750,000,000
		3,570,000,000

"Deposits, therefore, have grown from amounts credited to the accounts of individuals, corporations, and banking institutions in three different ways, namely, through deposits of cash including bank-note credit, checks deposited, being transfers of credit, and the deposit of the proceeds of loans, which, of course, constitute 'borrowed' credit. As there is ability, under ordinary banking conditions, to exchange deposit credit for actual money, it is evident that in using the check we have a composite medium of exchange of which not more than 10 per cent is cash and not less than 90 per cent credit. It will thus be seen that the problems connected with the reform of general banking methods include the elimination of inflexibility from the currency element in our money and of inflation from the credit element, with the ability of both currency and credit to expand under legitimate trade requirements and to contract under prompt clearing. The great growth in deposits during the last decade has been largely coincident with the growth of industrial corporations, and it is a matter of common knowledge that much of the loan fabric developed during this period has had for its basis the securities of these corporations. This has been one of the causes of price inflation.

"Without attempting, as a part of this subject, to analyze the bearing upon prices of the vast additional supply of gold during the past 20 years, it certainly is true that the active mediums of exchange—bank notes and deposit currency—depreciate as their own supply increases, and that with this depreciation commodity prices inevitably rise, following the ordinary principle of supply and demand. With these considerations in mind, banking reform from this viewpoint may be regarded as involving the preservation of the solidarity of the composite dollar, and its proper relation, so far as the volume of its activity is concerned, to commodity prices. In normal times the solidarity of the composite dollar is well preserved, but in the crisis periods which follow intervals of credit inflation the cash and the credit elements in the dollar are virtually disintegrated. Gold premium, or premiums on legal tender, mean depreciation of the credit deposit currency, which under such conditions is temporarily distrusted. Radical liquidation, by attacking the most questionable assets supporting deposits, acts as a purifying agent and reduces the volume of deposits. Confidence is thus ultimately restored with the reintegration of the composite dollar. All this inflation and deflation, with the increasing and decreasing clearings, directly disturbs the stability of prices.

BANKING AND PRICES.

"From 1887 to 1897 the deposits of the country increased 51 per cent, while clearings increased but 4 per cent. During this period the population grew 22 per cent and the volume of commodity production 18 per cent. It is evident, therefore, that the slight increase in clearings was not relatively great enough to supply the relative amount of mediums of exchange without affecting the status of prices during the period. As a consequence stock prices went off 20 per cent and commodity prices 21 per cent. The 10-year period following, from 1897 to 1907, tells quite a different story. It was a time of great business activity, with much inherent inflation. Deposits increased 160 per cent, clearings 185 per cent, stock prices 49 per cent, and commodity prices 44 per cent, while the actual volume of commodities rose 30 per cent. A careful scanning of these figures develops the interesting fact that the ordinary relations of the supply and demand of commodities were not the direct factors in the increase or decrease of prices, but that the changes were caused by the increase or decrease of the volume of deposit currency actually used during the respective periods. This is evidenced by the fact that the average increase in the volume of commodities for the first 10 years, which was less than the percentage increase in population, would seem to have resulted in an increase of commodity prices. The reverse, however, was true, and commodity prices declined, while in the latter 10-year period, during which the actual volume of commodities increased 30 per cent, with a population increase of but 20 per cent, the increased volume of commodities did not result in lowering prices. On the contrary, prices went up 44 per cent. A dissection of shorter periods shows that the same general principles prevailed, viz:

	Clearings.	Stock prices.	Commodity prices.	Commodity volume.
1899-1900	−25	− 8	− 9	+ 1.3
1900-1901	+72	+90	+ 7.8	+ 8.8
1906-1908	−38	−39	−14	− 5.5
1908-9	+50	+66	+16	+15.3

"During these briefer periods an analysis of the supporting facts shows that the increase in clearings and stock prices, with increased loans on securities, occurred almost simultaneously and were the composite cause of ultimately increasing commodity prices six months to a year later. The constant repetition of this experience emphasizes the truth of the statement that the variation in deposit clearings is a direct and the chief cause within a given decade of the rise or fall of commodity prices. As deposit currency is manufactured almost at will in various sections of the country, without regard oftentimes to the relation between liquid and nonliquid assets, recurrent inflation and deflation is inevitable without some measure of intelligent control.

BANKING AND BUSINESS BALANCE.

"The banking and business balance—that is, the theoretical and in part the practical relation between the banks and the community—may roughly be expressed by a simple equation representing a year's business:

The banks.			The community.
A—Commercial bills B—Collateral and miscellaneous loans C—Cash	D Deposits	E Investments	F Costs	G Savings

RULE: An increase or decrease of any of the items on one side of the equation would increase or decrease one, or all, of the items on the other side.

"An increase in the amount of commercial bills (A) would indicate an increase in the volume of costs (F); that is to say, would mean an increased volume of business, but would not cause higher prices. Commercial bills largely represent completed transactions, with the prices fixed, which clear themselves by payment at maturity and consequently do not cause inflation. To the extent that there is surplus profit in such business savings (G) would be increased.

"An increase (permanent) in the amount of collateral and miscellaneous loans would increase costs (F) in the aggregate from the standpoint of prices. The use of the money thus borrowed would 'bull' the market for stocks or commodities in proportion as it was used. The loans being on fixed value (nonliquid) would have no inherent ability to clear themselves. The result would be inflation. During a period of forced liquidation and the payment of loans the results would be reversed.

"An increase in cash (C) (permanent), either from new gold supplies or through bank notes that are not 'cleared,' would increase costs through higher prices by direct use or more seriously by increasing deposits through collateral and miscellaneous loans impelled by increased reserves.

"Deposits (D) are the medium, through the use of checks, by which the forces of increase or decrease of A, B, and C are made effective.

BANKING AND INVESTMENTS.

"Investments (F) and savings (G) are interchangeable and balance each other in the equation of banking and business. No difficulty is developed until investments are used as the basis for new loans or savings are squandered. Except for the investment of capital or surplus, fixed capital should not be confused in banking with circulating capital. Investment banking has its place, but it is not the function of commercial banks. The only possible justification for collateral loans is when they are strictly offset by time deposits that can not be used indirectly for exchange purposes.

GUARANTEE OF DEPOSITS.

"A consideration of economic principles brings a realization of how heterogeneous banking practice really is in this country, with its lack of standardized methods and with no principle of central control. A sound banking system with central reserves would be inherently the best 'guarantee of deposits.' Bankers would be compelled to have a quality of credit that could be rediscounted. This would give a strong impulsive force to good business. There would be the realization on the part of the banker that his paper would have to be submitted to trained judgment. That is the chief strength of the whole foreign credit fabric. The Credit Lyonnais, for instance, invests its funds chiefly in that class of bills which can be rediscounted at the Bank of France. Such credit can be instantly converted in case of need into actual money. The principle of guaranteeing deposits is regarded by bankers as a fallacy. The chief element of restriction to bad banking must come from depositors. They give an automatic inspective tendency through the principle of choice. The bad banker is generally put out of business. If we should unify our system of $15,000,000,000 of deposits under a guaranty, depositors throughout the country might say, 'We do not care now where we put our money; it is all guaranteed.' It would be much better to have an occasional failure by an individual bank than to sometime have the entire system assailed. The advocates of the guaranty principle make much of the common origin of the deposit and the bank note, both of which in practice are interchangeable. It is argued that if there is any justification for guaranteeing the bank note by making it a prior lien on all assets or securing it in some other fashion, such as the deposit of Government bonds, deposits should also be secured. Deposit credit and bank-note credit should both grow out of commercial loans, should both be supported by adequate reserves, and should, of course, be interchangeable. They have, however, different functions, and there is a tremendous variance in their volume. The check is presumed to be presented promptly for payment, whereas the bank note, at least under our practice, may remain out for a year or for many years. It is therefore natural that the trend of habit has been to have it more definitely safeguarded. The check involves only the single relation of the creditor and debtor, that of the depositor to his bank. The holder immediately presents it for payment, and if refused still has a legal claim upon the depositor for the amount. The bank note, however, passes as money into the hands of many, mainly in the payment of wages, and should have all the qualities of gold, should be payable in gold, and should not be affected by bank failures.

"The banks, however, as has been stated, are in a quasi-public position, having the function of manufacturing deposit credit currency, and we should safeguard its manufacture by inspection, regulation, and control.

BANKING REFORM.

"The necessity for 'continuing' as well as 'marginal' control by some unit or units with adequate banking powers at once becomes apparent. There can be no effective control, however, without central control. The present-day problem is, how can such control be best developed? This has in the past been generally regarded as a question of some political difficulty. It has been felt that some sort of 'money trust' would inevitably dominate any mechanism that might be developed. The fact has been entirely overlooked that such a power, if it exists, must have been in control for many years. There is no evidence in our financial history of any such power that has been successful, either in promoting a continuity of prosperity or in preventing destructive panics which would undoubtedly be harmful to itself. Look at the record. Summarizing our financial and commercial history for the 50 years following 1856, they may be said to include 24 prosperous years, 18 dull years, and 8 crises years. Politics should be forgotten in coming legislation. Banking reform is now admittedly a nonpolitical question, and any false notes of the past coming from the platforms of any political party should not be taken seriously. Platform-plank utterances can not be presumed to be authority for prejudging the results of patient investigation and analysis with the final establishment of correct principles.

"Intelligent opinion, however, is divided as to whether there shall be central control through the medium of a central bank with branches developed along well-established European lines or a new plan of control and reserves presumed to be better suited to the habits and prejudices of the American people. To satisfy the latter idea there was suggested to the Glass subcommittee of the House Committee on Banking and Currency something along the following lines:

THE NEW PLAN.

"It is proposed that there be organized a minimum number of separate regional reserve banks which are to have branches, such reserve banks to be subscribed to in capital and supported in deposits by the banks of their respective districts. These regional banks should be given such banking powers as would enable them to maintain effective local control. Their deposits and reserves should be interchangeable at the discretion of a national board and should be subject to such regulations as to uniformity of method and discount rates as may be imposed by said board. These regional banks should be managed by local boards of directors elected on a basis fairly representative of the sections of the country they would serve. They should be vested with the power to issue and redeem a uniform and standardized currency under appropriate restrictions, coincident with the gradual retirement of all national-bank notes, all of which functions, however, should be subject to the supervision of the national board. These notes should be a first lien on the combined assets of all the regional banks, based upon their consolidated reserves and with a proper relation to their consolidated commercial credits. Such currency should be printed by the United States Government and issued and retired under such conditions and regulations as may be provided by law under the direction of the national board and under the audit of the Comptroller of the Currency, who should have a resident representative in each of the regional banks. Subscribing banks should be allowed to count their balances in regional banks as reserves and should have the privilege of rediscounting their commercial paper. The functions of the reserve banks should be developed along such banking lines as would make their 'continuing' and 'marginal' control effective.

BALANCED BOARD (A PUBLIC-SERVICE COMMISSION FOR BANKING).

"The public-service commission is a modern type of control over public-service corporations. Something of the same nature was suggested as the centralizing principle in banking. It included, however, both banking and Government representatives. It was called a 'balanced board,' because it was planned to keep an equilibrium between the two classes. Its organization is as follows:

National board organization.

BANKERS.
Chosen by a committee elected by the various State bankers' associations	7
MERCHANTS.
Appointed by the President	3
GOVERNMENT.
To hold office by virtue of their positions:
Secretary of the Treasury	1
Treasurer of the United States	1
Comptroller of the Currency	1
Secretary, Department of Commerce	1
Who shall be president or comptroller of the board, appointed by the President and confirmed by a majority vote of the above-named 14, making a maximum of 15	1
Total	15

"It was suggested that the central board consist of 15 directors, because that is a sufficient number for effective work. The members of such board should be chosen because of inherent ability rather than from the standpoint of sectional availability. They should not act or vote from any local consideration, but from a desire to protect the interests of all. Then, again, actual business would be handled by the regional banks in sections where it originated. The development of the suggested board of 15 is logical, viz, 7 bankers to be chosen by bankers, 3 merchants to be appointed by the President, and 4 Government officials. At this point the bankers constitute half the board and the Government the other half. The choice of the fifteenth member, to be appointed by the President and confirmed by a majority of the fourteen, makes a balanced board, a happy fusion of business, banking, and Government elements, and still leaves the Government with a technical majority. Should a deadlock occur among the fourteen in choosing the fifteenth, an additional vote could be given to the merchants, or it should be lawful for one of the fourteen, who shall be chosen by lot, to cast two votes.

"The members of such a board should have a long tenure of office and good salaries. They should be men of the class that would bear the relation to banking that members of the Supreme Court of the United States bear to the bar of that court. There has been a senseless reiteration of our inability in this country to find good men for a central banking board. This expresses distrust of American manhood and of the genius that has made our Nation great.

CONCLUSION.

"In conclusion, emphasis should again be given to the necessity of central control. Reference has previously been made to 'continuing' as well as 'marginal' control. Both are essential. We give the Government power to coin the gold dollar 900 fine (25.8 grains), and the entire country would receive a financial shock if it were found that the gold was being coined 500 fine. Yet we vest the banks of the country with power to manufacture deposit currency in exchange for this gold, without governmental ability to provide even approximately whether it shall be 100 per cent fine or 100 per cent rotten. We require a large decree of 'insight' as well as 'oversight.' The regional banks, through the principle of self-examination for all contributing banks, will give the insight, and the central board will consolidate the necessary facts for purposes of oversight and control. Panics are the means by which we now occasionally attempt, without realizing it, to make our currency 'fine.'

"A chain is as strong as its weakest link, but the weakest link in a unified banking system can transmit its strain to the strongest, and with the wise, helpful guidance and cooperative control which new legislation will develop much will have been done to promote the best interests of all the people."

COST OF MANUFACTURING ARMOR PLATE AND POWDER.

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Speaker, I submit the following privileged report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. PADGETT, from the Committee on Naval Affairs, submitted the following report, to accompany House resolution 176:

The Committee on Naval Affairs, to whom was referred House resolution 176, calling for information as to contracts for armor and powder, etc., having had the same under consideration, report the same favorably with the following amendments:

Page 2, lines 13 and 15, strike out the word "ton" and in lieu thereof insert the word "pound."

Page 2, strike out all after the word "powder" in lines 18 and 19.

As amended the committee recommend that the resolution do pass.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the resolution.

The Clerk read the resolution, as follows:

House resolution 176.

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Navy be, and he is hereby, instructed to send to the House of Representatives at the earliest date possible the following information:

First. What has been the total expenditure of the United States Government for armor plate for all purposes since its introduction and use in the construction of war vessels?

Second. What portion of this amount has been paid to the Carnegie Steel Co., the Bethlehem Steel Co., and the Midvale Steel Co., and to other steel companies, if any?

Third. What is the cost per ton to the Government for armor plate purchased? What is the cost of manufacturing armor plate per ton?

Fourth. Do steel-manufacturing companies having contracts to furnish gun castings for the United States Government make contracts with foreign countries, the guns being finished wholly or in part by the United States navy yards? If so, what number of guns have been so finished and for what countries, and what compensation has the United States received?

Fifth. What would be the cost of erecting and equipping a Government plant for the manufacture of armor plate?

Sixth. A large portion of the expenses of making guns being already provided for by the Government in its own plant, what would be the additional expense of enlarging the plant so that the guns could be made entirely by the Government?

Seventh. What is the cost per ton of powder now manufactured by Government plants? What is the cost per ton of powder purchased for the use of the Government? What would be the expense of enlarging the Government plant or erecting additional plants to the end that the United States manufacture all its powder, instead of only a portion, as at the present time?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I reserve a point of order against the resolution being privileged.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois makes the point of order that the resolution is not privileged.

Mr. MANN. I will reserve it for the present. I would like to ask the gentleman from Tennessee what is the purpose of the resolution? It is not very easy to get at it from hearing it read.

Mr. PADGETT. The resolution was introduced the other day by the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. BARTON], who wanted it referred to the committee. We have reported it in order to get the information.

Mr. MANN. I do not think it is a privileged motion, although it might be ruled otherwise.

Mr. PADGETT. I supposed that a resolution directing the head of a department to furnish information was privileged.

Mr. MANN. A resolution directing the head of a department to furnish information in that department is privileged, but asking for an opinion from a department is not privileged, and an estimate of what an armor-plate plant will cost is purely a matter of opinion. Is it the general purpose of the resolution to ascertain the cost of an armor-plate factory owned by the Government?

Mr. PADGETT. I presume that is one of the objects of the gentleman who introduced the resolution.

Mr. BARTON. Mr. Speaker, if I may be permitted, the resolution is simply for information for Members who have not had the large experience of older Members in this body, and the opportunity of gaining information that is at hand in the Departments of War and the Navy, so that they will not have to dig down through the musty volumes of the past. Also, it has been recommended by the Secretary of the Navy that an armor-plate factory be constructed. We want this information to guide us when the consideration of that matter is up. When I brought the matter before the House the other day and asked unanimous consent for its present consideration the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD] claimed that it was a privileged matter and that it should be referred to the committee and reported back and taken care of at that time. Believing that he knew the situation, I yielded.

Mr. MANN. But that does not make any difference.

Mr. BUCHANAN of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I move that the committee amendments be agreed to.

Mr. MANN. It does not require any motion, if the matter is before the House.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman make his point of order?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I think I will make the point of order, as the matter comes up in this way, without any opportunity to see what the resolution does provide. Of course that part of the resolution asking for information as to the cost of armor plate and powder would be privileged by itself. No one could have any objection to it, anyway. How far we ought to permit the department to express an opinion at this time by direction of the House as to the cost of an armor-plate factory, where ordinarily the Committee on Naval Affairs has full opportunity to examine the department officials in ordinary hearings, is problematical.

Mr. BUCHANAN of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANN. Certainly.

Mr. BUCHANAN of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I hope that my colleague will not object to this resolution. I desire information along this line, and I believe there are a great many of the Members of Congress who are thinking about matters of this character who desire that information. In fact, there have been press quotations of the Secretary of the Navy in regard to manufacture of war munitions, and probably he has some information that he would be glad to give the Members of the House which would be of important interest.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, my distinguished colleague is a member of the Committee on Naval Affairs. That committee is very diligent in reference to its work. It carries on long examinations of department officials and can obtain all of the information which the department has in the ordinary course of the work before the committee. The Navy Department at any time, through the President or the Secretary of the Navy, can send a communication or estimate to Congress providing for the establishment of an armor-plate factory.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois makes the point of order.

Mr. GARDNER rose.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Massachusetts desire to be heard? The Chair is ready to rule.

Mr. GARDNER. Mr. Speaker, if the Chair is ready to rule, I do not.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is ready to rule. Part of this resolution is in order and part of it is not. The Chair listened carefully to the reading of the resolution when it was before the House a day or two since, and wondered then that some gentleman who takes an interest in parliamentary matters did not raise the point of order at that time. Wherever a resolution requires the expression of an opinion it is out of order.

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw the resolution.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee withdraws the resolution.

ADJOURNMENT UNTIL THURSDAY NEXT.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that when the House adjourns to-day it adjourn to meet on Thursday next. A meeting of the Democratic caucus is called for to-morrow at 2 o'clock, and that will take up most of the day.

Mr. MANN. Why not meet on Friday?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, there are some matters here that it is necessary to attend to. These opium bills have been reported back to the House, and that will probably take the time of the House on Thursday.

Mr. MANN. Could not that just as well be done on Friday?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I think there are other matters that will come up on Friday. I will say to the gentleman from Illinois that if it is possible to do so I would like to get rid of the pending business before the House this week and then try to make an arrangement with himself and the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. MURDOCK] to adjourn over the Fourth of July. There are some matters here that need attention, and I think it is better to meet on Thursday if we want to get through with them this week.

Mr. MANN. Of course that requires another meeting on Monday.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. If we can reach an agreement to adjourn, it will be only for a few minutes.

Mr. GARDNER. Mr. Speaker, is it the gentleman's intention to bring up all three of the opium bills on Thursday?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. The gentleman from New York [Mr. HARRISON] has the matter in charge. I understand that he desires to bring up one of them this afternoon and the other two on Thursday.

Mr. HARRISON of New York. That is correct.

Mr. GARDNER. I want to ask the gentleman from New York whether it is his intention to bring up the bill on Thursday which involves the question of whether there is an exemption in the Massachusetts statute respecting the sale of cocaine. The gentleman understands to what I allude.

Mr. HARRISON of New York. If the gentleman from Alabama will yield to me, I will state that it was my hope that I could call up and perhaps secure the passage of the first one of these bills, which was reported yesterday, this afternoon.

Mr. MANN. That is the manufacturing bill?

Mr. HARRISON of New York. Yes; and that then we may proceed at the next session of the House to call up the bill, which will then under the rules be on the calendar, the bill which strengthens the opium-exclusion act, and at the conclusion of the consideration of that bill I had hoped we may proceed at once to the consideration of the bill requiring the registration of persons dealing in narcotics, to which the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GARDNER] now refers.

Mr. GARDNER. I rather hope the gentleman will not bring that up on Thursday, because, although I know the gentleman is very accurate, I never saw that bill until this morning, and many Members of the House have never seen the bill at all, and, though I know the information we will have from the gentleman will be very full, there is a good deal in that bill on which I should not be prepared myself to vote on Thursday.

Mr. HARRISON of New York. I will say to the gentleman from Massachusetts I have a copy of the act of the State of Massachusetts about which inquiry was made——

Mr. GARDNER. I have sent for one myself, but I hope the gentleman will not press that matter on Thursday.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, there may be some other matters necessary to be disposed of on Thursday, certainly one of these bills, and in order that we may try to clean up all pending business and get away over the Fourth of July I renew my request that when the House adjourns to-day it adjourn to meet on Thursday next.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama asks unanimous consent that when the House adjourns to-day it adjourn to meet on Thursday next. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, Mr. BURKE of Wisconsin was granted leave of absence, for 10 days from this date, on account of illness in his family.

WITHDRAWAL OF PAPERS.

By unanimous consent, Mr. KREIDER was granted leave to withdraw from the files of the House, without leaving copies, the papers in the case of Charles Harris (H. R. 18900, 62d Cong., 2d sess.), no adverse report having been made thereon.

THE JEW IN ROUMANIA.

Mr. MOORE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House at the conclusion of the remarks of the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD] for 10 minutes on the subject of the Jew in Roumania.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania asks unanimous consent to address the House for 10 minutes when the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD] gets through, his subject being the Jew in Roumania. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

PROHIBITING THE IMPORTATION AND USE OF OPIUM, ETC.

Mr. HARRISON of New York. Mr. Speaker, by direction of the Committee on Ways and Means I desire to submit a privileged report (H. Rept. 24) on the bill H. R. 1966.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 1966) to amend an act entitled "An act to prohibit the importation and use of opium for other than medicinal purposes," approved February 9, 1909.

The SPEAKER. Ordered printed and referred to the Union Calendar.

REGISTRATION OF PERSONS DEALING IN OPIUM, ETC.

Mr. HARRISON of New York. Mr. Speaker, by direction of the Committee on Ways and Means I desire to submit another privileged report (H. Rept. 23) upon the bill H. R. 6282.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 6282) to provide for the registration of with collectors of internal revenue and to impose a special tax upon all persons who produce, import, manufacture, compound, deal in, dispense, sell, distribute, or give away opium or coca leaves, their salts, derivatives, or preparations, and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER. Ordered printed and referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

GETTYSBURG REUNION.

Mr. FOWLER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the resolution which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. FOWLER] asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of a resolution which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

A resolution for the appropriation of $4,000 to defray the expenses of the soldiers of the Civil War now residing in Washington, D. C., from Washington, D. C., to Gettysburg, Pa., and return.

Resolved by the House of Representatives in Congress assembled (the Senate concurring therein), That the sum of $4,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, be, and is hereby, appropriated, to be paid out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, for the purpose of defraying the expenses of the soldiers of the Civil War now residing in Washington, D. C., from Washington, D. C., to Gettysburg, Pa., and return, for the purpose of permitting such soldiers to attend the fiftieth anniversary of the Battle of Gettysburg, to be held July 1, 2, 3, and 4, 1913.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, may I ask my colleague whether this is a joint or a concurrent resolution?

Mr. FOWLER. It is a joint resolution.

Mr. MANN. The language of the resolution is in the form of a concurrent resolution and not in the form of a joint resolution. It ought to be changed to read, "Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives."

Mr. FOWLER. I concede it ought to be.

Mr. MURDOCK. May I ask the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. FOWLER] a question? Is it a fact that the State of Pennsylvania has made a similar appropriation applying to the State of Pennsylvania?

Mr. FOWLER. I understand that Pennsylvania has not only done this, but a majority of the States throughout the country have done the same thing.

Mr. MANN. Our State has done so, I know.

Mr. CULLOP. Indiana has done likewise.

Mr. FOWLER. Illinois has done likewise, and has also instructed the counties of the State to give $10 each to the soldiers.

Mr. MOORE. Will the gentleman yield?

The SPEAKER. To whom does the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. FOWLER] yield?

Mr. FOWLER. I have already yielded to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN]; but if he has finished, I will yield to others.

Mr. BURKE of Pennsylvania. Is it not a fact that the present estimate of attendance of the soldiers of the Civil War at Gettysburg is 10,000 in excess of those for whom funds have been provided?

Mr. FOWLER. I have been so informed.

Mr. BURKE of Pennsylvania. And is it not a fact that there is a deficit now in the matter? Whether it is to be met by the Federal Government or the State of Pennsylvania is not yet determined.

Mr. FOWLER. I understand through the press that that is true. There has been no arrangement to take care of the soldiers who reside in the District of Columbia, and that is the object of this resolution.

Mr. BURKE of Pennsylvania. Would not the gentleman consent to an amendment to extend this beyond those of the District of Columbia, it being a Federal Government matter, and allow sufficient appropriation to cover the deficit arising?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I wish to say this to the gentleman, namely, that this resolution as it is drafted does not seem to be in the form that would really carry an appropriation if it went through. More than that, it does not provide how the money shall be expended or to whom paid, and, more than that, it provides for any soldier, whereas the provisions that have been made heretofore by the State of Pennsylvania and the other States relate only to soldiers who took part in the Battle of Gettysburg. Under those circumstances, Mr. Speaker, I think the resolution ought to be sent to a committee to be put in proper form and, therefore, I insist on the reference of the resolution.

Mr. CULLOP. Will the gentleman from Alabama yield?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Yes.

Mr. CULLOP. I understood the gentleman from Alabama to say that the appropriation of other States only applied to the soldiers who were engaged in the Battle of Gettysburg?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. That is my understanding.

Mr. CULLOP. That is not correct as to Indiana. It applies to all the soldiers of the rebellion on both sides.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. What I wish to call the attention of the gentleman to is that I think the resolution ought to be put in proper form before being passed by the House. The Committee on Appropriations can have a session on Thursday, when the House will be in session, and that will be ample time. I think the resolution before being passed by the House ought to be properly amended, so that I shall insist, Mr. Speaker, upon its going to committee.

Mr. MOORE. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield for one moment?

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. FOWLER. I will.

Mr. MOORE. A moment ago the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN], who comes from the third great State of the Union——

Mr. MANN. The first. [Laughter.]

Mr. BURKE of Pennsylvania. The fourth.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. FOWLER] has the floor.

Mr. MOORE. I asked the gentleman to yield to me for a moment.

Mr. FOWLER. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. MOORE. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. FOWLER] is a defender of the faith. He believes in doing honor to the veterans of the great Civil War, whether they come from the North or from the South. His colleague from Illinois [Mr. MANN] believes in the same thing, but he hesitates to give any credit whatever to the great Commonwealth of Pennsylvania, second only to the Empire State of this Union, which has made ample appropriation to take care of the visitors from the various States of the Union on the anniversary of the Battle of Gettysburg. The gentleman from Illinois has indulged in one of his usual little flings that characterize him occasionally when he feels in the humor of going after somebody outside of the State of Illinois.

Now, in regard to all these soldiers who are to go to Gettysburg from the various States of the Union in excess of 40,000 provided for by the United States to the extent of $150,000, the State of Pennsylvania has applied $35,000 additional. This was provided for by the governor and the Legislature of Pennsylvania last night, in order that these overflow visitors might be taken care of. And I desire to say that this $35,000, added to what has already been provided by the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania, now makes the total appropriation $450,000 which the State of Pennsylvania is expending for this memorable national purpose. And I desire to add, inasmuch as the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] has had his little dig, that Pennsylvania has not fallen behind her splendid reputation for hospitality in this matter. Aside from what the Government of the United States has done, Pennsylvania has not failed to make ample appropriations. [Applause.]

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, the presumption of the gentleman from Pennsylvania on this occasion has never been equaled in the history of the United States. They asked Congress to appoint a joint committee to cooperate with the State of Pennsylvania in devising plans for the commemoration of the Battle of Gettysburg. At first they assured Congress that it would not cost the Federal Government a dollar, and yet, under the same old practice, once the camel got his nose under the tent, he follows with his whole body. Congress appropriated $150,000 as a contribution, estimated as accurately as could be estimated, of one-half of the expense of the celebration. Now the gentlemen come here and speak of the inadequacy of the appropriation made by the Federal Government to take care of these men who are going to Pennsylvania at the invitation of the State of Pennsylvania——

Mr. MOORE. On a national battle field——

Mr. FITZGERALD. To commemorate a great historical event in that State, ostensibly, but in order to advertise the State of Pennsylvania more than anything else. It is time that these gentlemen understood that some of us at least have not forgotten what happened in the past.

And let me say to the gentleman [Mr. MOORE] that there was no action on the part of anybody from Pennsylvania that resulted in the giving of this additional $35,000 by the State of Pennsylvania to take care of these soldiers. An attempt was made to have the Secretary of War issue supplies in excess of the amount authorized under the joint resolution, in order to take care of them. I received a communication, and I think as a result of the conference I had with the Secretary of War he realized that it was necessary for him to obey the law. The matter was taken up then in the State of Pennsylvania, and it provided the additional money, instead of shouldering it off on the Federal Treasury, as seems to be the popular thing to do to-day in all these matters.

Mr. BURKE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Yes; I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. BURKE of Pennsylvania. Now that the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations has adverted to the fact the Secretary of War had brought the matter to his attention and has suggested that there was an effort made by somebody, presumably State officials in Pennsylvania, to have the Secretary exceed his authority——

Mr. FITZGERALD. I did not say that——

Mr. BURKE of Pennsylvania. To make an expenditure not authorized by law, is it not a fact that the commission of Pennsylvania notified the Secretary of War, who has charge of these arrangements——

Mr. FITZGERALD. Yes.

Mr. BURKE of Pennsylvania (continuing). Who has charge of these arrangements on the battle field for the entertainment and care of these veterans who fought on both sides of the Civil War? Is it not a fact that they made known to the Secretary of War on Thursday afternoon that there would be an excess of 10,000 over the estimated number of these visiting veterans? Is it not a fact that that was the full extent to which the Pennsylvania commission went? And in view of the fact that the gentleman has suggested that the Secretary of War brought this to his attention, may I ask did the Secretary of War make any suggestion beyond the fact of conveying to him, as chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, the information that there would be this deficit? And is the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations willing to admit that he, as the fiduciary leader of the Democratic Party——

Mr. FITZGERALD. Whatever that may be——

Mr. BURKE of Pennsylvania. Gave the Secretary of War to understand that the Democratic Party would not stand for meeting a deficit created by the attendance of men who fought in the blue and in the gray on the greatest battle field of the Republic? Is not that a fact?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Does the gentleman wish me to answer his question?

Mr. BURKE of Pennsylvania. I do.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Or is the gentleman simply trying to orate for the benefit of Pennsylvania?

Mr. BURKE of Pennsylvania. I shall be delighted to hear from the gentleman from New York.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I do not know what the commission appointed by the State of Pennsylvania said or did or conveyed to the Secretary of War. I do not speak as representing any party when I communicate with officials in the departments; but I stated to the Secretary of War that as one Representative in this House I would not acquiesce in the action of the head of any department, whether he were a Republican, a Democrat, or a Murdockian [laughter], presuming under any pretense to do something that he was not authorized by law to do, because whenever any head of a department gets it into his mind that he can do that we have no longer a government of law, but we have a government of men; and the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BURKE] need not imagine that by indulging in these rhetorical flights about the old soldier he can cover up violations of law, or that he can cover up illegal acts by trying to spread the flag of our country over them. I would not acquiesce in it in this administration any more than I would in the past administration, when the gentleman's party was in power. The sooner that is understood by all heads of executive departments, regardless of what administration is in power, the better it will be for the country.

Mr. BURKE of Pennsylvania. Was it not the Secretary of War's suggestion that an appropriation be properly made for this purpose?

Mr. FITZGERALD. No; he did not suggest that, exactly. He suggested that he would go ahead and issue supplies——

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. PAYNE. Is there any way by which the Chair can obtain a truce between these hostile gentlemen here, so that they will not fight over again the battle between the Government and the States?

The SPEAKER. The Chair can not regulate what gentlemen say on the floor, unless they use opprobrious or unparliamentary language.

Mr. MANN. Will my colleague, Mr. PAYNE, yield to me for a moment?

Mr. PAYNE. Yes.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, whenever the General Government undertakes an affair, it provides the money that is necessary, and there is no man in this Chamber who would hesitate for a moment to provide all the money that was necessary to take care of any of the old soldiers on the Union or Confederate side, at any affair which was undertaken on the invitation of the Government. But the State of Pennsylvania, a great State, with great wealth and great people, undertook to provide a celebration to be held on the battle field of Gettysburg. They asked some assistance from the General Government in the form of a commission, and a resolution was passed here providing for a commission. The plans were agreed upon. It was the invitation of the State of Pennsylvania, for which she deserves credit.

Subsequently they came before us and asked Congress to pay a portion of the expense, and the gentlemen then and now representing the State of Pennsylvania on the floor of the House agreed to a proposition that the expense of the General Government should be confined to the appropriation made in the bill, which, I believe, was $150,000; and they said—then, not now—that the State of Pennsylvania would take care of any extra expense; that if the General Government would appropriate $150,000, and provide various officers of the Army to look after things at Gettysburg, the State of Pennsylvania would pay the remainder of the expense. But as usually is the case wherever anyone sees a chance to put his hand into the Treasury of the United States instead of the home treasury, they came here after a while and said they would like to have more money. I am glad that finally the State had the manhood to live up to its obligations, and to pay the expense without insisting that Congress should increase the amount originally provided, though I am sorry that the distinguished gentleman, in stating the facts, should still be crying about it. [Laughter.]

Mr. BURKE of Pennsylvania. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANN. Certainly.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Still reserving the right to object, I wish to say to the gentleman from Illinois that it is manifest that if this resolution were to pass in its present form, it would accomplish no result, because the money could not be drawn out of the Treasury upon it. I have no doubt that there is a sentiment among us all in the House to give an opportunity to these old veterans to go to the battle field of Gettysburg, but the resolution ought to be passed in a form in which the money can be drawn. It will have to be signed by the President. This resolution would not go to the President if passed in its present form. In the next place, there is in the resolution no safeguard that this $4,000 will not be used by other people besides the veterans, and no provision is made in the resolution for the proper expenditure of the money or for a proper report to be made as to how it has been expended. Now, I reserve the right to object, and ask the gentleman if I do not object if he will consent to allow the resolution to be referred to the Committee on Appropriations with instructions to report it back on Thursday in proper form?

Mr. FITZGERALD. I shall object to that direction myself.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Then, I will ask if he will consent that it be referred to the Committee on Appropriations?

Mr. FOWLER. Mr. Speaker, the resolution itself provides for the appropriation of $4,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary to defray the traveling expenses of the soldiers residing in the District of Columbia. That is as definite as language could make it.

Mr. BARTLETT. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FOWLER. In a moment. I desire to say, Mr. Speaker, that I have investigated and find that there are about 700 soldiers of the blue and the gray who reside in the District of Columbia. I have also been informed through an official channel that between 400 and 500 of them will be able to go to the anniversary of the Battle of Gettysburg and that it would take less, perhaps, than the amount the resolution calls for.

I think, Mr. Speaker, the resolution is ample to provide for the object for which it was intended, and that is to give these old soldiers an opportunity once more to meet each other on that battle field, not in battle, but in a spirit of common brotherhood, recognizing one flag and commemorating that memorable event which took place there 50 years ago in that mighty struggle for supremacy in this country. I say, Mr. Speaker, that this resolution, drawn without form and in haste, has some little discrepancies in it that can be cured by one simple amendment. To refer it to the Committee on Appropriations means nothing but its death. I know that the sentiment of this House is in favor of defraying the expenses of these veterans of the Civil War, those of the South as well as those of the North, because we have come now to a common understanding that there is no North, no South, but one country, for the good of mankind, marching on to higher levels, inviting other nations to a higher civilization.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I shall object, unless the gentleman takes some measure to put the resolution in proper form.

Mr. FOWLER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that I may withdraw the resolution and prepare it in proper form and submit it at the next regular-session day of the House.

Mr. MOORE. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I want to ask the gentleman a question.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania reserves the right to object.

Mr. FOWLER. I will yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. BARTLETT. A parliamentary inquiry, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. BARTLETT. Has not the gentleman from Illinois the right to withdraw the resolution?

The SPEAKER. He has, by unanimous consent; but the gentleman from Pennsylvania wants to ask him a question, and the gentleman from Illinois yields.

Mr. BARTLETT. One further parliamentary inquiry. This resolution is not in order except by unanimous consent?

The SPEAKER. That is true.

Mr. BARTLETT. Does it require unanimous consent to withdraw a resolution which is not in order except by unanimous consent?

The SPEAKER. The Chair was going to put the question, and the gentleman from Pennsylvania impinged on the scene with a question to the gentleman from Illinois, who seems to be willing to answer it.

Mr. BARTLETT. A parliamentary inquiry, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. BARTLETT. I desire to submit the question if the gentleman from Illinois can not withdraw his request for unanimous consent?

The SPEAKER. Of course he can.

Mr. BARTLETT. Nobody has a right to object to that. The resolution is not before the House, and he withdraws his request for unanimous consent, and that ends it.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Georgia overlooks the element that the gentleman from Illinois asked unanimous consent not only to withdraw the resolution but to put it in proper form and report it at the next session of the House.

Mr. BARTLETT. The resolution is not before the House; he asks unanimous consent to consider it.

The SPEAKER. But his request included the proposition of giving it the right of way on the next day that the House meets. It would not take unanimous consent to withdraw a proposition which is not before the House, but he couples it with this further request.

Mr. MANN. Why not let the resolution go to the committee?

Mr. FOWLER. Because that will be the end of the resolution.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent to withdraw his resolution and put it in proper form and give it the right of way on the next day that the House meets.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, I object. Let the gentleman withdraw it and then offer it on Thursday next.

Mr. FOWLER. Very well. I withdraw the resolution.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman can withdraw his resolution and does withdraw it.

Mr. MANN. It is not yet before the House.

The SPEAKER. Technically the gentleman from Illinois is correct.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS.

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD?

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. I reserve the right to object. The gentleman from Kansas [Mr. MURDOCK] objected to a similar request of mine a moment ago. The gentleman from Kansas is now in the Chamber, but I shall not object to the request made by the gentleman from Pennsylvania. I thought possibly the gentleman from Kansas might desire to do so.

Mr. MURDOCK. I have no objection, if the gentleman will state the subject matter of his remarks.

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. I was going to state the subject matter. I wish to extend my remarks by printing a memorial from certain citizens of Pennsylvania with remarks thereon.

Mr. MURDOCK. Upon what subject?

Mr. MANN. What is the subject of the memorial?

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, I will revise that request by asking unanimous consent to address the House for five minutes by having this memorial read and then making a few remarks upon it.

Mr. MURDOCK. Reserving the right to object, what is the subject matter of the memorial?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, I asked to be permitted to address the House to-day after the routine business had been concluded, and I received that permission.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York by special order of the House is entitled to an hour.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I demand the regular order.

The SPEAKER. The regular order is to recognize the gentleman from New York for an hour.

APPROPRIATIONS.

CONTROL OF FEDERAL EXPENDITURES THE DUTY OF THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, the rapid increase in the cost of the Federal Government is attracting universal attention. Many thoughtful men regard our profligate fiscal arrangements as the greatest menace to the permanency of the Union, and the proper solution of the many problems involved is complicated by the good-natured indifference of the people. While a Treasury surplus is maintained by a system of indirect taxation so ingeniously devised that individual burdens are not readily appreciated but are assiduously proclaimed as blessings, it will be difficult to awaken the mass of the people to the importance of the questions involved.

Many attempts have recently been made to stir the country to an interest in the problems. Students of our political system, officials in the executive departments, and Members of the Congress, who have been compelled to deal more particularly with the finances of the Government, have agreed at least in one conclusion—that some radical change is imperatively required in the Federal system if evils of alarming proportions are to be avoided.

In proposing remedies for existing or impending evils much misunderstanding results from lack of knowledge of the present fiscal system of the country and of its growth and development. Much confusion also follows from the indiscriminate use of the term "budget" by many whose conception of the term varies radically and whose "budget" schemes are irreconcilable.

When the Constitution of the United States was adopted, in 1787, the budget, as known to-day in Great Britain, had not been developed and nowhere existed in definite form. Pitt was then working out the system of control upon which the present budget system of Great Britain is based, and at the very time of the adoption of our Constitution he was establishing the consolidated fund, or the general treasury fund, out of which all grants are now made, though with certain priorities established.

WISE FORETHOUGHT OF THE FATHERS.

The framers of the Constitution, with the knowledge then available, provided (Art. I, sec. 9, par. 7) that:

> No money shall be drawn from the Treasury but in consequence of appropriations made by law, and a regular statement and account of the receipts and expenditures of all public money shall be published from time to time.

This provision was designed to retain in the representatives of the people, or in the legislature, control of the public money and to insure full publicity of all financial transactions in which the Government is involved. They are two essential elements of control of public money in the representatives of the people in every constitutional government whatever form the budget takes.

In order to insure such control of the purse, the Committee on Ways and Means of the House was established in 1789. At first a select committee, in 1802 it was made a standing committee. During the first 76 years of the Government this committee had jurisdiction of all revenue measures and of all the appropriation bills. Until 1844 the appropriations were all carried in one bill, but in 1847, nine separate bills were reported and from time to time the number has been increased until there are now 13, including the general deficiency bill.

In 1865 a movement was initiated to divide the jurisdiction of the Committee on Ways and Means. Various proposals were submitted; the most alarming among them apparently were those to create a Committee on Banking and Currency and a Committee on Internal Revenue, and to transfer from the Ways and Means Committee jurisdiction over the subject matters indicated generally by the titles of the committees.

The various proposals were referred to the Committee on Rules, which reported in favor of the creation of the Committee on Appropriations, to which was given jurisdiction of all the appropriation bills, and a Committee on Banking and Currency, to which was given jurisdiction of banking and currency legislation, and all revenue legislation was left with the Committee on Ways and Means.

Perusal of the debate leads to the conclusion that the arrangement had been worked out to the satisfaction of the Committee on Ways and Means. The report was submitted by Mr. Cox of Ohio, a Democrat, and one of the minority, and the recommendations were acquiesced in with singular docility by the members of the Committee on Ways and Means. Thaddeus Stevens, of Pennsylvania, quit the chairmanship of that committee to become chairman of the new Committee on Appropriations.

No change was made in the jurisdiction of the committees until 1880.

In the year previous the Committee on Rules commenced the most noted revision of the rules of the House in its history. It was an unusually strong committee, consisting of Speaker Randall; Alexander H. Stephens, of Georgia; Blackburn, of Kentucky; Garfield, of Ohio; and Frye, of Maine.

EFFORTS TO DISTRIBUTE APPROPRIATION BILLS.

During the consideration of their report in 1880 numerous efforts were made to distribute the appropriation bills among various committees, but with the exception of the agricultural bill and the river and harbor bill all were left with the Committee on Appropriations. The debate discloses that in giving the river and harbor bill to the Committee on Commerce the House had undoubtedly been influenced by the fact that for a number of years the Committee on Commerce, at the request of the Committee on Appropriations, had prepared the river and harbor bill, which, when reported, was immediately referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

In 1885 a new movement was initiated under the leadership of Mr. Morrison, of Illinois, which resulted in the present assignment of appropriation bills, as a result of which eight separate independent committees of the House consider departmental estimates and prepare appropriation bills for the consideration of the House. While such an illogical, unscientific, and universally condemned system prevails attempts at reform will be futile, and an effective remedy for the resulting evils is impossible.

DEMAND FOR A "BUDGET."

The most common demand that has come from recent agitation is for a "budget." I am frequently asked whether I favor a "budget," and my invariable reply is a request to be informed as to what is meant by a "budget." The answers indicate the confusion that prevails even among those most interested as to the meaning of the expression, and the difficulty is not lessened by the fact that plans have been formulated for us from a consideration of the systems in vogue in various countries where the parliamentary or some other responsible government exists, without any careful consideration of the inaptness of such system in our existing institutions.

The Wisconsin State Board of Public Affairs last year issued a very interesting publication entitled "The Budget."

The first essential—

It is stated therein—

In the preparation of any budgetary plan for legislative consideration is the compilation of estimated costs for the fiscal period under consideration. These estimates should, as a rule, be prepared by the administrative departments, because they are versed in the details of their respective offices and familiar with the expenses which may occur in the performance of their duties. * * * An essential element in budgetary consideration involves the formulation of a plan in fiscal affairs. * * * There should be a budget balance—a correlation between estimated revenues and expenditures of the State. These should be exhibited so that their relative amounts may be examined and a comparison made between them. Not only is it necessary to secure a comparison between the total expenditures and revenues, but a comparison should be possible between the various purposes of expenditures, so that it may easily be determined how much it is proposed to grant for one object in comparison with the amount available for another service. * * * As Stourm says, the budget should give not one total but all of the receipts and disbursements, so that a comparison may be easily made at a glance between the various items.

H. C. Adams, in The Science of Finance, insists that the budget should be a comprehensive document picturing the general conditions of the country's finances and at the same time making possible an accurate opinion upon any definite proposal.

He suggests that—

It is necessary that a budget statement begin by an exhibit on a single page of the aggregate or actual receipts and expenditures for the current year, in order that they may be compared with the receipts and expenditures to be provided for by laws yet to be enacted.

He conceives of a budget "so formulated as the principal means by which the administration is held in check and the general policy of government controlled."

It must be remembered that Wisconsin has no budget or any fiscal system whatever worthy of such a characterization.

The practice—

It is stated in the publication mentioned—

of voting appropriations as it exists at present in Wisconsin is lacking in many of these essentials. With respect to the preparation of estimates very little has been done. * * * There has been heretofore no adequate provision for auditing of public accounts. Many of our departments have never been audited at all.

In working out a plan for the State of Wisconsin which "does not involve a budget at all, as that term is frequently used—that is, where the entire expenditures of the State are voted periodically in one bill"—the information to be assembled and submitted to the legislature will contain—

First, a history of the past appropriations, information as to what the appropriation was, the actual cost of each department for the one complete year for each of the various services performed by the department, and the unexpended appropriation.

Secondly, it will show the request of the departments and the estimates of their needs for the ensuing biennium, will give citations to statutes authorizing payments to be made from the treasury in favor of each department, and the recommendations of the board with respect to the appropriations to be made by the legislature.

DEFINITION OF THE "BUDGET."

In the report of the so-called Commission on Economy and Efficiency made to the President under date of June 19, 1912, under the title "Definition and purpose of the budget," it is said:

As used in this report, the budget is considered as a proposal to be prepared by the administration and submitted to the legislature. The use of a budget would require that there be a complete reversal of procedure by the Government; that the executive branch submit a statement to the legislature which would be its account of stewardship as well as its proposals for the future. A national budget thus prepared and presented would serve the purpose of a prospectus. Its aim would be to present in summary form the facts necessary to shape the policy of the Government as well as to provide financial support. The summaries of fact included in the budget would also serve as a key or index to the details of transactions and of estimates, which would be submitted with the budget or which would be contained in accounting records and reports.

If it be assumed that the essentials of any budgetary plan are accurately stated in these statements, it is difficult to understand the reckless denunciation of the Federal system which its critics so freely voice.

President Taft, in his message of February 26, 1913, said:

The Government is not only in the position of having gone along for a century without a budget, but, what is at this time even more to the point, it has not the organic means either for preparing or for considering one. In the executive branch there is no established agency which may be utilized for assembling the data required for the preparation of budget summaries. The law governing estimates requires that they be prepared and submitted by various heads of departments and independent establishments without executive review or revision. This makes it impossible to submit a budget unless the President does it on his own initiative.

This statement of President Taft epitomizes the criticisms of our present system. I believe such criticisms to be not well founded. No legislation has been more carefully considered nor more effectively worded than the laws regulating the preparation and submission of estimates.

In accordance with the various statutes all annual estimates for the public service must be submitted to Congress through the Secretary of the Treasury and included in the Book of Estimates. The estimates must be transmitted only through the Secretary of the Treasury, and he is required to have them properly classified, compiled, indexed, and printed. The estimates must be prepared and submitted by the heads of the various departments and other officers required to make estimates to the Secretary of the Treasury on or before the 15th day of October. If they be not so submitted, the Secretary of the Treasury must cause to be prepared in the Treasury Department on or before the 1st day of November estimates for such appropriations as in his judgment shall be requisite in every such case and include them in the Book of Estimates. Estimates, except those for sundry civil expenses, must be prepared and submitted according to the order and arrangement of the appropriation acts for the year preceding, and any changes in such order and arrangement and transfers of salaries for one office or bureau to another office or bureau or the consolidation of offices or bureaus desired by the head of any executive department may be submitted by note in the estimates.

DUTY OF THE SECRETARY OF THE TREASURY.

The Secretary of the Treasury is required to rearrange any estimates submitted to him which do not conform to the order and arrangement of the prior appropriation act. All estimates are required to be included in the estimates submitted to the Secretary of the Treasury for insertion in the Book of Estimates and special or additional estimates for that fiscal year must only be submitted to carry out laws subsequently enacted or when deemed imperatively necessary for the public service by the department in which they shall originate, in which case the special or additional estimate must be accompanied by a full statement of its imperative necessity and reasons for its omission in the annual estimates.

In communicating estimates of expenditures and appropriations to Congress, the heads of departments must specify as nearly as may be convenient the sources from which such estimates are derived, and the calculations upon which they are founded, and must discriminate between such estimates as are conjectural in their character and such as are framed upon actual information and applications from disbursing officers. They must also give references to any law or treaty by which the proposed expenditures are authorized, specifying the date of each and the volume and page of the Statutes at Large, or the Revised Statutes, as the case may be, and the section of the act in which the authority is to be found.

All estimates for the compensation of officers authorized by law to be employed must be founded upon the express provision of law and not upon the authority of executive discretion. If the head of a department, when about to submit the annual estimates, finds that the usual items of such estimates vary materially in amount from the appropriations ordinarily asked for the object named, and especially from the appropriation granted for the same objects for the preceding year, and if new items not theretofore usual are introduced into the estimates for any year, he must accompany the estimates by minute and full explanations of all such variations and new items, showing the reasons and grounds upon which the amounts are required and the different items added.

Not only is the amount believed necessary to be appropriated required to be stated in the estimates, but the Secretary of the Treasury must annex to the estimates a statement of the appropriations for the service of the preceding year which may have been made by former acts. He is also required to submit a statement specifying in detail the number and class of officers and employees of every grade and nature, with the rate of compensation to each, that may in his judgment be necessary to conduct properly the business of collecting the revenue at each port of entry in the United States, together with an estimate of the amounts required for contingent expenses at each of said ports and for such additional expenses of the service as can not be otherwise specifically provided.

REVENUES MUST BE ESTIMATED.

Immediately upon the receipt of the regular annual estimates of appropriations needed for the various branches of the Government the Secretary of the Treasury must estimate as accurately as possible the revenues of the Government for the next ensuing fiscal year, and he is also required, in his annual report to Congress, to prepare and submit estimates of the public revenue and expenditures for the current fiscal year and for the fiscal year next ensuing, together with a statement of the receipts and expenditures of the Government for the preceding completed fiscal year.

There are several other requirements, none of which, with one exception, need be recited. The other important provision will be discussed later.

A careful examination of the requirements of the various statutes, stated here almost in haec verba, discloses the minute and detailed information required and obtained by Congress.

If the information transmitted to Congress is inadequate, improperly arranged, misleading, or confusing, responsibility does not rest with Congress. Everyone who is familiar with the history of the enactment of the various statutes compelling the furnishing of the information required by the law knows that it has been a continual struggle on the part of Congress to compel the executive departments to furnish the necessary data to enable the Congress to make proper appropriations, and that there has been ample authority, if the Executive desired to exercise it, to furnish the most complete information possible. Had such an attempt ever been made it would have been welcomed by Congress.

OPINION OF HON. JAMES BRYCE.

Mr. Bryce, in the American Commonwealth, says:

In the United States the Secretary of the Treasury sends annually to Congress a report containing a statement of the national income and expenditure and of the condition of the public debt, together with remarks on the system of taxation and suggestions for its improvement. He also sends what is called his annual letter, inclosing the estimates framed by the various departments of the sums needed for the public services of the United States during the coming year. So far the Secretary is like a European finance minister except that he communicates his statement on paper instead of making his statement and proposals orally. But here the resemblance stops. Whatever remains in the way of financial legislation is done by Congress and its committees, the President having no further hand in the matter, though he may send messages pressing Congress to vote money for some purpose which he deems important.

Mr. SHARP. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Certainly.

Mr. SHARP. Mr. Speaker, I desire to ask the gentleman a question, though I do not want to break into the continuity of his argument. Does not the gentleman think it would be a good practice, in order that Members on the floor may know better and get more information of the necessity of making appropriations—taking the river and harbor bill as one illustration and also the public-building bill as another, and possibly the new good-roads bill a little later on—to print upon the bill itself in the form of a footnote, or in whatever form it may take, opposite or below each appropriation, some statement which will show the amount of money already appropriated for that specific object and the purpose of it? I think myself that as far as the river and harbor legislation is concerned it would be an eye opener to many of the Members who have no means of getting knowledge upon the merits of these appropriations.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, eliminating certain features of the river and harbor bill and of the public-building bill, all of the information which the gentleman mentions is required to be submitted, and is submitted, in the annual Book of Estimates and is available to every Member if he desires that information.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FITZGERALD. I prefer not to enter into a general discussion of the matter at this time.

Mr. MANN. We will give the gentleman more time. As to the river and harbor bill, is not all of the information to which the gentleman from Ohio refers contained in the annual report of the Chief of Engineers?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Yes.

Mr. MANN. Which every gentleman has the opportunity to examine. If we were to print the same information as a footnote at the bottom of every item in the bill, then the bill would be so long that no more Members would read the bill than evidently read the annual report.

Mr. SHARP. Is it not true that the hearings are not printed upon the river and harbor bill?

Mr. SPARKMAN. Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman will yield, I desire to say that the same information——

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, I think the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] has covered what the gentleman from Florida has in mind.

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. Mr. Speaker, I would like to make an explanation in this connection, if I may.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. The hearings before the River and Harbor Committee are nearly always printed. The gentleman from Ohio is mistaken in that statement. Whenever there is a new project that is not fully reported on in the report of the Chief of Engineers it is fully reported on in a separate document, and in the body of the river and harbor appropriation bill this particular document is referred to by number.

Mr. FITZGERALD. In a note in the revised edition, Mr. Bryce states that the Book of Estimates has become a bulky document, and that the Secretary of the Treasury neither indorses nor criticizes the estimates. He indulges in no caustic denunciation of the inadequacy of the information furnished Congress, nor does he take the same gloomy view of the situation because Congress obtains what has been so freely characterized as "meager," "illy arranged," and "confusing" statements. If such were the fact, this keen observer and frank commentator upon our institutions would not have failed to have noted such glaring defects if they existed.

In 1909 Congress enacted the so-called Smith amendment, section 7 of the sundry civil act, approved March 4, 1909. The provision is as follows:

Immediately upon the receipt of the regular annual estimates of appropriations needed for the various branches of the Government it shall be the duty of the Secretary of the Treasury to estimate as nearly as may be the revenues of the Government for the ensuing fiscal year, and if the estimates for appropriations, including the estimated amount necessary to meet all continuing and permanent appropriations, shall exceed the estimated revenues the Secretary of the Treasury shall transmit the estimates to Congress as heretofore required by law and at once transmit a detailed statement of all of said estimates to the President, to the end that he may, in giving Congress information of the state of the Union and in recommending to their consideration such measures as he may judge necessary, advise the Congress how in his judgment the estimated appropriations could with least injury to the public service be reduced so as to bring the appropriations within the estimated revenues, or, if such reduction be not in his judgment practicable without undue injury to the public service, that he may recommend to Congress such loans or new taxes as may be necessary to cover the deficiency. (Mar. 4, 1909, Stat. L., vol. 35, p. 1027, sec. 7.)

Whatever may have been said of our system so far as the Executive is concerned, there can be no dispute now as to the extent of the responsibility placed upon the Executive.

OPINION OF H. J. FORD.

In the Cost of Our National Government, Prof. Henry Jones Ford, of Princeton, speaking of this provision, says that Congress has taken—a step toward connection of the powers, and has thus unwittingly started a movement of profound constitutional importance. The real hope of establishing budget control, and with it a genuine constitutional system, lies in the flow of political force in the channels thus opened.

He adds that the action taken by Congress making it the duty of the President to coordinate income and expenditure, as provided in the Smith amendment, "is the salvation of representative government in the United States."

Prof. Ford had in mind the principle of executive responsibility in budget making prevalent in the English system. But, as he points out, it is not peculiar to the English system. In Switzerland, which is a Federal Republic like the United States, the system is even more drastically applied.

If the principle enunciated by Mr. Gladstone be accepted as sound—that the constitutional duty of a legislative chamber is not to augument but to decrease expenditure—the solution of all problems confronting us may readily be solved. A few simple changes in our system will completely establish the system of responsible executive control of our budget, while retaining complete control of the Treasury in the representatives of the people.

To bring about this result two things are necessary—the duty should be imposed upon the Secretary of the Treasury to revise the various estimates to be submitted to Congress, and Congress should be deprived of the power to augment any request for money or to originate legislation imposing obligations upon the Treasury. Such is the rule in Great Britain as well as in Switzerland, where this system has been developed to its highest perfection.

These suggestions are radical, but not shots at random. When the Democratic members of the Committee on Rules had been selected for the Sixty-second Congress I proposed a rule prohibiting amendments to appropriation bills which would increase the committee recommendations above the departmental estimates or which proposed appropriations for which no estimates had been submitted. It was a suggestion along lines that reform in the House must eventually follow; but it was not adopted, as the committee was unwilling to recommend a rule that would have deprived the individual Member or the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union of rights enjoyed by committees which prepare appropriation bills. I should have supported such a rule if it extended to the committees, and I am convinced that in time even more radical changes will be imperative, even though the individual Member be deprived of many privileges which he now enjoys.

The oldest standing order of the House of Commons, dating back to 1713, is that—

This House will receive no petition for any sum relating to public service or proceed upon any motion for a grant or charge upon the public revenue * * * unless recommended by the Crown.

FRAMERS OF THE CONFEDERATE CONSTITUTION.

I have heretofore referred to the undeveloped condition of the present-day budget at the time of the adoption of the Federal Constitution. The experiences of 74 years of Federal existence was not ignored by the men who framed the Confederate constitution. They were men of affairs and of marked capacity for government, and they included in the constitution of the Confederate States the following provision, which is an enduring tribute to their comprehension of the evils of our system.

In article 1 of section 9 is the following:

Congress is forbidden to appropriate money from the treasury except by a vote of two-thirds of both houses unless it be asked by the head of a department and submitted by the president or be asked for the payment of its own expenses or of claims against the Confederacy declared by a judicial tribunal to be just.

As the time is not ripe even for the consideration of such radical and fundamental changes in our institutions, it is necessary to consider the changes that are advisable as well as possible under the existing order.

Years of investigation have convinced me that one change is essential in the methods of this House preliminary to any other reform. Unless this step be taken all other efforts at reform will be futile. It is necessary to return to the practice of the House during the first 93 years of the Union and to concentrate in one committee control of all of the general appropriation bills. The present method under which the appropriation bills are distributed among eight independent committees of the House is universally condemned by disinterested students of our Government.

OPINIONS OF EMINENT AUTHORITIES.

* * * Before any adequate control is possible—

Says S. Gale Lowrie, author of The Budget—

some method must be devised for the centralized control of all financial measures in a single congressional committee and for the elimination of the promiscuous and irresponsible methods of amending financial bills upon the floor of Congress which now obtains.

Prof. Henry Jones Ford says:

Thus we find in the House of Representatives a budget situation which parallels that which has heretofore existed in the executive branch—a distribution of powers among separate and independent authorities without provision for any unified control coordinating income and expenditure.

An examination of the debates in prior Congresses, when it was proposed to distribute the appropriation bills among a number of committees, is instructive.

In 1865 Mr. Cox, of Ohio, said:

I need not dilate upon the importance of having hereafter one committee to investigate with the nicest heed all matters connected with economy. The tendency of the time is to extravagance in private and public. We require of this new committee their whole labor in the restraint of extravagance and illegal appropriations.

In 1879 Mr. Garfield said:

Let me state that the proposition to divide the Committee on Appropriations to scatter its bills as suggested, and as was once moved, indeed is, in my judgment, although I think it is not pending, an utterly ridiculous proposition. I believe it would cost this Government $20,000,000 if the appropriations were scattered to the several committees. * * * I do say, sir, without the slightest question in my own mind of the truth of the statement, that the scattering of these appropriations as suggested by the gentleman here will be absolutely breaking down all economy and good order and good management of our finances. It can not be otherwise.

While in 1885 Mr. Reed, of Maine, joined with those who combined to scatter the appropriation bills among various committees, yet in 1880, when the same acute political condition did not exist in the House and a revision of its rules was under consideration without partisan alignment, Mr. Reed, in speaking of the abuse that had resulted from the constructions placed upon the Holman rule, said that—a large minority of the House are disposed to break down the work of that committee (Appropriations) and put a portion of it in the hands of several committees, the effect of which will be to add to the expenses of the Government more than this rule (the Holman rule) ever saved.

In the report to the Forty-sixth Congress of the Committee on Rules, the membership of which has been heretofore given, is the following:

* * * It follows as a logical sequence that if any other committee is to take charge of one of the general appropriation bills the interest involved and considered will stand separate and apart from the interests involved and considered in the other bills, and as a further result any scheme of reduction of expenditures made necessary by a deficit of revenue for that fiscal year must be executed by the Committee on Appropriations without respect to the interests involved in the bill so taken from them, thereby leaving that particular interest to stand independent of and without any relation whatever to the other interests for which appropriations are annually made.

JUDGMENT OF SAMUEL J. RANDALL.

Mr. Randall said:

If you undertake to divide all these appropriations and have many committees where there ought to be but one you will enter upon a path of extravagance you can not foresee the length of or the depth of until we find the Treasury of the country bankrupt.

Mr. Whitthorne, of Tennessee, the chairman of the Committee on Naval Affairs in the Forty-sixth Congress, said:

When I first entered Congress, in the Forty-second Congress, Gen. Coburn, of Indiana, was a member of the Committee on Appropriations. He at that time proposed to divide the labors of that committee as is now proposed by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. Shallenberger] and by others. At that time I was heartily in favor of that proposition. But during all these years that I have been here my experience and observation have led me to believe that if we turn loose a half dozen committees upon the subject of appropriations it will be impossible to control the amount of these appropriations. I believe that it is for the interest of the people that the subject of appropriations should be committed mainly to one committee. I say this is not out of any feeling with respect to my own committee, because if I considered that I should be jealous of its rights and should speak jealously of its intelligence and its power of comprehending the duty before it. But, speaking in the interest of the people, in the interest of the Public Treasury, in the interest of the proper control of public expenditures, I may say, what has been forced upon me contrary to my original convictions, that it is the duty of this House to have the subject of appropriations controlled by one committee.

Mr. Robeson, of New Jersey, said:

I do not believe that the various committees to whom is intrusted the legislation of this country should also be interested with the appropriation of money, because this last I hold to be the province of the Appropriations Committee, a committee which not only adds, multiplies, and subtracts, as my friend from Connecticut [Mr. Hawley] said yesterday, but a committee which must investigate and take into consideration the results of the action of all committees.

They must examine the work of Congress as a whole. * * * No individual committee which has in hand only the interests of its own business can possibly know what are the results of the work of all the other committees. This is not their province and it is not expected of them. Therefore it is that this Appropriations Committee is necessary. It is a sort of universal solvent that deals with the results of the action of all other organized committees and puts them in a systematic policy for which the party which they represent is responsible.

Mr. Young, of Tennessee, said:

There are, I think, few Members of this House who have had more cause, real or imaginary, of complaint against the Committee on Appropriations than I have had, though I am glad to number every member of it among my personal friends. * * * I know, sir, whenever we relax that rigid grasp which the Appropriations Committee can alone keep on the purse strings of the Government; whenever we wrest from it the key of the National Treasury, we will at once enter upon a vast field of public expenditure that has no bounds and embark upon a turbid ocean of public extravagance which will soon swallow up our entire public resources.

Mr. Simonton, of Tennessee, said:

We have been told that if there was a distribution of the powers and duties of the Appropriations Committee there would not be any increase of the expenditures of the Government. * * * Why must the Committee on Agriculture say what amounts shall be appropriated for the Department of Agriculture, or the Committee on Military Affairs say what amount shall be appropriated for the maintenance or the support of the Army? Is it not because Members are not satisfied with the amounts given by the Appropriations Committee? Now, if the Appropriations Committee should give too much, gentlemen can very easily move amendments to cut down the amount proposed. I have never known an amendment offered to cut down the amount proposed.

Mr. Blackburn, of Kentucky, said:

They (the committees) are appointed that they may guard the interests of the particular department committed to their care. That is the theory of the construction of the committees of the House; and it is a proper theory.

The Committee on Appropriations stands in a very different attitude. Because of no special relation to any department, selected as a fair and impartial arbiter, with no more concern for the Navy or the Army than for the Interior Department or the Post Office Department, it has been selected as the one grand reservoir into which all these proposed disbursements of money should pour, in order that fairly, judiciously, impartially, it may make its recommendations to the House.

Mr. Keifer, of Ohio, said:

I believe, Mr. Chairman, that if you transfer to the various committees of this House the duties of preparing the several appropriation bills there will be a strife between those committees, * * * each striving to obtain the most appropriations for the department of the Government directly under its charge, and in that way we will necessarily augment the annual appropriations beyond the ordinary revenues of the Government.

These statements were all made prior to the action of the House in 1885 distributing the appropriation bills to the various committees. The question at times during the same period was discussed at length in the Senate, and such Senators as Beck, Hoar, Edmunds, Sherman, Plumb, Morrill, Bayard, Dawes, Call, and Hale expressed vigorous opposition to the proposition that the appropriation bills should be considered in the Senate by committees other than the Appropriations Committee.

VIEWS OF ABLE SENATORS.

I shall quote from the statements of a few Senators who participated in the debate.

Senator Edmunds said:

I think it would be injurious to the interests of the Treasury and to the interests of the people who supply the Treasury of the United States to send appropriation questions for reports of sums to be appropriated to the various committees that have charge of the classes of the public service about which appropriations must be made, and that the practical result would be, if we divide them up, that the sum total of appropriations would be enormously increased. If there be a standing order of the Senate which says that all appropriations respecting the judicial establishment of the United States should be sent to the Committee on the Judiciary, the relations between the Committee on the Judiciary and the Department of Justice and the judicial establishment are of such an intimate and friendly character that we should be quite likely to be acting under a bias and to be more liberal in the money that we would recommend to be expended for the judicial establishment than a body of men not under such a bias would be likely to be. And I confess that I do not see any distinction between the matter of the District of Columbia and any other of the various branches of the public service—the Army, the Navy, Indian affairs, post offices and post roads, public lands, and every one of the scores of separate subjects of public expenditure. I think that we should find in the main that the aggregate of public expenditure would be largely increased, on account of the necessary fact in human nature that committees charged with particular subjects and in direct communication with the particular branches of the public service get to be impressed with the ideas of the special departments with which they have to do, and feel with the departments that the public service would be better promoted with still larger appropriations to carry it on.

Senator Sherman said:

I would not do anything at all to weaken the restraint or power of the Committee on Appropriations. I believe it is necessary, as my friend from Vermont says, to bring all the items of expenditure for the Nation under the eye and control of one committee, so that they may limit the amount of expenditure.

Senator Hale said:

I know from my own experience that the tendency of the mind of a member of either of the other committees calling for appropriations each year—the Military or the Naval Committees—I will speak of the latter because I have had service upon that committee—is to gain all the power in appropriating money possible, and connected with that is the unerring result of desiring to have the power to appropriate more money. There has never been any exception to that. I think few Senators will dispute the statement that if all the business of the Committee on Appropriations was taken from it and given to the several committees we should then be confronted with a general scramble upon the part of each committee for more money. The Senator from Vermont [Mr. Edmunds] urged that point much more forcibly and clearly than I can, and his experience, never a member of the Appropriations Committee, but belonging to other committees here, taught him that.

In 1885 the proposition to distribute the appropriation bills was discussed at great length. It is well established that the success of the proposition was due to two causes.

When the Morrison horizontal reduction tariff bill was before the Forty-eighth Congress, Mr. Randall, the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, with 40 other Democrats, voted with the Republicans to strike out the enacting clause and thus defeated the bill. Randall and his associates were thereafter referred to by Mr. Morrison as "Randall and his 40 thieves." Mr. Morrison presented the resolution in the Forty-ninth Congress to distribute the appropriation bills, and it was supported by such low-tariff advocates as Springer, of Illinois, Mills and Reagan, of Texas, and Hatch, of Missouri.

FORESIGHT OF JAMES A. GARFIELD.

The other cause was the abuses which had grown up from the constructions placed upon the Holman rule and the proceedings thereunder. With prophetic vision Mr. Garfield predicted six years earlier the inevitable result of the rule as construed and operated.

In an article in the North American Review in 1879 he wrote:

The construction given to this amended rule has resulted in putting a great mass of general legislation upon the appropriation bills and has so overloaded the committee in charge of them as to render it quite impossible for its members to devote sufficient attention to the details of the legislation proper.

If this rule be continued in force, it will be likely to break down the Committee on Appropriations and disperse the annual bills to several committees, so that the legislation on that subject will not be managed by any one committee nor in accordance with any general comprehensive plan.

It is of the first importance that one strong, intelligent committee should have supervision of the whole work of drafting and putting in shape the bills for the appropriation of public money.

It is to be noted that it was the general legislation placed upon the appropriation bills under the rules which overtaxed the committee, and that there was no contention even upon the part of those favoring the distribution of the bills, that a single committee was overburdened with the matters of appropriation alone.

Among those who opposed the distribution in 1885 were Holman of Indiana, Cannon of Illinois, Herbert of Alabama (afterwards Secretary of the Navy), Blount of Georgia, McMillan of Tennessee, McAdoo of New Jersey, Storm of Pennsylvania, Caswell of Wisconsin, and Phelps of New Jersey.

Through all the debates on the proposition those opposing the distribution insisted that if the plan were adopted it would result in a material and unusual increase in the sums appropriated.

RESULTS OF THE DISTRIBUTION OF MONEY BILLS.

I have had some figures compiled which shed considerable light upon this phase of the question. In the 12-year period from 1901 to 1912, while the bills are prepared by many committees, the total regular appropriations exceeded those for the last 12 years prior to the distribution—that is, from 1875 to 1886—by $6,461,290,923.20, or by 270.8 per cent. Exclusive of pensions, the increase in the total regular appropriations was $5,232,919,707.66, or an increase of 292.5 per cent. Upon the same basis of comparison the population of the United States increased 35,546,750, or 70.9 per cent; the wealth—true valuation of real and personal property—$43,471,214,000, or 80 per cent; farms and farm property, $20,152,995,484, or 190.8 per cent; capitalization of national banks, $319,305,959, or 61.4 per cent; deposits in savings banks, $2,452,293,671, or 237.4 per cent; imports of merchandise, $653,997,764, or 111.9 per cent; exports of merchandise, $1,249,559,929, or 209.5 per cent; domestic exports, $1,232,767,003, or 211.6 per cent; and miles of steam railroad in operation, 123,293, or 117.2 per cent.

The following table gives the per capita values under the same titles for the respective periods ending in 1912 and in 1886:

Per capita values.

	Period ending with 1912.	Period ending with 1886.
Total regular annual appropriations	$103.23	$47.07
Total regular annual appropriations (except pensions)	81.93	35.97
Wealth	1,234.51	967.79
Farms and farm property	358.40	240.22
Capitalization of national banks	9.89	10.37
Deposits in savings banks	40.66	20.39
Imports of merchandise	14.45	11.65
Exports of merchandise	21.54	11.89
Domestic exports	21.18	11.62

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. FITZGERALD. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. MANN. Is the gentleman able to give the percentage of the increase in those periods, the latter period over the former, for the Post Office Department?

Mr. FITZGERALD. I think I have the information in my committee room. The statement which I have made is based on certain tables I had prepared, and I then asked the Census Bureau to make the calculations so as to show the percentage of the increase in appropriations as compared with the percentages of certain elements that would indicate the growth and development of the country.

Mr. MANN. But I take it the increase in the Post Office Department would be much larger than any increase the percentage of which the gentleman has given, and I think no one has charged that the Post Office Department or the postal service has grown simply because there was a Post Office Committee reporting a post-office bill.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I think a good many expenditures have unnecessarily been increased because of that fact. I think that is the experience of the gentleman from New York, myself, and many others who have been on this floor.

Careful study of these statistics makes it clear that, considered from any standpoint of the growth and development of the country during the periods mentioned, the increase in expenditures of the Federal Government are out of all proportion to the country's growth.

In an article in the Review of Reviews for September, 1910, Mr. Tawney, a former chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, said:

This division of jurisdiction and responsibility in the matter of initiating appropriations has contributed more than any single cause to the enormous increase during the recent years. It was predicted at the time by Mr. Randall and Mr. Cannon that the amendment to the rules dividing the responsibility for appropriations would soon cost the people $50,000,000 annually. Our experience under this rule has demonstrated the wisdom of these men in opposing the adoption and the correctness of their judgment as to its responsibility for greatly increasing appropriations for public expenditures.

Mr. Bryce, in the American Commonwealth, says:

Under the system of congressional finance here described America wastes millions annually. But her wealth is so great, her revenue so elastic, that she is not sensible of the loss. She has the glorious privilege of youth, the privilege of committing errors without suffering from their consequences.

The history of mankind is conclusive that for the excesses of youth a penalty is inevitably exacted.

PROPOSED AMENDMENTS TO THE RULES.

Convinced that the appropriation bills should all be placed in one committee, I have prepared certain amendments to the rules which, in my opinion, are necessary if such a reform is to be effective.

These amendments are as follows:

Amend Rule X so as to provide that the Committee on Appropriations shall consist of 30 members, including the chairmen of the Committees on Military Affairs, Naval Affairs, the Post Office and Post Roads, Foreign Affairs, Agriculture, and Indian Affairs.

Amend Rule XI, clause 3, so as to read as follows:

3. To appropriation of the revenue for the support of the Government, including appropriations for improvement of rivers and harbors authorized by law; to the Committee on Appropriations.

Amend Rule XI, clauses 10, 11, 12, 13, 14, 16, so as to deprive the committees named therein of power to report appropriations.

Amend Rule XXI, clause 2, so as to read as follows:

No appropriations shall be reported in any general appropriation bill or be in order as an amendment thereto for any expenditure not previously authorized by law unless in continuation of appropriations for such public works and objects as are already in progress. Nor shall any provision in any such bill or amendment thereto changing existing law be in order.

Amend clause 8 of Rule XI to read as follows:

8. To the improvement of rivers and harbors, other than appropriations therefor; to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors.

Amend clause 12 of Rule XI to read as follows:

12. To the Military Establishment, including the increase or reduction of commissioned officers and enlisted men and their pay and allowances, the militia and the public defense; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Amend clause 13 of Rule XI to read as follows:

13. To the Naval Establishment, including the increase or reduction of commissioned officers and enlisted men and their pay and allowances and the increase of ships or vessels of all classes of the Navy; to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

Amend Rule XXI by inserting as an additional clause the following:

6. No appropriation shall be reported in any bill other than a general appropriation bill for the support of the Government or be in order as an amendment thereto, and objection to any such bill may be interposed at any time before the consideration thereof has commenced.

Amend clause 6 of Rule XXIII so that it shall read as follows:

The committee may, by the vote of a majority of the members present, close general debate at any time after two hours shall have been consumed therein, and at any time after the five minutes' debate has begun upon proposed amendments to any section or paragraph of a bill, close all debate upon such section or paragraph or, at its election, upon the pending amendments only (which motion shall be decided without debate); but this shall not preclude further amendment to be decided without debate.

Amend clause 9 of Rule XVI so that it shall read as follows:

At any time after the House shall have devoted one hour to the consideration of the unfinished business or business in order in the morning hour, it shall be in order by direction of the appropriate committees to move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the purpose of considering bills raising revenue or general appropriation bills: Provided, That during the last two weeks of the session such motions shall be in order at any time after the reading of the Journal.

Amend clause 4 of Rule XXIV by adding thereto the following:

Whenever the call of committees shall have been completed and any bill which requires consideration in the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union is called up by direction of the appropriate committee, the House shall immediately be resolved in the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union if such bill has at any time been considered therein.

Amend Rule XX by adding thereto the following:

2. Any amendment of the Senate to a general appropriation bill which would be obnoxious to the provisions of clause 2 of Rule XXI, if said amendment had originated in the House, shall not be agreed to by the managers on the part of the House unless specific authority to agree to such amendment shall be first given by the House by a separate vote on every such amendment.

[NOTE.—Matter in italics indicates new matter proposed to be added.]

EFFECTS OF PROPOSED CHANGES.

The effects of these changes would be to enlarge the Committee on Appropriations sufficiently to enable its work to be properly done. It would place on that committee the chairman of the committees which now have annual supply bills, so that they could continue in touch with the respective bills now committed to legislative committees over which they preside. This would largely reintroduce a practice which was followed from the creation of the Committee on Appropriations in 1865 till the end of the Fourty-fourth Congress of having as conferees on the respective supply bills two members of the Committee on Appropriations and one member of the legislative committee having jurisdiction of the legislation affected by the bill.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from New York yield to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. AUSTIN]?

Mr. FITZGERALD. I do.

Mr. AUSTIN. The gentleman states a proposed amendment to the rules providing for a membership of 20 for the Committee on Appropriations——

Mr. FITZGERALD. Thirty.

Mr. AUSTIN. And the gentleman indicates how the majority of that committee will be increased by the selection of the chairman of these various committees. Now, what provision is made for making an increase in the minority representation on that committee?

Mr. FITZGERALD. I assume that the same proportion that now prevails will continue, and that the minority will be given one-third of the membership of that committee, which would make the minority have 10 members and the majority 20. At the present time the majority has 14 and the minority 7, and by making this increase of 9 it will take in the 6 chairmen and make provision for 3 minority men.

No legislation of any character could be incorporated in any appropriation bill. This practice seems to be universally condemned in theory, but advocated whenever the proposed legislation is satisfactory to those urging its inclusion in a supply bill.

The House should rigidly enforce the rule, and to eliminate the abuse, if such it be, the rule is proposed prohibiting managers representing the House in conference on any appropriation bill from agreeing to any amendment proposed by the Senate which incorporates new legislation unless authority to do so be specifically given by the House by separate vote upon each proposition.

The question of the naval program could not be determined upon the appropriation bill. The number of officers, men, and vessels of every character would be provided in separate bills reported by the Committee on Naval Affairs, as would the increase or reduction of the commissioned officers and enlisted men and their pay and allowances be reserved for separate action by the Committee on Military Affairs.

Appropriations could not be reported in any bill other than a general appropriation bill, and objection could be made at any time before the consideration of the bill commenced.

CONCENTRATION OF APPROPRIATIONS.

The effect of these amendments would be to concentrate in one committee all questions of appropriations and leave the authorizations with legislative committees to which such authority properly belongs. It would be the logical, scientific, and proper arrangement. The only thing to be determined by the Committee on Appropriations would be the respective sums to be appropriated for various services and purposes within the limits of the authorization fixed by law.

If this method were adopted, the consideration of appropriation bills would be considerably shortened in the House. The various legislative committees of the House would have ample important legislation to occupy their abilities and their time, and it would not lessen their importance nor minimize their influence if the appropriations were not committed to them. Two of the most important committees of the House—the Judiciary Committee and the Interstate and Foreign Commerce Committee—do not have jurisdiction over the appropriations for the various important services and departments with which they are most closely identified, yet the duties of those committees have not been insignificant nor the legislation enacted on their recommendation been unimportant. In fact, those committees have recommended most of the important legislation enacted for many years.

To insure, however, better opportunity for the consideration of legislation and bills other than revenue and appropriation bills the amendments proposed by me would enable the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union to close general debate upon any bill after two hours have been consumed therein and would revitalize the morning hour, so that every day excepting Mondays, Wednesdays, and Fridays, which are now set apart for special business, there should be at least one hour given to business under the call of committees. Relief of some character is necessary, and I believe that with the elimination of legislation from the appropriation bills the changes here proposed would be sufficient.

I am not alone in the belief that the concentration of appropriation bills in one committee is the essential reform for this House.

REMEDY PROPOSED BY JAMES A. TAWNEY.

Mr. Tawney served 18 years in the House, and during the last 6 years of his service was chairman of the Committee on Appropriations. In his article in the September number of the Review of Reviews for 1910 he said:

> The real remedy for unnecessarily increasing appropriations lies in the adoption of a rule upon the organization of the House in the Sixty-second Congress, authorizing the appointment of one committee sufficiently large to represent all sections of the country, vested with exclusive jurisdiction over all estimates for appropriations. This would be a genuine reform in the rules of the House, one that would be of practical benefit to the people. It would save to the Federal Treasury from fifty to seventy-five millions of dollars annually.

Why such a reform was imperative he pointed out by showing that during the preceding session of Congress—Sixty-first Congress, second session—the appropriations reported to the House by the Committee on Appropriations were $16,933,925.24 less than the estimates over which that committee had jurisdiction, while the appropriations reported by all the other appropriating committees were $27,931,402.10 in excess of the estimates.

The reason is not that there is any peculiar virtue possessed by the Committee on Appropriations or the members thereof, but it is because committees dealing with a single department of the Government acquire in time a special bias for the department with which it specially deals.

The reason is well pointed out by Dr. Harlan Updegraff, of the Bureau of Education, in the American School Board Journal for May, 1912, which I have quoted upon a former occasion, and which will bear repetition. In explaining the failure to obtain large appropriations for the Bureau of Education he wrote as follows:

CONGRESSIONAL PROCEDURE A HINDRANCE.

> If, during the past 40 years, the Commissioner of Education had been granted lump-sum appropriations from which he could have paid salaries fairly commensurate with those paid by local public and private agencies throughout the United States, and had it been possible for him to set aside proper amounts for traveling expenses, the bureau would have made a far greater impress upon educational policy and practice. In consequence of the higher appreciation which would have resulted, it is also quite probable that the Congress would have increased its appropriations from year to year until their magnitude would have become more nearly commensurate with the high regard in which all Americans hold their public schools.
> However, there is an underlying cause for this situation in the business procedure of each of the two Houses of Congress. Under this procedure the estimates for some departments are acted upon by their friends at court, while the estimates for other departments are passed on by a tribunal whose main object is economy. All appropriation bills for the Department of Agriculture are prepared in the House Committee on Agriculture, and are reviewed in the Senate by the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry. This same practice also holds with the appropriations for the Diplomatic Service, the military service, the naval service, and the postal service. On the other hand, the appropriations for the other branches of the executive departments are prepared by the Committee on Appropriations of the House and are referred in the Senate to its committee of like name. Quite naturally the attitude of these Committees on Appropriations toward the estimates submitted by their respective branches of the executive department is distinctly different from that shown by the committees which recommend the appropriations for a single department or bureau. Members of the latter class of committees have their attention centered on one particular set of governmental activities, which they hold in growing appreciation as their knowledge of the work increases. On the other hand, members of the Committees on Appropriations have their attention divided among several departments and independent offices and commissions, all of which are more or less desirous of increased funds. Strong attachment to the work of any branch of the Government service is not fostered by such a condition. Moreover, the numerous insistent demands that come upon them develop a controlling idea in the minds of these Appropriations Committees—not the great good that may come to the people through any branch of the service, but rather the desirability of cutting appropriations to the lowest possible limit in order that the party in power will not be held accountable for large expenditures. In brief, all the appropriations for the Department of Agriculture, and the principal appropriations for the War, Navy, and Post Office Departments, are in the hands of their friends, while those of the remaining Government offices must come before a tribunal the chief aim of which is to keep the total appropriations, including those framed by the special committees, within certain fixed limits. It follows from this that the liberal appropriations recommended by the special committees have a tendency to lower the appropriations for the other departments, which are drawn directly by the Appropriations Committees. Had the estimates of the Commissioner of Education during the past 40 years been referred in the House to the Committee on Education and in the Senate to the Committee on Education and Labor there would undoubtedly be to-day a far different story to tell. If such a reform in the procedure of the Houses could be carried out to-day, an increased participation of the National Government in the educational development of the country would probably result.

After six years' service at the head of the Committee on Appropriations Mr. Tawney retired from Congress on March 4, 1911. On that day he made his last statement to the House and reviewed in a comprehensive manner the expenditures of the Government. He entitled his speech "Review of the money bills, with suggestions and reflections thereon, based on six years' personal experience in their preparation."

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from New York may have leave to conclude his remarks.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent that the gentleman from New York may be permitted to conclude his remarks. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, I am indebted to the House. I think I shall take about 15 or 20 minutes to complete what I have to say.

In the course of that statement, the last to be uttered by him in the House, of which he had been so distinguished a Member, he said:

> Mr. Speaker, to my mind no other reform in the rules and procedure of this House is so essential to the future welfare of the people and to the economical appropriation and expenditure of their money for the public service as the consolidation of the appropriating jurisdiction of the House under a single committee of sufficient size to be representative of all sections of the country and of every branch of the public service. * * * This division of responsibility over the aggregate of the appropriations between eight committees of the House has year by year since its adoption * * * in 1885 resulted in an abnormal growth of public expenditures. As I have said before, ours is the only Government on earth which tolerates such a system of divided responsibility, the only Government which has established and maintains such a system of utter irresponsibility with reference to the initiation of authority for drawing drafts upon the Public Treasury for public expenditures. This system, too, has begotten extravagance and a wide difference in the manner of authorized expenditures between the respective branches of the public service, a difference which is actually grotesque in its inequalities.

EXPERIENCE OF JOSEPH G. CANNON.

Mr. Cannon ended 38 years' service in this House on the 4th of March last. He was in the Forty-sixth and Forty-ninth Congresses, when it was proposed to distribute the appropriation bills to various committees. He opposed the suggestion on both occasions. On March 4, 1913, about to quit the scene of his many years of activity, he made his final speech to the House. Speaking of the distribution of appropriation bills in 1885 he said:

> Mr. Speaker, that change, in my judgment, based upon intimate knowledge and observation, has cost this country many, many millions of dollars in needless appropriations and expenditures. * * * No matter what the stress of circumstances may bring about in our national life now or hereafter, or how necessary it may become to apply the pruning knife, it can never be done without harsh and inequitable results through the medium of many committees as now provided under our House rules.
> I speak with deep and firm conviction in these premises, and after many years of somewhat arduous labor as a member of the Committee on Appropriations when it controlled all of the bills, both under Democratic and Republican Houses, and as its chairman when it controlled only a portion of the bills, and as a member of it under Democratic Houses under like conditions.

A short time ago it was suggested that I write to former Gov. Sayers, of Texas, and request his photograph to add to the collection possessed by the Committee on Appropriations of its former chairmen.

Gov. Sayers answered my request, and I take the liberty of reading his letter to me:

APRIL 21, 1913.

> Complying with your request, I will on to-morrow express, charges prepaid, to Mr. Courts my photograph framed.
> My best wishes are for you, politically and personally.
>
> Having served on your committee for 12 years continuously, I am always much interested in its doings, and have indulged the hope that it would be again charged with all the appropriations of whatever character. Until this shall have been done, it can not be reasonably expected to accomplish much in the direction of economy—an ancient watchword of the Democratic Party.

SIMILAR VIEWS BY JOSEPH D. SAYERS.

Gov. Sayers is personally known to few Members of this House other than the members of the Texas delegation. He served 12 years in the House, and was chairman of the Committee on Appropriations in the Fifty-third Congress, leaving that committee and his service in this body to become the chief executive of his State. On the committee with him were such well-known men as Holman, of Indiana, and Dockery, of Missouri, later governor of Missouri for two terms and recently appointed Third Assistant Postmaster General. The most significant thing about this statement, volunteered without any suggestion, is that Gov. Sayers in 1885 voted to take some of the supply bills from the Committee on Appropriations.

The opinions of men of the capacity and standing of those whom I have quoted, as well as my own experience, observation, and study, have led me to the conclusions which I have stated to the House.

It is said, however, that this reform is impossible of attainment. The gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. SHERLEY], in his speech of February 28, 1913, stated the objection usually advanced. He said:

I do not for a moment believe that the members of these other committees will ever consent to give up their power over the details of these supply bills.

It may be that the House will not adopt the reform suggested, but I am unable to believe that Members of the House will vote to retain control of appropriations in committees of which they are members for that reason alone.

In my opinion this House will endeavor to do what is right and best for the public service and for the country and will not approach the consideration of the question with an unalterably fixed intention to vote against the proposed reform merely because of membership on certain committees which now have jurisdiction of certain appropriations as well as of legislation affecting the departments for which they appropriate. If it could be demonstrated, which I do not believe possible, that such is the attitude of all of the members of such committees, then I should remind the House that they constitute a minority of 147 in a membership of 435, and that they have not the power in themselves to prevent the House from effecting this reform if upon full consideration it is believed to be the one required.

PROPOSED COMMITTEE ON EXPENDITURES.

The only alternative to the plan here suggested that has been proposed is contained in the resolution offered in the last Congress by the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. SHERLEY] to create a committee on estimates and expenditures, to consist of certain members of the Ways and Means and Appropriations and the chairman and one other member of the committees having jurisdiction of the annual appropriation bills. This proposed committee is to report the available revenue for the next ensuing year and to apportion to the respective committees that part of the revenue that may be distributed by it in the respective supply bills.

I do not favor such a committee, because I do not believe it either practical or that it can be effective in its operations.

Such a committee was created in the Senate in March, 1909. It had 20 members, including the chairmen of the Committees on Appropriations, Finance, Military Affairs, Naval Affairs, Post Offices, Agriculture, and Indian Affairs. The composition was very much as proposed in the resolution of the gentleman from Kentucky. The heads of all the spending committees were brought together for the purpose of coordinating their action. Prof. Henry Jones Ford, speaking of this committee in the fall of 1909, said:

All that the movement amounts to is the creation of a new committee subject to the same conditions of action as the old committees, and there can be no sensible expectation of much better results.

Mr. SHERLEY. If the gentleman will permit, is it not true that the Senate committee had absolutely no power——

Mr. FITZGERALD. I am going to call attention to what I state is a very emphatic and significant difference.

His observation was accurate; the committee made one report setting forth certain well-known truths affecting the Government's business and expenditures and accomplished nothing.

The proposal of the gentleman from Kentucky differs essentially from the Senate scheme in one important respect. It is this very difference which, in my opinion, makes the plan impracticable.

Before any committee having jurisdiction of an appropriation bill can do its work the proposed committee on estimates and expenditures must report a resolution, which must be acted upon by the House, defining the sum that the appropriation bills may carry. I express the opinion, based upon 14 years' service in this House, all of the time upon committees which have had jurisdiction of appropriation bills, and during eight of the years upon the Committee on Appropriations, that no one, and no committee, at the outset of any session of Congress, without careful investigation involving extensive hearings, can even approximate what the annual supply bills should carry. If this proposed committee is to have hearings upon the proposal to distribute the revenue, then it will determine all of the important questions to be solved by the committees making up the bills and leave to those committees merely the routine and drudgery to do.

ERRONEOUS PRINCIPLES INVOLVED.

The scheme, in my opinion, is based upon an erroneous principle. Under our system our revenue is not adjusted annually in accordance with our expenditures.

Tariff legislation enacted by the Republican Party has not had as its primary function the obtaining of revenue, but rather has been designed chiefly to protect American manufacturers.

With the exception of a comparatively few years, the revenues have been in excess of the expenditures since the Civil War. With such a plan in operation, I believe that the appropriations would have been augmented instead of lessened, because the constant tendency of the legislature is to absorb all of the revenues in advancing projects in which the members are interested.

The one thing above all others that made specie payments possible was the rigid economy enforced by a Democratic House of Representatives. It also made possible the casting off of the burdens of the taxes resulting from the war.

Should the plan proposed by the gentleman from Kentucky be adopted, what will prevent the House from increasing bills, reported by the committees within the limitation, beyond the amounts determined upon by the report of the Committee on Estimates and Expenditures? There are few of the appropriation bills that can not be so framed within certain limits as to insure their increase upon consideration by the House.

Another fatal defect to the plan is the failure to take into consideration the action of the Senate. All writers upon our system emphasize the fact that the necessity of submitting the supply bills to two bodies with equal powers to augment them is the most perplexing difficulty to be met, and yet, after all the consideration and determination of the House, the Senate would be free to exercise unrestrainedly its right of amendment.

VIEWS OF PRESIDENT WILSON.

President Wilson, in his "Congressional Government," speaking of the situation, says:

But unfortunately the dealings of the Senate with money bills generally render worthless the painstaking action of the House. The Senate has been established by precedent in the very fullest possible privileges of amendment as regards these bills no less than as regards all others. * * * The upper House may add to them what it pleases, may go altogether outside of their original features of legislation, altering not only the amounts but even the objects of expenditure, and making out of the materials sent them by the popular chamber measures of an almost totally new character. As passed by the House of Representatives, appropriation bills generally provide for an expenditure considerably less than that called for by the estimates; as returned from the Senate they usually propose grants of many additional millions, having been brought by that less sensitive body up almost, if not quite, to the figures of the estimates.

The gentleman from Kentucky admitted that this was a weakness in the plan proposed by him, but expressed the belief that the focusing of public attention upon the consideration of the committee's report would stop most of the abuses that now exist. I am unable to share in this belief. In my opinion both the Senate and the public would have long forgotten what had been said and done in the House before the supply bills were acted upon in the Senate.

From 1901 to 1912 the Senate increased the appropriation bills, exclusive of pensions, by $304,314,167.73. In 1908, exclusive of pensions, the increases amounted to $44,944,465.31; and in 1909, the increase made by that body to annual supply bills, except pensions, as passed by the House, aggregated $66,146,443.38, which resulted in the abortive attempt to check the increase of appropriations by the creation of the Committee on Public Expenditures.

Instead of checking the tendency of the Senate to increase bills, in my opinion, it will compel the Senate to amend even more freely than at present.

This result will be more marked when the Houses are in different political control.

There is a political objection to the plan, which, while it should not be controlling, nevertheless should not be ignored.

Let it be assumed that such a committee is in existence; that it has reported resolutions to the House fixing the limits of various bills; that such resolutions have been agreed to by the House; and that the supply bills pass within the limitations fixed. If at the end of the session the appropriations, when finally agreed upon, exceed the sums stated in the resolutions agreed to upon the report of the proposed committee, then the party in power has written a most conclusive indictment of its incompetency. The opposition need only to exhibit the resolutions as showing the promise and the total of the appropriations as showing the performance.

WEAKNESS OF THE "BUDGET COMMITTEE" PLAN.

In a short session of Congress the plan can not possibly work. At the last session I had the subcommittee in charge of the legislative, executive, and judicial bill meet before Congress convened. With considerable difficulty advance proofs of the estimates were obtained in confidence from the Treasury Department, so that it was possible to report and pass that bill within the first 10 days of the session. It is always important, in the short session, to send to the Senate at least two of the appropriation bills before the holiday recess. If the committee had to wait upon the proposed committee to complete its investigations and deliberations, and the action of the House upon its report, the appropriation bills, in my opinion, would either fail or be passed under a procedure defensible only under extraordinary circumstances by the suspension of the rules. This would preclude amendment and debate, and would make the committees the real legislative authority.

It is said that the defects of this plan are common to the one which I have advanced; that the Appropriations Committee would prepare its bills in subcommittees for the consideration of the full committee and, in effect, there would be separate and independent committees in charge of the respective bills. I deny the accuracy of the contention. The experience of the House does not justify the claim. The routine portions of all bills, the matters fixed by law about which there is no discretion, would be adjusted by the subcommittee and ignored by the full committee; but the important questions in every bill involving policies, in so far as they might be determined by the sums appropriated to conduct a particular service, would be determined by the entire committee. In reaching a conclusion upon all such matters the various members would have in mind the different projects and services for which provision must be made in other bills, and thus would always be acting with a wide vision and more clear comprehension of the entire governmental business.

Moreover, a policy could be tacitly agreed upon and carried out by the committee. It was done so in the last Congress, but every plan to effect economies was rendered futile by different policies in other committees.

With the creation of the proposed committee the differences continually arising from conflicts over jurisdiction and inevitably resulting either in unnecessary appropriations or ill-advised legislation would not be eliminated. The situation is well illustrated by the condition of the Indian appropriation bill to-day. Senate amendments to that bill provide lump-sum appropriations for additional clerical services in the Indian Bureau in Washington, although ample provision has been made for the clerical force of the bureau in the legislative bill, and it is even proposed to repeal a statute which requires detailed estimates of the number of persons required in the bureau to be submitted to Congress for consideration. Such conditions rarely arise affecting bills in the Committee on Appropriations, and when they do it is much easier to prevent the supplemental appropriations in the manner mentioned.

Should the proposed committee be appointed, I believe it will have a tendency—which should be resisted—to include all appropriations in a single bill. Compelled to investigate and to hold hearings, in time the inevitable result would be more extensive hearings and investigations, until practically all of the functions of the eight committees having jurisdiction of the appropriation bills, so far as appropriations are concerned, would be absorbed. This would give impetus to such a movement to include all the appropriations in a single bill, and to do so would require the rearrangement of many items which would remove many of the most salutary checks upon expenditures found in our statutes.

I shall not discuss at length this phase of the question. It will suffice to quote very briefly from a competent and disinterested authority. The Wisconsin Idea, published in 1912, was written by Mr. Charles McCarthy, chief of the Wisconsin legislative reference department. In the introduction to the book, written by Col. Roosevelt, it is said:

> This book is a book which in my judgment every reformer just at this time should have in hand.

In the preface, Mr. McCarthy says:

> Because of my duties as librarian of the legislative reference department and as a member of the faculty of the University of Wisconsin, I can say truly that I have had opportunities to see events in this State from a different standpoint than any other man.

STUPIDITY OF POLITICAL ECONOMISTS.

Occupying such a position with the encomium already quoted upon the work, I desire to quote briefly from it.

In the opinion of the writer—

Says Mr. McCarthy—

> Wisconsin has been fortunate, on the whole, in not having what is known as a "budget bill." Trained as a student of economics it was rather difficult for him to reach this conclusion, but a thorough investigation of the procedure in other States and some first-hand knowledge of such procedure in foreign countries have convinced him of the wisdom of this plan. * * * The budget bill—meaning one inclusive bill containing all appropriations—belongs in a responsible cabinet government, and not in a government such as ours. A cabinet government may present its estimates and recommend expenditures and permit the legislative body to fight over them within limits, but the administration as a result of its acceptance or rejection stands or falls, consequently the party member is whipped into line and supports those who make the estimate, unless the protest from public opinion is so great that he dare not do so. If he does not stand by those estimates his party goes out of power and a new administration comes in to make a more acceptable and popular budget. That American States have adopted the budget bill stands as a monument to the stupidity of political economists who have recommended it to American legislatures in the past.

Mr. Speaker, it is natural that there should be differences of opinion as to what improvements, if any, can be made in our present system. Able men differ radically with me in the remedy I urge. To them I concede the utmost honesty and sincerity of purpose. It would be strange, indeed, if everyone were in agreement as to the changes necessary in our procedure.

CONCENTRATION OF APPROPRIATION BILLS JUSTIFIED BY LONG EXPERIENCE.

I suggest nothing novel, untried, or experimental. The changes here urged are those which withstood the assaults and vicissitudes of 93 years of our existence. It has the approval and indorsement of many men who towered as giants among their contemporaries and whose fame is not as flickering as the feeble candle's light, but steady and resplendent as the noonday sun.

The questions involved will require the exercise by the House of its highest talents and most discriminating judgment, and I know that whatever is done will be with the patriotic determination to act only for the best interests of the people and of the country. [Loud applause.]

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Speaker, I would like a half a minute to make a statement to the Members here present. At the close of the last session I made a speech dealing with the same subject with which the gentleman from New York has so splendidly dealt to-day. Inasmuch as this matter will come before the Democratic caucus to-morrow, and inasmuch as it will doubtless come before the House shortly thereafter, perhaps with some of the features suggested in that speech of mine, I have taken the liberty of sending to-day to each Member of Congress a copy of that speech that they may at their leisure see the proposals and the reasons advanced in support of those proposals.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOORE] is recognized for 10 minutes under the special order.

THE JEWS IN ROUMANIA.

Mr. MOORE. Mr. Speaker, at the instance of certain of my constituents who are students of international conditions, I have introduced a resolution requesting the Secretary of State to inform the House with respect to the prospects of an adjustment of the problem of the Jews in Roumania. Since the Russo-Turkish War and the Berlin treaty of July, 1878, there have been frequent reports of the failure of the Roumanian Government to observe that clause of the treaty which provided that citizenship should not be denied on account of religion. It is claimed by Jews who have migrated to the United States that the citizenship clause was inserted on the motion of the French plenipotentiary, M. Waddington, seconded by Lord Disraeli, of England, especially with a view to the rights of those natives of Roumania who responded to the Jewish faith. It appears that these complaints were officially recognized by John Hay, the Secretary of State, in 1902, and that there was considerable diplomatic correspondence with reference thereto, without effectuating relief. As late as 1904 it was reported to the Secretary of State that a better feeling existed as between the so-called "indigenous Jews" and the Government and that certain of the Jewish newspapers advised "against any measures from outside in behalf of Roumanian Jews."

Little appears to have been done since 1904 by the United States or any other country to induce the Roumanian Government to place itself in harmony with the other powers signatory to the Berlin treaty on the Jewish citizenship question. The attitude of the Roumanian Government, hedged about as it is by contending and ambitious powers, appears to have been directed toward keeping the Roumanian nationality free from possible Jewish assimilation. It was estimated by Mr. Hay in 1902 that the number of Jews in Roumania all told did not exceed 400,000. It appeared, however, that the Roumanians, numbering 7,000,000 or 8,000,000, were fearful of being overrun, and that this constituted the real objection to the observance of the Berlin treaty with regard to the Jews. The adoption of any naturalization agreement which would enforce the recognition of Jews not indigenous to Roumania seems to have been objected to upon the same ground.

The failure of Roumania to treat with the United States in this matter might be excused, because the United States was not a party to the treaty of Berlin. At first blush it must be conceded that notwithstanding the human rights involved, to say nothing of the breach of treaty stipulations, the United States has no right to meddle in this affair. Apparently this thought has been in the minds of diplomats, who, with the exception of Mr. Hay, have hitherto approached the question with great delicacy. While Mr. Hay was characteristically diplomatic, he was also extremely frank, and did not hesitate in his instructions to the American minister to Greece and Roumania to point out the political disabilities of the Jews in Roumania and the effect of Roumanian oppressive measures upon their manhood. Mr. Hay even maintained that by reason of the conditions prevailing in the country of their birth many of them emigrated to the United States, upon which an additional responsibility was imposed because of such immigration. He raised the rather novel point that—

"human beings so circumstanced have virtually no alternatives but submissive suffering or flight to some land less unfavorable to them"—

And that—

"such emigration is necessarily for a time a burden upon the community upon which fugitives may be cast."

Continuing, Secretary of State Hay said:

"Self-reliance and the knowledge and ability that evolve the power of self-support must be developed and at the same time avenues of employment must be opened in quarters where competition is already keen and opportunities scarce. The teachings of history and the experience of our own Nation show that the Jews possess in a high degree the mental and moral qualifications of conscientious citizenhood. No class of emigrants is more welcome to our shores when coming equipped in mind and body for entrance upon the struggle for bread and inspired with the high purpose to give the best service of heart and brain to the land they adopt of their own free will. But when they come as outcasts, made doubly paupers by physical and moral oppression in their native land, and thrown upon the long-suffering generosity of a more-favored community, their migration lacks the essential conditions which make alien immigration either acceptable or beneficial. So well is this appreciated on the Continent that even in the countries where antisemitism has no foothold it is difficult for these fleeing Jews to obtain any lodgment. America is their only goal."

Since this important declaration by one of the greatest of our Secretaries of State there has been a steady flow of Roumanian Jew immigration to the United States, until it is estimated that not more than 250,000 or 300,000 indigenous Jews continue to reside in Roumania. This is indicative of their lack of opportunity and the great disadvantages under which they continue their Roumanian residence.

In May last the Federation of Roumanian Jews of Philadelphia, at an open meeting in that city, passed resolutions urging Congress to again take up the troublesome problem.

And here I want to interpolate that a meeting of Roumanian Jews was held in New York City a week ago at which considerable feeling was manifested. An organization was perfected, for which as honorary chairman was named the distinguished Speaker of this House, the Hon. CHAMP CLARK, of Missouri. Others who were mentioned as being officers of that federation are our colleagues, Messrs. GOLDFOGLE and LEVY, of New York, and our former colleague, William S. Bennet, Judge Rosalski, and others.

Mr. CALDER. Will the gentleman yield?

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Pennsylvania yield to the gentleman from New York [Mr. CALDER]?

Mr. MOORE. I do.

Mr. CALDER. Will the gentleman advise the House how many Jews there are in Roumania at this time?

Mr. MOORE. It is said there are about 250,000 or 300,000 remaining there. The correspondence of Secretary Hay in 1902 indicated that there were 400,000.

Mr. CALDER. Can the gentleman state if the Jews in Roumania are allowed to attend the public schools?

Mr. MOORE. They are allowed to do so after all of the Roumanian children are provided for, but usually there is no room after the Roumanian children are taken care of. As a rule, they build schools and pay taxes, but they have no citizenship, no right to hold office, no right to certain employments, no right to own lands, and no right to ask protection of any Government. They are regarded as aliens without a country; yet they are indigenous, born to the soil.

Mr. CALDER. Are they compelled to serve in the army?

Mr. MOORE. They are compelled to serve in the army and to endure all the rigors resulting therefrom. And they are in some respects frowned upon by the population of Roumania, who regard them as ambitious and who think that if any opportunities were given to them at all they would overflow the country.

Mr. HARRISON of New York. Is the gentleman aware that there is a committee now forming in New York, composed of American citizens, to present to our country the views the gentleman is so ably expressing upon the floor?

Mr. MOORE. Yes; I know that to be the fact. There was a large meeting there last week, at which a permanent organization was formed, to give expression to various grievances of the Jews who have left that country. It is a natural feeling of those who have left Roumania to aid those who have been left behind.

Mr. SABATH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MOORE. I will.

Mr. SABATH. Is it not true that those born in Roumania are not recognized as citizens?

Mr. MOORE. That is true, and there is no way for them to become citizens, even though the treaty of Berlin required that they should not be prejudiced by reason of their religion, except as I have stated.

They have only the right to go to Parliament itself, and Parliament, of course, is a very large body, and, in a smaller degree, like the Congress of the United States, which, of course, would not have much time or inclination to deal with the naturalization of an individual. A very small proportion of them have obtained the right in this way.

Mr. SABATH. Is it not also true that Roumania has violated the Berlin treaty time and time again?

Mr. MOORE. There is no doubt about that. The Roumanian Government desires to avoid dealing with other nations on this question at all. I have quoted Secretary Hay as showing one point upon which it might be possible for the United States to intervene. In 1902 the Secretary did undertake to have the signatory powers approach Roumania; but it is not certain that any of them did this with any enthusiasm, although every one of the signatory powers to the Berlin treaty except Roumania did live up to the agreement, which provided that Jews should not be debarred from citizenship.

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. Will the gentleman yield?

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Pennsylvania has expired.

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman be permitted to conclude his remarks.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent that the gentleman from Pennsylvania be permitted to conclude his remarks. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman now yield for a question?

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. MOORE. I do.

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. Did not Secretary Hay, while of course conceding that America was not a party to the treaty, take the ground that the United States might well appeal to the powers to require the observance of the Berlin treaty upon principles of international law and principles of natural justice?

Mr. MOORE. He took that ground substantially, and was even a little more specific. He indicated that inasmuch as the effect of the oppression of the Jews by the Roumanian Government was to make them restless and drive them out, in consequence of which many of them came to the United States, that therefore the United States had an interest in them and in the rights which they claimed were denied them.

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. Following the line of questions put before to the gentleman from Pennsylvania, I would like to ask the gentleman whether it is not a fact that freedom of worship is denied to the Jew in Roumania and that the Jew there is in this position: That while born there, he is, nevertheless, regarded as an alien and is at the same time denied all foreign protection?

Mr. MOORE. That is substantially true. He is a native and still without the protection of any country on earth. He was born in Roumania. He has been there since the eighth century, and yet he has no right of citizenship, except as parliament shall grant that right to the individual, and he is still amenable to any punishment that may be imposed upon him by the Government. He has not the right to appeal to a foreign power. He stands alone—"a man without a country."

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Pennsylvania yield to the gentleman from Illinois?

Mr. MOORE. I do.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman refers to the Roumanian Jew as "a man without a country" while he is in Roumania. How does he become a citizen of the United States?

Mr. MOORE. He becomes a citizen of the United States when he has been here five years, if he applies——

Mr. MANN. "A man without a country" can not become a citizen of the United States from anywhere.

Mr. MOORE. I am frank to say that if the laws of the United States were strictly enforced in regard to Roumanian Jews who were not citizens of Roumania it would be difficult for them to foreswear their country.

Mr. MANN. The laws of naturalization are strictly enforced, I may say to the gentleman.

Mr. MOORE. Then the question of humanity arises and the effect upon the United States Government, which thus has received within its borders men who have no country at all.

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. Mr. Speaker, may I interrupt the gentleman from Pennsylvania in order to make a suggestion to the gentleman from Illinois?

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Pennsylvania yield?

Mr. MOORE. Yes.

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. In the eyes of the law, as the gentleman from Illinois well says, the individual Jew born in Roumania is a subject of the King of Roumania, so that when he comes here and applies for naturalization in due time he may well be regarded in the eyes of our law as a subject of the King of Roumania and foreswear his allegiance to him.

Mr. MANN. Of course there is no doubt about it, and I simply thought the gentleman from Pennsylvania was using a little hyperbole when he was talking about "a man without a country" when he was born in Roumania.

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. That is the practical effect.

Mr. MOORE. I will quote what was given to me as to the political status of the Jew of Roumania. As regarded by that Government, he is "an alien, not subject to any foreign protection." I think to a certain extent that answers the gentleman's question, apart from the legal part of it.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANN. Does the gentleman yield?

The SPEAKER. To whom does the gentleman from Pennsylvania yield?

Mr. MOORE. I will yield first to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN].

Mr. MANN. I have no doubt the gentleman has quoted correctly, but I would doubt the correctness of the authority. If the Jew is a Roumanian when he comes here, there is no way by which he could become a naturalized citizen of the United States. I do not think that that is the case.

Mr. MOORE. The fact remains that the Roumanian Jew is not a citizen of Roumania unless he is specially qualified by the Parliament.

Mr. MANN. I question that.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MOORE. Yes.

Mr. MONDELL. Would it not be more accurate to say, on the basis of the facts that the gentleman has stated, that the Roumanian Jew is a man without citizenship who can become naturalized under our law because he is unquestionably a subject of Roumania, but not a citizen of Roumania; but as a man who, without possessing citizenship, is still a subject, he may thus become naturalized under our laws?

Mr. MOORE. I thank the gentleman for distinguishing between a citizen and a subject. The two gentlemen who have addressed this question to me are lawyers and qualified to pass upon naturalization questions.

Mr. MONDELL. The gentleman who last spoke is not a lawyer.

Mr. MOORE. It is not the most lucrative practice at the bar and it is a kind of practice which most lawyers hesitate to indulge in, with the result that possibly there may be quibbles when great lawyers undertake to decide these questions.

Mr. MONDELL. The gentleman who last spoke is not a lawyer.

Mr. MOORE. He talks like a lawyer, and just as well as a lawyer.

Mr. MANN. He talks better than a lawyer, but he is not one. Both the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOORE] and the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL] talk better than lawyers—and talk more. [Laughter.]

Mr. MONDELL. What I have said is merely the opinion of a layman.

The SPEAKER. Both gentlemen not only talk well, but both talk at once, which is contrary to the rule. [Laughter.]

Mr. MOORE. I desire to conclude this address in 10 minutes, having promised not to occupy the time of the House longer than that, and so I ask at this point to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MOORE. Mr. Speaker, I shall append to these remarks some of the statements authorized by the officers of the federation. They plead for the friendly intercession of the United States on behalf of their brethren who have not been so fortunate as to pass from the Roumanian borders to the United States. It is in their interest that I have introduced the resolution requesting the Secretary of State to inform the House whether it is not time to renew the effort to do an act of simple justice to the unfortunate Jews of Roumania. [Applause.]

BASIS OF THE GRIEVANCES.

From a statement submitted to me by the Federation of Roumanian Jews of Philadelphia, of which Dr. M. Y. Belber is president, A. B. Goldenberg, secretary, and Samuel Shoyer, treasurer, these chief points of grievance are taken:

First. At the Berlin congress of 1878 the high contracting powers decreed in article 44 of the treaty that religion shall bar none from the full enjoyment of the rights and privileges of citizenship in Roumania.

Second. The Roumanian Government has to this date failed to execute the provisions of article 44 of the Berlin treaty by denying its native subjects of the Jewish faith the rights and privileges of citizenship enjoyed by the rest of the population.

Third. The present political status of the native Jews of and within Roumania is defined by the Roumanian Government as "aliens not subject to any foreign protection," thereby expatriating them from their land of nativity, denying them allegiance to or protection from any other government.

Fourth. Over 200 governmental restrictions are now in force against the native Jewish inhabitants, which deny them every human right and close to them almost every avenue of earning a livelihood in Roumania.

The statement of detailed facts submitted by the federation also constitutes the argument for the friendly intercession of the United States. It is as follows:

STATEMENT OF FACTS ABOUT THE JEWISH QUESTION IN ROUMANIA.

"When the Russo-Turkish War broke out in 1877, Russia claimed that her only object in fighting the Turks was to free the Christians from Mussulmanic oppression. Roumania, then a tributary State of Turkey, fought by the side of Russia for the same reasons.

"On the 1st day of July, 1878, while the peace congress was in progress at Berlin, remembering that the Jews of Roumania were the subject of persecution under the Roumanian rule, as were the Christians under that of the Turks, M. Waddington, the French plenipotentiary, arose and moved that religion shall be no bar to the enjoyment of all civil and political rights in Roumania. The motion was seconded by Benjamin Disraeli [Lord Beaconsfield] for England. A similar motion was made for Servia, Bulgaria, and Montenegro by M. Waddington for France and seconded by Bismarck for Germany and de Launay for Italy. As regards Roumania, the provision is incorporated under article 44 of the treaty of Berlin. Roumania was given independence under article 43 of the same treaty, subject to the faithful observance of article 44.

"The treaty was signed by England, France, Germany, Russia, Austria, Italy, and Turkey.

"Servia, Bulgaria, and Montenegro had faithfully observed the mandate of the powers. Roumania alone ignored it.

"After peace was concluded, Roumania amended article 7 of her constitution, which reads, in substance and effect, that Parliament alone shall confer the rights of citizenship, and that only upon individual applications. The Jews were not to be enfranchised en masse, as was the sense of the treaty. Since 1878 until the beginning of the present Turko-Balkan War about 200 Jews were naturalized by this method and only a couple hundred more since the last two months, which, of course, is only intended to throw dust in the eyes of Europe.

THE RESTRICTIONS.

"Jews have no right to vote or hold public office, be it ever so humble. They are not given any contract work by the Government, even if they do it 5 per cent cheaper than the Roumanians. They can not be employed in the railroad, postal, telephone, or telegraph service. They can not own land, live or do business in villages, or even hire out as laborers upon farms.

They are not admitted into the State's schools until all the children of the Roumanians are accommodated, and then only upon the payment of a tax. There are not many schools there, so the Jewish children are generally left out. So they must maintain their own schools, and yet pay taxes to support the Government's schools. From certain State schools, such as manual training, the Jewish children are excluded altogether.

"The law prohibits any factory, even if it be owned by a Jew, to have in its employ more than one-third Jews of the entire personnel. Jews may not be lawyers, not even clerks to lawyers; they may not own pharmacies; they may not engage in the sale of tobacco or matches—Government monopoly; Jews must serve in the army, but may hold no rank higher than private; they are subject to expulsion within 12 or 24 hours for anything said or written politically displeasing to the Government, and other restrictions, over 200 in number; they must pay all taxes the same as the rest of the population who are citizens.

"Let it be understood that there are no laws in Roumania against 'Jews,' but only against 'aliens.' The law reads that only Roumanians or naturalized Roumanians may do this or that or the other. The Jews are considered 'aliens not subject to any foreign protection.' Before the Berlin congress the Jews of Roumania were considered as Roumanian subjects.

"The condition of the Jews in Roumania is worse to-day than it has been previous to the Berlin congress.

"The position of the Jews in Roumania is worse than that of the Jews in Russia. The latter enjoy in Russia many rights which are denied to the Jews in Roumania. The Russian Jews are Russian citizens, with the right to vote and be represented in the Duma; in fact, Jews have served as deputies in the Duma of Russia.

"The Jews have lived in Roumania for centuries—their history there dates back to the eighth century.

"The Jews have helped develop the country. To them alone belongs the credit of Roumania's present commercial and industrial life. They have given her the best in its literature and drama.

"Strange as it may seem, the statesmen who oppose the enfranchisement of Jews are not themselves of pure Roumanian blood. Most of them are the descendants of the Greek, Russian, Bulgarian, and Armenian invaders of old who exploited the poor Roumanian peasants to the last drop of their blood. The King of Roumania is himself a foreigner—Charles, a prince of the German house of Hohenzollern-Sigmaringen, imported to Roumania in 1866.

"Roumania has a population of 7,000,000, of which 250,000 are Jews. About 70 per cent of the population is engaged in agriculture, except the Jews. It is a constitutional monarchy; has a Parliament with two branches, a chamber of deputies and a senate. The cabinet is responsible to Parliament. There is free speech and free press. The Jews are prohibited these privileges; that is, they may make speeches and publish newspapers, but may not say anything displeasing to the Government on penalty of expulsion.

"The Government fosters and encourages anti-Semitic agitations. The Jew can not lay much claim to protection from the mob at the hands of the Government. Anyone may abuse a Jew. Some time ago a colonel in the Roumanian Army slapped a civilian four times across the face in a street car and then offered the apology, "I thought you were a Jew," after he discovered that his victim happened to be a gentile.

"A highwayman was recently tried at Botoshany, Roumania, and his defense was that he only robbed Jews. The public prosecutor in vain attempted to prove that his victims were also gentiles, but the court acquitted him."

THE RESOLUTION.

To this statement I append a copy of the resolution drawing the attention of the State Department to this problem and asking for information.

[House resolution 183, Sixty-third Congress, first session.]

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
June 24, 1913.

Mr. MOORE submitted the following resolution, which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Affairs and ordered to be printed:

Resolution requesting the Secretary of State to inform the House as to the Berlin treaty of 1878 with respect to Jews in Roumania.

Whereas it is reported that the Roumanian Government has failed to observe that article of the treaty of Berlin (1878) which provides that religion shall be no bar to the rights and privileges of citizenship in Roumania; and

Whereas the failure of the Roumanian Government to observe the provisions of the Berlin treaty would be discriminatory as against the native Jews of Roumania, affecting them prejudicially in matters of employment and preferment: Therefore be it

Resolved, That the Secretary of State be requested to inform the House whether any communication has been had with the Roumanian Government or the powers signatory to the treaty of Berlin in relation to the observance of said treaty, or with respect to a naturalization convention between the United States and the Roumanian Government; and if so, and no conclusions have been reached thereon, whether the United States has such interests with respect to said treaty and the operation thereof as to make further diplomatic negotiations desirable.

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman from New York rise?

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. To ask unanimous consent that I may address the House for three minutes.

The SPEAKER. If the gentleman will suspend, the Chair promised to recognize the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. KELLY].

FREEDOM OF THE PRESS.

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for five minutes.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. KELLY] asks unanimous consent to address the House for five minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, I should like to have read as a part of my remarks the following memorial.

The SPEAKER. If there be no objection, the memorial which the gentleman sends up will be read as a part of his remarks.

The Clerk read as follows:

To the Congress of the United States of America:

Whereas the freedom of the press is the foundation of personal and political liberty, and any attempt to impair that freedom is a blow at republican institutions and a crime against the American people; and

Whereas recent instances of intimidation of newspapers and attempts to coerce editorial opinion through financial pressure have been brought to the attention of the reading public, and the punishment of newspaper editors through attacks on their credit has created widespread comment; and

Whereas a concrete illustration of this abuse of credit has been brought to the attention of the citizens of Scranton, Pa., and vicinity through the financial ruin of the Tribune-Republican and its proprietor, although it was a going, growing, and prospering institution: Therefore be it

Resolved, That this memorial be presented to the Congress of the United States setting forth the facts in the case of the Scranton Tribune-Republican, as mentioned above, and praying an investigation into this growing evil as part of the inquiry into the abuse of credit through the Money Trust; and

Resolved, That this memorial be presented to Congress through the Hon. M. CLYDE KELLY.

William Wilhelm, Schuylkill County; Gifford Pinchot, Pike County; Mahlon H. Meyers, Cambria County; Thomas Robbins, Philadelphia County; John T. Murphy, Philadelphia County; W. F. Remppis, Berks County; Charles L. Van Scoten, Susquehanna County; George W. Wagenseller, Snyder County; D. W. Seigrist, Lebanon County; W. W. Shannon, Columbia County; A. Nevin Deitrich, Franklin County.

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, the memorial which has just been read was presented to me by a number of citizens of Pennsylvania who believe that it touches on the problem that this House will soon undertake to solve, concentrated control of credit, a problem greater than that of banking and currency, which will also be before us. The President, in his able manner, gave us a splendid address yesterday, in which he told us that even personal considerations should not outweigh the need for immediate legislation to deal with this credit-control situation.

When we realize that the control of credit has a potential influence upon every business in this Nation, it becomes a manifest peril if it is allowed to continue without some check upon it. Worse and more dangerous than all is the influence of the control of credit on the press of the country. The case of the Scranton Tribune-Republican, which is referred to in this memorial, is an instance which is peculiarly flagrant. Four or five years ago, when this paper was a practically worthless property, it was taken over by a new management, and a circulation at that time of 5,000 copies has been built up to 32,000 copies at the present time, and its annual receipts from $32,000 a year to $152,000 a year. Last year the paper made a clear profit of about $40,000, and during the early months of this year the profits had been at the rate of $50,000 a year. But in spite of that, and although it was a growing and prosperous concern, obligations were demanded by certain banks, credit was curtailed, and just recently a receivership was demanded and secured. The judge who succeeded Judge Archbald appointed two bankers as receivers, and they are at the present time conducting the institution.

Mr. MOORE. Will the gentleman yield?

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Pennsylvania yield to his colleague?

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. I have only a minute, and I can not yield.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman declines to yield.

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. I want to say that the management which built up this success, which made this paper prosperous, because it filled a public want, has been completely overthrown, the policy of the newspaper has been changed, and it is at the present time a part of the controlled press of the Nation. So it is worth while to bring this memorial to the attention of Congress, as these citizens of Pennsylvania have done, asking Congress to consider it in connection with the control of credit in the hands of the few. In itself it may be of comparatively little importance, but as a type it is of vast importance. The freedom of the press, which was assured in the first amendment to the Constitution in the Bill of Rights, is imperiled by the power of money-credit control in this country. There is a real peril in such power lodged in the combination of crooked politics and crooked business which in past years has made Pennsylvania especially a hissing and a byword in this Nation.

Mr. MOORE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that I may address the House for five minutes on this subject.

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that I may extend and revise my remarks in the RECORD.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman who makes such statements on the floor of the House and declines to yield for a question has no right to extend remarks in the RECORD, and I shall object.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois objects to the extension of the remarks.

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, the only reason that I refused to yield to the gentleman was because I only had a moment left at the time.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman had all the time that he asked for, and he was making serious charges.

Mr. MURDOCK. The gentleman from Pennsylvania only had five minutes.

The SPEAKER. If any gentleman wants to ask for an extension of the gentleman's time, the Chair will entertain the request.

Mr. MURDOCK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Pennsylvania have five minutes more.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kansas asks unanimous consent that the gentleman from Pennsylvania may have five minutes more. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. Now I will yield to the gentleman from Illinois for his question.

Mr. MANN. It was the gentleman from Pennsylvania who wanted to ask the gentleman a question when he declined to yield.

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. I thought that the gentleman from Illinois desired to interrogate me.

Mr. MANN. I did until the gentleman declined to yield to his colleague.

Mr. MOORE. Does the gentleman from Pennsylvania care to answer the question now?

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. I will yield.

Mr. MOORE. The gentleman is comparatively a new Member of the House. I ask him if he knows of any instance in his study of congressional life where an investigation of this kind has been started in this way because some one lost money.

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. The memorial clearly sets out the purpose and asks that it be taken up in the study of the money credit and control.

Mr. MOORE. Does the gentleman know that certain banks in Philadelphia, New York, Chicago, and elsewhere are now calling their loans for various other enterprises upon which they seem to think there is some reason for uncertainty?

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. I repeat that the only purpose is to inquire why these loans were called, on the ground that there was no good and sufficient reason for such action. In this particular case there is more than that, and the inquiry in connection with the money credit and control would establish that fact.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will state to both gentlemen that putting this petition into a speech does not call upon the House to do anything about it. If the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. KELLY] desires that the House shall pay any attention to it, he will have to put it in the basket.

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. I understand that thoroughly, Mr. Speaker, but I deemed it necessary to say a word or two in explanation.

Mr. HARDWICK. Will the gentleman from Pennsylvania yield?

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. Certainly.

Mr. HARDWICK. Has the gentleman any personal knowledge as to the truth of the facts contained in the memorial?

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. I would say that I was in the city of Scranton last Friday night, and was directly in touch with those who had personal knowledge of this situation. I can say further that the persons friendly to this newspaper and its progressive policy offered to raise $100,000 and pay every claim dollar for dollar within reasonable time and it was refused.

Mr. HARDWICK. Then it is the gentleman's idea that these banks deliberately throttled the paper because it did not like the policy?

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. Acting under political influence and with the power had over credits. I want to say further, during the time I have——

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. Certainly.

Mr. MANN. Does the gentleman know how much this paper owed?

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. The paper had recently increased its indebtedness through the purchase of an additional newspaper that had been paying on its capitalization a profit at the rate of 6 per cent on $800,000, or 12 per cent on $400,000, having made between $40,000 and $50,000 in the last year. Its indebtedness was something like $400,000, but the demand that immediate payment be made was the only difficulty. Few business enterprises can meet a sudden demand for the payment of their entire obligations. I doubt if there is even a bank in the country that could stand up under the demand for the immediate payment of every dollar of its indebtedness. For that reason I maintain that the banks should be especially careful of the manner in which they invoke forces against other business institutions which they themselves could not withstand.

Mr. MANN. Does the gentleman think it surprising that a paper of that sort, with that circulation in a town of that size, owing $400,000, should be asked to pay some of its obligations or that it is to be considered as having been imposed upon because somebody asked it to pay a portion of its indebtedness?

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, I think without a doubt that it was surprising, under the circumstances and in view of the fact that three valuable newspaper properties, including real estate, were owned by this corporation, another having been recently purchased, which increased the indebtedness but which added greatly to the assets also. The demand was not for a small amount, but amounted to practically all the newspapers' indebtedness.

Mr. MANN. I understood the petition to say that there was a claimed profit of $40,000 on this paper last year.

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. I said between $40,000 and $50,000.

Mr. MANN. And that the receipts in a few years increased from $32,000 to $152,000?

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. One hundred and fifty-two thousand dollars last year. It was higher than that during the first months of this year.

Mr. MANN. If the paper made $40,000 profits out of receipts amounting to $152,000, does the gentleman think he ought to charge it to bankers because they could not get any money? Why did not the gentleman and his friends loan the paper money? If you can make $40,000 profit out of receipts of $152,000, that is going some.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Pennsylvania has again expired.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman's time be extended for five minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, I want to answer the gentleman from Illinois. I will say that the memorial did not mention any amount of profit whatever, but that that profit was made and it is being made, or was being made in the early months of this year, at the rate of $50,000 a year. Those facts can be easily verified. I believe that it is not a matter of common business policy to crush out of existence a paper which is a prosperous and growing concern, even though its obligations may seem large, especially when it is making a profit of 6 per cent on twice the amount of its capital.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield for a correction?

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. I yield to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. MANN. I understood the gentleman to say a moment ago, or the memorial to say, that the profit last year was over $40,000?

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. Yes.

Mr. MANN. Was that an error?

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. I made that statement. The memorial did not.

Mr. MANN. I thought the gentleman just now said that he did not make it.

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. Oh, no.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. I would like to finish one or two sentences.

Mr. MONDELL. Just a question for information.

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. I yield.

Mr. MONDELL. Do I understand the gentleman to state that this newspaper watered its stock from $100,000 to $700,000?

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. There was no such statement as that made or dreamed of. I refuse to yield further to the gentleman. I would like to add a word or two along this line. The profits which have been made by this newspaper were sufficient to prove it a prosperous concern, and it was deliberately and arbitrarily throttled. I would like to say that it was forced into a receivership and that the manager who had built up the newspaper into such a successful proposition was summarily discharged without an hour's notice, thereby losing every dollar that he had put into the paper. I want to call attention further to the fact that this whole matter is a point in issue in another question being considered by this Congress.

Mr. CULLOP and Mr. MURDOCK rose.

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. I yield to the gentleman from Kansas.

Mr. MURDOCK. Mr. Speaker, the point has been made that by merely offering the memorial to be read from the Clerk's desk, no specific action is to be taken upon it. I understand it is the gentleman's purpose to have this memorial introduced through the basket and have it referred if he can to the Committee on Banking and Currency?

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. That is correct.

Mr. MURDOCK. Where it is pertinent to refer it to a committee.

The SPEAKER. Of course, if the gentleman introduces a resolution the Chair will refer it to some committee.

Mr. MANN. Or if he drops the memorial in the basket.

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. I refuse to yield any further, Mr. Speaker. President Wilson stated yesterday, and stated truthfully, that the question of banking and currency is an important one; but I believe that the people of this country are no more interested in banking and currency than in the question of credit control, and that any power which can throttle and destroy a business institution without right or reason is a power that is a peril to this Nation. I believe that all the banking and currency legislation which this Congress may enact will be useless unless there be something done to curtail the power of concentrated control of credit.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. Yes.

Mr. SHERLEY. Has the gentleman any program by which he can compel credit to be given? I should like to know of such a plan, where we can find it.

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. That program is a possibility, and I am confident that the people of this Nation will never rest satisfied until it is put into operation. The question will never be settled until it is settled right. The first step is to see that justice is done and equal opportunity be given every citizen and every business enterprise. Especially to see that every citizen shall have his inherent right to write and print his opinions on every subject without previous restraint and to assure the people through a free press unbiased and impartial information upon all subjects of public concern.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has again expired. The gentleman from New York [Mr. GOLDFOGLE] asks leave to address the House for five minutes. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

CONDITION OF JEWS IN ROUMANIA.

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. Mr. Speaker, I rise to express my hearty concurrence in the action of the distinguished gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOORE] in introducing the resolution concerning the treatment of Jews in Roumania. For centuries these people have been most grievously oppressed and made the victims of inhuman laws, which rendered their lot one of abject misery, of sorrowful helplessness, and frequently wretched poverty. They were, as they still are, the objects of bitter persecution, for the malignant hatred of the bigot found expression in laws which placed them under the ban of cruel despotism and, it may be said, barbaric tyranny. The details are harrowing. They shock the moral sense of humanity. They stir the soul to pity.

So grievous and deplorable were the conditions that they called forth the sympathy, as well as the remonstrance, of the American Government. Secretary of State John Hay, in his masterly letter written in 1902, for presentation to the signatories to the Berlin treaty, said:

> The condition of a large class of the inhabitants of Roumania has for many years been a source of grave concern to the United States. I refer to the Roumanian Jews, numbering some 400,000. Long ago, while the Danubian principalities labored under oppressive conditions, which only war and a general action of the European powers sufficed to end, the persecution of the indigenous Jews under Turkish rule called forth in 1872 the strong remonstrance of the United States. The treaty of Berlin was hailed as a cure for the wrong, in view of the express provision of its forty-fourth article, prescribing that in Roumania the difference of religious creeds and confessions shall not be alleged against any person as a ground for exclusion or incapacity in matters relating to the enjoyment of civil and religious rights, admission to public employments, functions, and honors, or the exercise of the various professions and industries in any locality whatsoever, and stipulating freedom in the exercise of all forms of worship to Roumanian dependents and foreigners alike, as well as guaranteeing that all foreigners in Roumania shall be treated, without distinction of creed, on a footing of perfect equality.

It is these treaty stipulations that Roumania disregards and persistently continues to violate. She still lays her heavy hand on her Jewish victim as banefully as before. She still pursues her discriminatory conduct despite the Berlin treaty. She still enforces and enacts her repressive and proscriptive laws and enforces her policy of legalized ostracism. For the purposes of to-day's discussion the particulars making clear the violation by Roumania of the Berlin treaty, pointed out by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOORE], need not be enlarged on at this time.

It is almost inconceivable that, in this twentieth century, which we boast to be the age of civilization and enlightenment, any country calling itself civilized should still persecute a people for no reason other than their fidelity to their religious faith and their loyalty to conscience. Such a condition, thank God, is repugnant to every true American heart and revolting to every American mind.

Mr. Speaker, I am deeply mindful of the fact that this country was not a party to the Berlin treaty to which we made reference. We can not directly interfere. I am appreciative of what Secretary Hay said of this situation. He said:

> The United States may not authoritatively appeal to the stipulations of the treaty of Berlin, to which it was not a signatory—

But, sir, he also added these strong and significant words—

> But it does earnestly appeal to the principles consigned therein, because they are the principles of international law and eternal justice, advocating the broad toleration which that solemn compact enjoins and standing ready to lend its moral support to the fulfillment thereof by its cosignatories, etc.

So, then, let our great and good Government, which is ever foremost in the march of human progress, "lend its moral support," in the language of Hay, in the earnest hope that the powers who are signatories to that treaty may require of Roumania an observance of its obligations. [Applause.]

While our appeal in the past has gone unheeded and our Nation's protest has not met with the accomplishment of its purpose, let us not despair of success. With the growing and ever increasing power of this Government and its forefront standing among the countries of the world our Nation's voice is more potential than it ever was before when raised in the cause of justice, of righteousness, of peace, and humanity. Let our efforts be renewed with heartfelt earnestness to bring about an observance of the Berlin treaty stipulations, through means of which the distressing conditions of an unoffending people may be relieved from a suffering so grievous that it awakens sympathy in every heart that beats responsive to humanity's call.

OPIUM TAX.

Mr. HARRISON of New York. Mr. Speaker, I desire to call up the bill (H. R. 1967), Union Calendar No. 2.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the title of the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

> A bill (H. R. 1967) to amend the act of October 1, 1890 (26 Stat., p. 1567), regulating the manufacture of smoking opium within the United States.

Mr. HARRISON of New York. Mr. Speaker, I desire to ask unanimous consent that the bill may be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. MANN. Oh, I think we had better go into committee.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent that the bill be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole House, and the gentleman from Illinois objects.

Mr. HARRISON of New York. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the immediate consideration of the bill H. R. 1967.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York moves that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill mentioned.

Mr. HARRISON of New York. And, Mr. Speaker, pending the putting of that motion, I want to ask the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOORE] if we can not reach some agreement as to time?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I can not answer myself for the gentleman from Pennsylvania, but I do not see any occasion for trying to reach an agreement as to general debate. Probably nobody will desire time, but if they do they ought to have it.

Mr. HARRISON of New York. I quite agree with the gentleman, and if he desires to consume time in general debate——

Mr. MANN. If so, I will take the floor when the time comes. In the meantime I shall object to any agreement to close general debate.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the gentleman from New York.

The question was taken, and the motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill H. R. 1967, with Mr. CRISP in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is in the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill H. R. 1967, the title of which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 1967) to amend the act of October 1, 1890 (26 Stat., p. 1567), regulating the manufacture of smoking opium within the United States.

Mr. HARRISON of New York. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the first reading of the bill be dispensed with.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Mr. HARRISON of New York. Mr. Chairman, this is the first one of a series of three bills which have been recently agreed upon by the Committee on Ways and Means and reported unanimously by that committee with a favorable recommendation to the House. This bill is designed to impose so severe a tax upon the manufacturers of smoking opium as to discourage that manufacture. The opium-exclusion act of February, 1909, absolutely forbade the importation into the United States of smoking opium.

But under the terms of the tariff act of 1890 smoking opium may be manufactured in the United States upon the payment of a tax of $10 a pound and upon the furnishing of a bond of $5,000. Of course, it is no longer possible under the opium-exclusion act to import into the United States crude opium for the purpose of manufacturing it into smoking opium, but it is possible to grow the poppies commercially for the purposes of manufacturing opium in the States of the Pacific coast, and the profits of the illicit trade in smoking opium are so high that it is probable persons will be tempted to undertake the production of the poppy for that purpose.

Now, this bill before the committee is designed to impose so heavy a tax upon that manufacture as to discourage such practice. It raises the tax of $10 to $200 a pound, and raises the bond from $5,000 to $100,000, and greatly increases the penalties for infractions of the act. It is substantially a reenactment of those provisions of the act of 1890 which cover the manufacture of smoking opium within the United States, the chief difference being the great increase in the amount of the tax and in the penalties for the infringement of the act.

Now, Mr. Chairman, unless some gentlemen wish to question me on the matter——

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. HARRISON of New York. With pleasure.

Mr. MANN. If the gentleman will permit me to say, I am in full sympathy with the purpose not only of this bill but of the series of bills which the gentleman has introduced, because I was the first one to introduce a bill on the subject in reference to the importation of opium and shipment of opium.

Mr. HARRISON of New York. If I may interrupt the gentleman, I want to say, not for the purpose of spiking his guns, but because I think it is honestly due him, that I think he has done more than any other Member of this Congress in the last decade to put on the statute books laws reforming the health and morals of our people, and I know he is in sympathy with these bills.

Mr. MANN. Of course I can not ask any awkward questions after that. There seems to be no repealing clause in this bill, and I want to ask the gentleman whether it would not be desirable to repeal directly the provisions of the act of 1890 relating to the manufacture of smoking opium?

Mr. HARRISON of New York. Mr. Chairman, while this act would, by implication, repeal that act, I could see no objection to the addition of a paragraph repealing specifically the provision of that act if the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] should desire to offer it by way of amendment.

Mr. MANN. Of course, there is no doubt that this act would repeal the act of 1890 by implication, but both would still remain on the statute books without being marked "repealed." I think the gentleman ought to offer an amendment providing that "so much of the act of 1890 as relates to the manufacture of opium is hereby repealed," or something of that sort.

Mr. HARRISON of New York. If the gentleman should care to offer that amendment, I would be very glad to accept it.

Mr. MANN. If the gentleman will pardon me a question, at the bottom of page 1 it says:

Who has not given the bond required by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue.

Of course, section 2 provides for a bond. I suppose, from reading this, that this language is copied from the language in a law in some other place where there had been some previous reference to a bond to be given to the collector of internal revenue or required by the collector. This statute, of course, is a criminal statute, and while I do not suppose it will ever be invoked, the passage of it will be sufficient. I do not know how that language got there.

Mr. HARRISON of New York. I think the language of section 1 might be amplified by saying "hereinafter referred to," or some such phraseology; but as a matter of fact, however, we have just copied verbatim the language of the statute that exists, and I think that question is very unlikely to arise.

Mr. MANN. Do I understand that the purpose of this bill is not to raise revenue, in fact, but to prevent the establishment of any manufactories in the United States for the purpose of making smoking opium?

Mr. HARRISON of New York. Mr. Chairman, that is correct, and it is the only way that I know by which Congress can accomplish that purpose.

Mr. MANN. Of course, there is no doubt about that.

The gentleman referred to some danger of raising poppies or seed for making opium in California. Is there any real danger of that, or is the real purpose—and I ask for information—of the passing of this law to prevent opium-manufacturing establishments or to put this country on record in its international relations as having taken the position that it will not permit even the importation of smoking opium or the manufacture of smoking opium within our territory?

Mr. HARRISON of New York. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Illinois has very well stated the phase of this matter to which I first made reference. The International Opium Congress meets on the 1st of July at The Hague. The United States was the instigator of these series of commissions and congresses trying to settle this matter in its international aspects, and our own good faith as a nation is strengthened by the adoption of these bills, showing our own purpose to stamp out this matter.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I am very glad that so able a gentleman as the gentleman from New York [Mr. HARRISON] has taken hold of this subject, and I hope he will prevail with all of his bills.

Mr. HARRISON of New York. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. MOORE. Mr. Chairman, before the gentleman takes his seat——

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from New York yield?

Mr. HARRISON of New York. With pleasure.

Mr. MOORE. Is he informed as to the value of opium per pound now?

Mr. HARRISON of New York. I can only answer the question of the gentleman from Pennsylvania by saying that it is a difficult matter to ascertain, because the trade in smoking opium is entirely illegal as it exists to-day, and I think the prices of it are probably anything that the dealers can get, and they may run as high as $25 to $50 per pound.

Mr. MOORE. Suppose we take up only opium used for medicinal purposes. I wanted the gentleman to state what the value was, so that the House, or rather the committee, could appreciate what it means to fix the tax at $200 per pound.

Mr. HARRISON of New York. The price of medicinal opium at the customhouses has increased in the last few years. It has gone up to over $8 per pound now. Of course that contains 9 per cent of morphia, and it is a much higher form.

Mr. MOORE. The rate of $200 a pound, as fixed in the bill, would make the manufacture prohibitive?

Mr. HARRISON of New York. Yes; that is the effect.

Mr. RODDENBERY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman from New York yield?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. HARRISON of New York. Certainly.

Mr. RODDENBERY. Section 3 of the bill provides that opium prepared for smoking and manufacturing purposes in the United States should be stamped. The gentleman does not anticipate that under the provisions of this bill, as a matter of fact, there would be any such opium to be stamped?

Mr. HARRISON of New York. No. I think the gentleman from Georgia will admit that the provisions proposed by this bill will entirely prohibit the manufacture of smoking opium in the United States, and it is the only way I know of that we have the constitutional power to accomplish that purpose.

Mr. RODDENBERY. And that section supplies the machinery that would go along with the bill?

Mr. HARRISON of New York. Exactly. It is merely a reenactment of existing law, an international revenue provision.

The CHAIRMAN. If there is no further general discussion on the bill, the Clerk will report the bill for amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 1967) to amend the act of October 1, 1890 (26 Stats., p. 1567), regulating the manufacture of smoking opium within the United States.

Be it enacted, etc., That an internal-revenue tax of $200 per pound shall be levied and collected upon all opium manufactured in the United States for smoking purposes; and no person shall engage in such manufacture who is not a citizen of the United States and who has not given the bond required by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue.

SEC. 2. That every manufacturer of such opium shall file with the collector of internal revenue of the district in which his manufactory is located such notices, inventories, and bonds, shall keep such books and render such returns of material and products, shall put up such signs and affix such number to his factory, and conduct his business under such surveillance of officers and agents as the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, may by regulation require. But the bond required of such manufacturer shall be with sureties satisfactory to the collector of internal revenue, and in a penal sum of not less than $100,000; and the sum of said bond may be increased from time to time and additional sureties required, at the discretion of the collector or under instructions of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue.

SEC. 3. That all opium prepared for smoking manufactured in the United States shall be duly stamped in such a permanent manner as to denote the payment of the internal-revenue tax thereon.

SEC. 4. That the provisions of existing laws covering the engraving, issue, sale, accountability, effacement, cancellation, and the destruction of stamps relating to tobacco and snuff, as far as applicable, are hereby made to apply to stamps provided for by the preceding section.

SEC. 5. That a penalty of not less than $10,000 or imprisonment for not less than five years, or both, in the discretion of the court, shall be imposed for each and every violation of the preceding sections of this act relating to opium or any person or persons; and all opium prepared for smoking wherever found within the United States without the stamps required by this act shall be forfeited and destroyed.

With a committee amendment:

Amend, page 3, line 5, by striking out the word "or" and inserting in lieu thereof the word "by."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HARRISON of New York. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise and report the bill favorably to the House, with the recommendation that the amendment be agreed to and that the bill as amended do pass.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. CRISP, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill (H. R. 1967) to amend the act of October 1, 1890 (26 Stat., p. 1567), regulating the manufacture of smoking opium within the United States, and had directed him to report the same back to the House with an amendment, with the recommendation that the amendment be agreed to and that the bill as amended do pass.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman from New York yield?

Mr. HARRISON of New York. With pleasure.

Mr. MANN. Does the gentleman think there would be any objection to adding a new section, repealing the existing act?

Mr. HARRISON of New York. None whatever—a section directly repealing the act. Is that what the gentleman from Illinois refers to?

Mr. MANN. Yes.

Mr. HARRISON of New York. Has the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] prepared an amendment?

Mr. MANN. No; I have not. I suggest that a new section, to be numbered section 6, should be added, providing that "the provisions of the act of October 1, 1890 (26 Stats., p. 1567), in so far as they relate to the manufacture of smoking opium, are hereby repealed."

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN].

The Clerk read as follows:

Add, as a new section, on page 3, the following:

"SEC. 6. The provisions of the act of October 1, 1890 (26 Stats., p. 1567), in so far as they relate to the manufacture of smoking opium, are hereby repealed."

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the amended bill.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill regulating the manufacture of smoking opium within the United States, and for other purposes."

On motion of Mr. HARRISON of New York, a motion to reconsider the vote whereby the bill was passed was laid on the table.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 3 o'clock and 24 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned, under the order previously made, until Thursday, June 26, 1913, at 12 o'clock noon.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, executive communications were taken from the Speaker's table and referred as follows:

1. A letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting, with a letter from the Chief of Engineers, report of examination of Steinhatchee River, Fla. (H. Doc. No. 99); to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors and ordered to be printed with illustrations.

2. A letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting, with a letter from the Chief of Engineers, report of examination of the harbor at Cedar Keys, Fla. (H. Doc. No. 100); to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors and ordered to be printed with illustrations.

3. A letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting, with a letter from the Chief of Engineers, report on examination of Wills Creek, Ala. (H. Doc. No. 101); to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors and ordered to be printed with illustration.

4. A letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting, with a letter from the Chief of Engineers, report on examination of harbor of refuge at or near Scituate, Mass. (H. Doc. No. 102); to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors and ordered to be printed with illustrations.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII, bills and resolutions were severally reported from committees, delivered to the Clerk, and referred to the several calendars therein named, as follows:

Mr. HARRISON of New York, from the Committee on Ways and Means, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 6282) to provide for the registration of, with collectors of internal revenue, and to impose a special tax upon all persons who produce, import, manufacture, compound, deal in, dispense, sell, distribute, or give away opium or coca leaves, their salts, derivatives, or preparations, and for other purposes, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 23), which said bill and report were referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

He also, from the same committee, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 1966) to amend an act entitled "An act to prohibit the importation and use of opium for other than medicinal purposes," approved February 9, 1909, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 24), which said bill and report were referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

PUBLIC BILLS, RESOLUTIONS, AND MEMORIALS.

Under clause 3 of Rule XXII, bills, resolutions, and memorials were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. DICKINSON: A bill (H. R. 6372) to extend the pension laws of the United States to the soldiers engaged in the Utah expedition of 1857 and 1858, and to the widows and children of such soldiers; to the Committee on Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 6419) granting an increase of pension to Thomas J. Lease; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 6420) for the relief of Ella M. Ewart; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. KREIDER: A bill (H. R. 6421) for the relief of Thomas M. Jones; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. LEE of Pennsylvania: A bill (H. R. 6422) granting a pension to Ellen McGee; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 6423) granting an increase of pension to John Williams; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. McANDREWS: A bill (H. R. 6424) granting a pension to Fredericke Schnert; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 6425) granting a pension to R. Mandana Caldwell; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 6426) to amend the military record of Carlos Baker; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. MAHER: A bill (H. R. 6427) granting an increase of pension to Charles L. Konollman; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. MOSS of West Virginia: A bill (H. R. 6428) granting an increase of pension to Lyman D. Bogue; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. RIORDAN: A bill (H. R. 6429) for the relief of Bridget McGrane; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. SHARP: A bill (H. R. 6430) granting an increase of pension to Jennette A. Wickham; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. SLEMP: A bill (H. R. 6431) to pay Isaac W. Airey for services rendered to the United States Army during the late Civil War; to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. WHITACRE: A bill (H. R. 6432) granting a pension to Harrison P. Taylor; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. HOWARD: Resolution (H. Res. 186) to appoint W. H. Bell a special officer to serve in and about the House Office Building; to the Committee on Accounts.

PETITIONS, ETC.

Under clause 1 of Rule XXII, petitions and papers were laid on the Clerk's desk and referred as follows:

By Mr. ASHBROOK: Petition of the Sykes-Horn and 9 other merchants of Canal Dover, Ohio, favoring a change in the interstate-commerce laws; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. BARTHOLDT: Petition of 78 citizens of Lincoln and Flathead Counties, Mont., praying for the settlers of that section under the homestead laws; to the Committee on the Public Lands.

Also, petition of the St. Louis Lumbermen's Club, protesting against legislation to divorce industry from transportation; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

Also, petition of the South Side Motor Boat Club, of St. Louis, Mo., favoring the passage of the bill licensing power boats; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

Also, petition of the Missouri Bankers' Association, favoring 1-cent letter postage; to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

Also, petition of 78 citizens of Lincoln and Flathead Counties, Mont., praying for a speedy congressional investigation of the Forestry Department and the alleged Lumber Trust in that section; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. BURKE of South Dakota: Petition of the Pierre Commercial Club, Pierre, S. Dak., favoring the passage of legislation making an appropriation for the purpose of building diplomatic and consular buildings, etc., in all foreign countries; to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

SENATE.

THURSDAY, June 26, 1913.

The Senate met at 2 o'clock p. m.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. Forrest J. Prettyman, D. D.

The Secretary proceeded to read the Journal of the proceedings of Monday last, when, on request of Mr. OVERMAN and by unanimous consent, the further reading was dispensed with and the Journal was approved.

DISPOSITION OF USELESS PAPERS.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair lays before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting, pursuant to law, a schedule of books, papers, and so forth, on the files of the office of the Auditor for the Post Office Department which are not needed in the transaction of public business and have no permanent value or historical interest. The communication and accompanying paper will be referred to the Joint Select Committee on the Disposition of Useless Papers in the Executive Departments, and the Chair appoints the Senator from Vermont [Mr. PAGE] and the Senator from Oregon [Mr. LANE] members of the committee on the part of the Senate. The Secretary will notify the House of Representatives of the appointment of the committee.

FINDINGS OF THE COURT OF CLAIMS.

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate communications from the assistant clerk of the Court of Claims, transmitting certified copies of the findings of fact and conclusions filed by the court in the following causes:

Edward D Meier v. United States (S. Doc. No. 115); and

James N. Hill, sole heir and representative of Joshua Hill, deceased, v. United States (S. Doc. No. 116).

The foregoing findings were, with the accompanying papers, referrred to the Committee on Claims and ordered to be printed.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by D. K. Hempstead, its enrolling clerk, announced that the House had passed a bill (H. R. 1967) regulating the manufacture of smoking opium within the United States, and for other purposes, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. GALLINGER presented petitions of the Brandle & Smith Co., of Philadelphia, Pa.; the Commercial Club of La Grande, Oreg.; and the Lovell & Covel Co., of Boston, Mass., praying for the exemption of organizations not organized for profit from the operation of the income-tax clause of the pending tariff bill, which were referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also presented petitions of Cora Pincott, of Buffalo, N. Y.; R. L. Walker, of Carnegie, Pa.; of the Illinois Federation of Women's Clubs; the League of American Sportsmen of New York; and of the fish and game commissioners of New Jersey, praying for the adoption of the clause in Schedule N of the pending tariff bill prohibiting the importation of the plumage of certain wild birds, which were referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. SHERMAN presented a petition of the congregation of the Methodist Episcopal Church of Ravenswood, Ill., praying for the adoption of an amendment to the Constitution to prohibit polygamy, which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

He also presented a memorial of sundry citizens of Springfield, Ill., remonstrating against the importation of cigars free of duty from the Philippine Islands, which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

IMPORTATION OF PLUMAGE OF WILD BIRDS.

Mr. GALLINGER. I have a most interesting letter from Dr. W. T. Hornaday, director of the New York Zoological Park, in reference to a so-called feather provision in the Underwood tariff bill. I ask unanimous consent that the letter with the accompanying memorandum may be printed in the RECORD and referred to the Committee on Finance.

There being no objection, the letter and accompanying memorandum were referred to the Committee on Finance and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

NEW YORK ZOOLOGICAL SOCIETY,
NEW YORK ZOOLOGICAL PARK,
New York, June 19, 1913.

Hon. JACOB H. GALLINGER,
United States Senate.

DEAR SIR: The New York Zoological Society strongly protests against the adoption of the feather millinery trade's amendment to the clause in the tariff bill—Schedule N, paragraph 357—which is designed to prohibit the importation of the plumage of wild birds for milliners' use. We ask you to vote against all amendments that have been or that may be offered to the bird protective clause now in the bill.

There are now on file with your Finance Committee briefs which show that the milliners' amendment, harmless in outward appearance, will, if adopted, keep open our doors to the commercial use of the plumage of hundreds of species of the most important birds of the world. The list will include many song birds killed as food, and offer a premium on the destruction of each species that is desired by the feather trade. The surest way to exterminate any species of bird or quadruped is by putting a price on the heads of its members.

We denounce the milliners' amendment as dangerous and destructive to the birds of the world. We insist that it is contrary to the wishes of 99 per cent of all the American people who have paid attention to this subject. We condemn it because there is not one good and sufficient reason why it should prevail.

We oppose it because the cruel slaughter of wild birds for money profit has become utterly repulsive and intolerable. The fact that the feather trade "wants the money" is no justification for wild-bird slaughter.

We have pointed out that hand embroidery easily can be made to take the place of feather ornaments for women's hats, and furnish employment for a far larger number of working people than now are occupied in arranging feathers. The rapidity with which embroidery is now coming into use on women's hats proves that our contention on this point is well founded.

We ask you to vote against the feather trade's amendment both in the caucus and on the floor of the Senate and prevent its adoption. We feel that the wishes of 24 New York millinery firms should not prevail against the wishes of the millions of American people who now strongly desire to stop the slaughter of wild birds for the money to be derived by traffic in their plumage.

Respectfully submitted.

HENRY FAIRFIELD OSBORN,
President New York Zoological Society.
MADISON GRANT,
Chairman Executive Committee.
W. T. HORNADAY,
Director New York Zoological Park,
Author of Our Vanishing Wild Life.

WHAT THE FEATHER TRADE'S "AMENDMENT" REALLY MEANS TO THE BIRDS OF THE WORLD—2,342 SPECIES OF BIRDS INVOLVED, NOT COUNTING ANY SONG BIRDS KILLED AS "FOOD" OR AS "PESTS."

A small and innocent-looking "amendment" to the clause in the new tariff bill prohibiting the importation of wild birds' plumage for milliners' use is now before the United States Senate (Schedule N, sec. 357). Already the majority of the Senate Finance Committee has approved it—it looks so harmless and reasonable!

It provides that the feather trade shall have the right to import the feathers of all birds killed as "game" for food, and of all birds killed because they are "pests." As a matter of fact, there is no commercial product consisting of the feathers of hawks and owls that have been shot because they are "pests." But, for the moment, we will pass that point.

Let us proceed in this matter with our eyes wide open. How many species of foreign "game" birds and "pest" birds would be subject to slaughter for the feather trade in case that "amendment" prevails and finally is enacted into law?

A LIST OF THE SPECIES ENDANGERED.

(Prepared by Lee S. Crandall, assistant curator of birds, New York Zoological Park, from the British Museum Catalogue of Birds.)

Game birds of the world, exclusive of the United States.

	Species.
Tinamous	71
Upland game birds:
Megapodes, or brush turkeys	28
Curassows, guans, and chachalacas	59
Ptarmigan and grouse	26
Old World partridges and quail	153
Pheasants	92
Jungle fowl	4
Peafowl	3
Guinea fowl	23
Turkeys	1
New World quail	59
	448
Hemipodes or button quail	27
Sand grouse	15
Pigeons and doves	540
Rails and gallinules	195
Shore birds	242
Cranes and their allies	20
Ducks, geese, and swans	54
Total	1,622

"Pest" birds of the world, exclusive of the United States.

Eagles, hawks, kites, and falcons	437
Owls	283
Total	720
Grand total of species available under the amendment demanded by the feather trade	2,342

No wonder the feather trade is satisfied with their little three-line amendment!

Now the question is: Are the American people and the Senators of the United States willing to leave the 2,342 species of birds listed above subject to slaughter by the head-hunters of the feather trade?

The way to preserve the birds of the world is to stop the killing of them!

By Mr. SMITH of Georgia:

A joint resolution (S. J. Res. 54) authorizing the Secretary of War to loan certain tents for the use of the Confederate Veterans' Reunion, to be held at Brunswick, Ga., in July, 1913; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

THE TARIFF.

Mr. JONES. I submit an amendment intended to be proposed to the pending tariff bill. I should like very much to have it referred to the Democratic caucus, but I am unable to find anything in the rules permitting such a reference. So I move that it be printed and referred to the Committee on Finance.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. SHERMAN submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (H. R. 3321) to reduce tariff duties and provide revenue for the Government, and for other purposes, which was referred to the Committee on Finance, and ordered to be printed.

EGYPTIAN COTTON (S. DOC. NO. 113).

Mr. FLETCHER. I have a copy of a report by J. S. Williams, chairman, and Clarence Ousley, subcommittee to study the production and marketing of Egyptian cotton, made to the American commission to investigate such agricultural credit and cooperation. It is estimated that the cost for printing the report will be about $30.74. I ask that it be printed as a public document.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

FREDERICK WILLIAM RAIFFEISEN (S. DOC. NO. 114).

Mr. FLETCHER. I have a copy of an address by David Lubin, delegate of the United States to the International Institute of Agriculture, delivered before the American commission on the occasion of its visit to the monument and house of Raiffeisen, the father of the rural-credit system, near Coblenz, Germany, June 12, 1913. The estimate furnished for the printing of this address is $17.86. I ask that it be printed as a public document.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

STATUE OF ZACHARIAH CHANDLER.

Mr. GALLINGER (for Mr. SMITH of Michigan) submitted the following concurrent resolution (S. Con. Res. 4), which was ordered to lie on the table and be printed:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That the statue of Zachariah Chandler, presented by the State of Michigan to be placed in Statuary Hall, is accepted in the name of the United States, and that the thanks of Congress be tendered to the State for the contribution of the statue of one of its most eminent citizens, illustrious for the purity of his life and his distinguished services to the State and Nation.

Second. That a copy of these resolutions, suitably engrossed and duly authenticated, be transmitted to the governor of the State of Michigan.

Mr. GALLINGER (for Mr. SMITH of Michigan) submitted the following concurrent resolution (S. Con. Res. 5), which was ordered to lie on the table and be printed:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That there be printed and bound, under the direction of the Joint Committee on Printing, the proceedings in Congress, together with the proceedings at the unveiling in Statuary Hall, upon the acceptance of the statue of Zachariah Chandler, presented by the State of Michigan, 16,500 copies, of which 5,000 shall be for the use of the Senate and 10,000 for the use of the House of Representatives, and the remaining 1,500 copies shall be for the use and distribution of the Senators and Representatives in Congress from the State of Michigan.

COTTON STATISTICS.

Mr. LIPPITT submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 120), which was read, considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Secretary of Commerce be directed to furnish, for the use of the Senate, detailed information:

First. To show how the figures referring to cotton goods in the table on page 39 of the report of the Department of Commerce entitled "Foreign Tariff Systems and Industrial Conditions" were obtained; and Second. To establish, if possible, the correctness of the statements that it takes 504 horsepower in the United States to add the same value to cotton goods as 114 horsepower does in the United Kingdom, and that 47 wage earners in the United States add as much to the value of cotton goods as 255 do in the United Kingdom.

SENATE FOLDING ROOM.

Mr. OVERMAN. I submit a resolution which I ask may be read and referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate.

The resolution (S. Res. 121) was read and referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, as follows:

Resolved, That the Sergeant at Arms of the Senate be, and he is hereby, authorized to continue to rent for a period not to exceed 12 months from July 1, 1913, and at a rental not to exceed the sum now being paid, the warehouse now occupied as storage rooms for the folding room of the Senate on B Street SW., the expense thereof to be paid out of the contingent fund of the Senate.

Mr. OVERMAN. I desire to have the accompanying letter read.

There being no objection, the letter was read and referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, as follows:

SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES,
SERGEANT AT ARMS,
June 26, 1913.

Hon. LEE S. OVERMAN,
Chairman Committee on Rules, United States Senate.

DEAR SENATOR: The lease on warehouse used as Senate folding room, located at First and B Streets SW., expires on June 30, 1913.

It has been impossible to comply with the law requiring vacation of said building by that time, for the following reasons:

None of the old buildings located in blocks lately purchased by the Government could store the immense volume of documents in the warehouse, and further, this is in conflict with another section of the law that provides for the demolishing of all buildings in these blocks, beginning July 1, 1913. The Senate Office Building has not available space sufficient to store the same, and until such time as the large surplus can be disposed of I recommend that the occupancy of warehouse be continued.

I find that there are 461,214 miscellaneous documents and pamphlets, in sets and single volumes, old, and to the credit of no one—much of the stock consisting of old departmental reports, dating as far back as 1870.

There are over 350,000 old documents remaining to the credit of Senators, which have either been overlooked or are valueless.

The Government Printing Office has over 300,000 documents to deliver to the Senate, and there is no available room for storing the same in this warehouse.

I understand that there are 110,000 Yearbooks alone to be delivered.

The above is respectfully submitted for your information and consideration.

Very respectfully, CHARLES R. HIGGINS,
Sergeant at Arms United States Senate.

DISPOSITION OF DOCUMENTS.

Mr. OVERMAN. I introduce a resolution bearing on this subject and ask that it be referred to the Committee on Rules.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The resolution will be read.

The resolution (S. Res. 122) was read as follows:

Resolved, That certain old documents and pamphlets now in the Senate folding room known as "surplus documents" and not credited to the account of any Senator shall be disposed of under the direction of the Sergeant at Arms as follows:

First. From a schedule thereof to be furnished by the Sergeant at Arms each Senator shall be entitled to select and distribute such of said documents and pamphlets as he may desire, the same to be taken from the Senate folding room within a period of six months from the date of the adoption of this resolution. At the expiration of that period of time the Sergeant at Arms is hereby authorized to dispose of the residue of said documents to the several executive departments, bureaus, offices, and commissions of the Government which may desire the same, or to sell the same as waste paper, the proceeds thereof to be deposited in the Treasury in the manner provided by law: Provided, That said surplus documents and pamphlets shall be subject to the order of Senators in the order in which applications therefor are filed with the Sergeant at Arms.

Second. That certain obsolete documents and pamphlets in the folding room, described in a schedule prepared under the direction of the Sergeant at Arms now to the credit of Senators and which are seldom drawn upon and for which there is little demand, be disposed of under the direction of the Sergeant at Arms as follows: At the expiration of eight months from the date of the adoption of this resolution such of the said documents and pamphlets as are not disposed of and taken from the folding room by the Senators to whom they are credited shall be disposed of by the Sergeant at Arms to the several executive departments, bureaus, offices, and commissions of the Government or be sold as waste paper, the proceeds thereof to be deposited in the Treasury in the manner provided by law: Provided, That none of the documents and pamphlets provided to be disposed of by this resolution shall be hereafter returned to the Senate folding room from any source.

Mr. SMOOT. I ask the Senator from North Carolina to allow the resolution to go to the Committee on Printing, and I will state briefly why.

Mr. OVERMAN. I have no objection to the reference of the resolution to that committee.

Mr. SMOOT. Very well.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The resolution will be referred to the Committee on Printing.

Mr. GALLINGER. Before the reference is made I am going to suggest that it might be well if it were enlarged so that the Sergeant at Arms might communicate with each Senator and ask what documents to his credit he is willing to surrender.

Mr. OVERMAN. That the resolution provides for.

Mr. GALLINGER. It does provide for it?

Mr. OVERMAN. It provides that each Senator shall be consulted, and also that a catalogue of the documents shall be made and a statement submitted to each Senator, and that the documents Senators do not desire shall be sold as waste paper.

Mr. GALLINGER. That is very proper, because I know I have more than a thousand documents that I should like to get rid of.

Mr. SMOOT. I wish to say to the Senator, however, there are only about a million documents now, and we have this same matter occurring every two or three years. We have had thousands of tons of these documents sold as waste paper. If we could only get the other House to act upon the printing bill which the Senate has already passed, every particle of this difficulty would be obviated.

WOMAN SUFFRAGE PARADE.

Mr. THOMAS submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 124), which was read and referred to the Committee on Printing:

Resolved, That 10,000 additional copies of the hearings before the Senate Committee on Woman Suffrage be printed for the use of Senators.

HEIRS OF ANGELO ALBANO (H. DOC. NO. 105).

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States, which was read and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed:

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

I transmit herewith a report from the Secretary of State in relation to the case of Angelo Albano, an Italian subject, who, on September 20, 1910, was, while in custody on a charge of crime at Tampa, Fla., seized by an armed mob and killed; and I recommend that, as an act of grace and without reference to the question of the liability of the United States, Congress make suitable provision for the heirs of the Italian subject thus killed, the proceeds to be distributed by the Italian Government in such manner as it may deem proper.

WOODROW WILSON.

THE WHITE HOUSE, June 26, 1913.

HOUSE BILL REFERRED.

H. R. 1967. An act regulating the manufacture of smoking opium within the United States, and for other purposes, was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Finance.

INDIAN APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. STONE. I submit a report of the committee of conference on House bill 1917, the Indian appropriation bill.

The Secretary proceeded to read the report.

Mr. STONE. Mr. President, after the conference report on the Indian appropriation bill was agreed upon, it was left to some secretaries and clerks to write it up and to prepare it. I have just been informed that by some oversight one of the items has been left out. I apologize to the Senate, and ask to withdraw the report for the time being, that the item to which I refer may be inserted.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The report is withdrawn.

LEGISLATIVE DRAFTING BUREAU.

Mr. OWEN. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 1240) to establish the legislative reference bureau of the Library of Congress.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Let the bill be read for information.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be read for the information of the Senate.

The SECRETARY. The Committee on the Library report to strike out all after the enacting clause and to insert:

That there is hereby created a bureau to be known as the legislative drafting bureau.

SEC. 2. That the said bureau shall be under the direction of an officer, to be known as the chief draftsman, to be appointed by the President of the United States, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, without reference to party affiliations, and solely on the ground of fitness to perform the duties of the office. He shall receive a salary of $7,500 per annum, and shall hold office for the term of 10 years unless sooner removed by the President upon the recommendation of the Judiciary Committees of both Houses of Congress, acting jointly.

SEC. 3. That there shall be in said bureau such assistants as Congress may from time to time provide. They shall be appointed by the chief draftsman solely with reference to their fitness for their particular duties.

SEC. 4. That public bills, or amendments to public bills, shall be drafted or revised by the said bureau on request of the President, any committee of either House of Congress, or of 8 Members of the Senate or of 25 Members of the House of Representatives. The Judiciary Committees of both Houses of Congress acting jointly may, from time to time, prescribe rules and regulations for the conduct of the said bureau, including provision for drafting and revision upon such other requests as may be deemed advisable.

SEC. 5. That the chief draftsman shall submit annually to the Secretary of the Treasury estimates of the appropriations necessary for the maintenance of the said bureau, and shall make to Congress at the beginning of each regular session a report as to the affairs of the said bureau for the preceding fiscal year, which shall include a detailed statement of appropriations and expenditures.

SEC. 6. That the Librarian of Congress is authorized and directed to establish in the Library of Congress a division to be known as the legislative reference division of the Library of Congress, and to employ competent persons therein to gather, classify, and make available in translations, indexes, digests, compilations, and bulletins, and otherwise, data for or bearing upon legislation, to render such data serviceable to Congress and committees and Members thereof and to the legislative drafting bureau, and to provide in his annual estimates for the compensation of such persons, for the acquisition of material required for their work, and for other expenses incidental thereto.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Oklahoma asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill.

INDIAN APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. STONE. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Oklahoma yield to the Senator from Missouri?

Mr. OWEN. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. STONE. I desire to present the conference report on the Indian appropriation bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair would inquire whether the Senator from Missouri desires to have the conference report reread or whether the particular omitted item can be pointed out to the Secretary and that be read?

Mr. STONE. I would be perfectly satisfied if I could have consent to have the complete report printed in the RECORD.

Mr. GALLINGER. Does the Senator from Missouri ask that the conference report be considered to-day?

Mr. STONE. I shall ask to have it considered now.

Mr. GALLINGER. As the report was read it occurred to me that it contained a great deal of new matter that had not heretofore been considered by either House. I may be mistaken about that, but, if that be so, I think we ought to have the privilege of looking at the report.

Mr. STONE. I do not think there is very much new matter in the report. There are very slight increases in the appropriation.

Mr. GALLINGER. Of course, the Senator from Missouri is aware of the fact that under the rule of the Senate there ought to be no new matter in a conference report.

Mr. STONE. Does the Senator mean new matter in the appropriation bill?

Mr. GALLINGER. I refer to any new matter that has not been considered heretofore by either of the two Houses of Congress.

Mr. STONE. I had supposed that if the Senate desired to increase an appropriation or to decrease an appropriation it could do so, and I had supposed that even if other matters, legislative in their character, had been agreed to in the Senate and referred to the committee of conference, that committee would have jurisdiction to take up those amendments and to dispose of them even by way of amendment.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I fear the Senator from Missouri misunderstood me. What I meant to suggest was that matter not heretofore considered and incorporated in the House bill or put into the bill as an amendment in the Senate could not properly, under our rules, be incorporated in a conference report, and I stated that I feared that there was a good deal of such matter in the Senator's conference report.

Mr. STONE. Does the suggestion of the Senator from New Hampshire go to the point of supposing that the conference committee has inserted in their report entirely new matter in no wise connected with the bill as it was sent to them?

Mr. GALLINGER. I should consider that it was altogether irregular and beyond the power of the conference committee to do that.

Mr. STONE. The conference committee has done nothing of that kind, I will say to the Senator. No new matter not considered either in the House or in the Senate has been introduced. There have been some little changes in clauses that were referred to the conference committee; that is to say, the House would recede or the Senate would recede with an amendment.

Mr. GALLINGER. That undoubtedly is entirely proper if the amendment was not entirely original matter.

Mr. STONE. I think I feel warranted in assuring the Senator that there has been introduced no new matter not entirely appropriate.

Mr. GALLINGER. I am not going to be insistent or technical about the matter; but as the report was being read I caught a list of the salaries or appropriations for some purpose that occurred to me had not heretofore been considered. Am I correct as to that?

Mr. STONE. I do not know to just what the Senator refers. There is nothing of that kind, so far as I know.

Mr. GALLINGER. I appreciate the importance of having action on this bill, and, upon the statement made by the Senator from Missouri that I am laboring under a misapprehension in that regard, I will not object to the present consideration of the conference report.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the conference report?

Mr. LANE. Mr. President, I do not wish to delay the passage of the bill. I wish to make a correction of an error that I committed when the bill was last under consideration in the Senate, when I characterized the first item of appropriation in the bill as covering a deficiency. In this I was mistaken. The deficit, it seems from the report, occurred in that item the year before. The report and the justification which were handed to the committee this year to accompany the bill in their consideration of that measure called attention, in a small way, to another deficit which exists in the appropriation of $300,000, amounting to one-third thereof. So far as I can ascertain from reading the report, there is no mention made of the matter; and I wish to call attention to the irregularity, to say the least, of the Senate providing for deficits in current appropriations without having full information concerning such deficiencies and the assumption of legislative authority by the executive department in appropriating money from the public funds without authority from the legislative branch of the Government to do so. It may be necessary, and at times it may be the wise thing, perhaps, for the department to act in this way, but it should not do so without giving Congress full and detailed justification concerning the matter.

The item to which I refer will be found upon page 33 of the report of a hearing held on December 2, 1912, before a subcommittee of the Committee on Indian Affairs of the House of Representatives, and has to do with the present appropriation providing for purchase and transportation of Indian supplies. Matters are urgent. The necessity for these appropriations is actually existent. I am not trying to interfere with the passage of the bill, but I do want to call attention to what seems to me to be a sort of carelessness which has grown up upon the part of certain departments of the executive branch of the Government, in that they do not do full justice or courtesy to the legislative branch in the way of giving the legislative branch full information concerning the necessity for the appropriation of public funds. I consider such information to be a matter of vital importance and absolutely necessary. I say this in no spirit of criticism of any Member of the Senate or House or of the Indian Committee; yet it seems almost to have grown into a custom, for I find traces of it in several different appropriations.

I make this statement to correct an error which I made the last time we discussed the bill, and to call the attention of this body to the necessity of demanding full justification for all appropriations, more particularly of expenditures which have been made without authority. Appropriations covering deficits should specifically state that they are made for that purpose.

Mr. STONE. Mr. President, has the Senate entered upon the consideration of the conference report?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair so understands. There was no objection.

Mr. FALL. Mr. President, I shall not make any objection to the consideration of the conference report. I understand that a portion of it has been read. I should like to ask for information as to two items, one Senate amendment 28 and the other Senate amendment 29, on page 53 of the Senate print. I should like to know, for my own information, just what was done in regard to those items, and what sums they now contain.

Mr. STONE. As to those items, amendments 28 and 29, the Senate conferees receded.

Mr. FALL. And the action of the House still stands as it was? Mr. President, I am willing to take any responsibility that is necessary for my own——

Mr. STONE. If the Senator will allow me to interrupt him for a moment, the Senate conferees receded with an amendment.

Mr. FALL. The usual procedure, of course, would be to have this conference report printed. There will not be many more bills passed in this way, Mr. President.

Mr. STONE. Amendment No. 28 is as follows:

For support and education of 400 Indian pupils at the Indian school at Albuquerque, N. Mex., and for pay of superintendent, $68,600; for general repairs and improvements, $5,000; new buildings, $15,000, in all, $88,600.

Mr. FALL. And as to 29?

Mr. STONE. Amendment 29 is as follows:

For support and education of 300 Indian pupils at the Indian school at Santa Fe, N. Mex., and for pay of superintendent, $51,900; for general repairs and improvements, $6,000; for girls' dormitory, $18,000; in all, $77,500.

Mr. FALL. Did the chairman leave out an item of $1,660 for waterworks, or is it in the report? I ask because this is the only source of information I have.

Mr. STONE. Mr. President, I will withdraw the report, as I find another mistake in it. I will bring it up again to-morrow.

Mr. FALL. Mr. President, I believe I have the floor, and I wish to occupy it for just one moment. I have no desire to retard in any way immediate action upon this bill or its passage. I am a member of the committee, however, and one of the Senators who must pass upon this matter, and the chairman of the committee is the only source of information I have.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, I should like to inquire of the chairman of the committee, if the Senator from New Mexico will yield for that purpose, whether this conference report can not be printed, so that Senators may have the advantage of knowing what it contains?

Mr. STONE. Yes; I will ask now to have the report printed.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair understood the Senator to withdraw the report.

Mr. STONE. It ought to be printed in the RECORD.

Mr. SMOOT. Not if it is withdrawn.

Mr. STONE. I withdraw it, and it had better not be printed at all until it is corrected.

Mr. FALL. I think that by far the better course, Mr. President. Then we will know what is in the report.

Mr. ROBINSON. I suggest to the chairman of the committee that it may be printed for the use of the committee. In a matter of this importance Senators would like to have an opportunity to know what it contains, especially those of us who have devoted a good deal of study and consideration to the bill.

Mr. STONE. Mr. President, I can easily do that. I will now go to the committee room myself and go over the manuscripts and see that the report is correct. When that is done I will have it printed on the order of the committee.

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President, may I ask what has become of the Indian appropriation bill?

The VICE PRESIDENT. It is in the hands of the chairman of the conferees on the part of the Senate. The conference report has been withdrawn.

Mr. GRONNA. With the request that it be printed in the RECORD?

Mr. OWEN. It will be printed by the order of the committee.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair will be compelled to rule that nothing can be printed when there is nothing before the Senate.

Mr. GRONNA. There was so much confusion that I was not sure what had been done.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Missouri said he would have it printed when finally prepared.

LEGISLATIVE DRAFTING BUREAU.

Mr. OWEN. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of Senate bill 1240, to establish the legislative reference bureau of the Library of Congress.

Mr. GALLINGER. I desire to give a little more consideration to the bill for which present consideration is asked by the Senator from Oklahoma, and I shall be constrained to object this morning. I assure the Senator that in the near future I shall be quite willing to have it brought up and discussed. I do not believe in the bill, and I have some observations to make concerning it, but I would rather not make them this morning.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will remain on the calendar.

DECISIONS OF UNITED STATES SUPREME COURT.

Mr. SHAFROTH. I desire to call up Senate resolution 103, and ask for its immediate consideration.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Colorado asks for the immediate consideration of a resolution which the Secretary will read.

The Secretary read the resolution (S. Res. 103) reported by Mr. SHAFROTH on the 18th instant from the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, as follows:

Resolved, That Senate resolution adopted on the 20th day of February, 1885, providing for furnishing to Senators pamphlet printed copies of the decisions of the Supreme Court of the United States be, and the same is hereby, annulled.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I do not see that there is a report upon the resolution. It is quite important, and I should like to ask the Senator from Colorado if a report has been submitted?

Mr. SHAFROTH. No; not a written report. The committee considered the resolution, and ordered me to report it favorably, just as reports are usually made upon matters referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate.

Mr. SMOOT. Of course generally resolutions referred to that committee are those calling for the payment of money for some particular item that is needed immediately. This resolution proposes to change existing law, and I think there ought to be a written report upon it.

Mr. SHAFROTH. The committee has had this matter under consideration for some time, and Senators have discussed it for some time. It is not complicated. It is simply a question as to whether we shall keep in force an old resolution, passed in 1885, which provides that there shall be furnished to each Senator copies of the Supreme Court decisions, at a cost of 80 cents per printed page. The committee thought that was an outrageous price, and therefore that the resolution ought to be annulled.

Mr. SMOOT. I agree with the Senator that 80 cents per printed page is an outrageous price, but I should like to ask him if the price thus charged is not taken into consideration with the contract itself, and whether it is not virtually an advance upon the contract rather than a direct charge upon these few additional copies?

Mr. SHAFROTH. I will say to the Senator that I was told by the clerk of the Supreme Court that the contract which the printers have with the Supreme Court provides for a charge of $2.95 per printed page, and that this is an additional charge. It seemed to me that that price was very high, but we had no jurisdiction over that subject, it being contained in a general appropriation bill.

Mr. SMOOT. So that I may be understood by the Senator, he having looked into this question later than I, I will state my understanding is that in order that these copies shall be delivered to Senators and Members of the House of Representatives ahead of the regular printing provided by law, the additional price, which is an exceedingly high price, is paid for them, but that it is taken into consideration with the general price that would have been charged if they had all been printed at one time. Has the Senator looked up that question?

Mr. SHAFROTH. No; but the price for the copies is so outrageous that it seems to me it can not be taken into consideration as a part of the general price for publishing all of the Supreme Court decisions.

I want to say to the Senator that I do not believe one Senator out of fifty reads these decisions. I have asked a number of Senators, and I have not found one who has said that he has read the decisions, or any considerable number of them. In fact, I have failed to find a Senator who said he had read a decision.

Mr. SMOOT. I will say to the Senator that I have read a decision.

Mr. SHAFROTH. I admit there may be a few; but the Senator will concede that when any important decision is rendered by the Supreme Court, somebody rises in the Senate or in the House and asks that it be made a public document. What is the necessity of having copies of the pamphlet edition distributed to each Senator when there is no general use of them? It may be that a few Senators do read them.

The thing that called our attention to this matter was a bill which was rendered, and which I hold in my hand now, providing for payment for these decisions from February 6, 1913, to April 30, 1913. It amounts to $468.80, at the rate of 80 cents a page. I want to say to the Senator that the West Publishing Co. prints in pamphlet form every one of the decisions of the Supreme Court; and we could subscribe for each Senator for that entire edition, which they issue in pamphlet form, at a less annual cost than the amount of this one bill for three months. We can get them for $5 a year. They are sent in pamphlet form soon after the decisions are rendered, and after the pamphlet forms are delivered they are bound, and there is sent to each for nothing a permanent bound edition. For this same amount of money a volume of the temporary pamphlets and the bound volume for an entire year can be furnished to each one of the Senators.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me for a question?

Mr. SHAFROTH. Certainly.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Why could not these pamphlet copies be printed at the Government Printing Office at cost?

Mr. SHAFROTH. I will tell the Senator why. It is understood that the Justices of the Supreme Court desire that the decisions shall be printed by some person in whom they have entire confidence, so that there shall be no "leak" as to the decisions.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Could not that be arranged at the Government Printing Office?

Mr. SHAFROTH. I do not know. At any rate, that is their reason. In order to make any change it would be necessary to go and make some kind of negotiations. At any rate, they do not seem to want the Government Printing Office to publish the decisions.

It seems to me that if we want to have copies of the decisions furnished to the Members of the Senate, the best thing to do is to subscribe for a copy of the decisions for each Member of the Senate, to be furnished by the West Publishing Co. Then you will get every decision in pamphlet form soon after it is rendered, and you will also get a bound volume containing the decisions for the entire year, for the $5 which will have to be paid to the West Publishing Co.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Mr. President——

Mr. SHAFROTH. I yield to the Senator from Oregon.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I desire to ask the Senator if it is not a fact that the Senators who take pleasure in reading the decisions of the Supreme Court do not keep the pamphlets in such a condition that they can refer to them when they want them, and in the final analysis they go to the Supreme Court or to the Library in order to get a decision to read?

Mr. SHAFROTH. I do not believe there are half a dozen Senators who have copies of these temporary decisions in such form that they can turn to a decision, where there are some 20 or 30 pamphlets together. I have asked a number of Senators what they do with their copies of the decisions, and they have said: "I let them accumulate until I get quite a bunch and then I send them to John Jones, an attorney in my town." I have asked a number of Senators whether they have read the decisions, and I have failed yet to find one who had read the decisions.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. The Senator forgets that this Senator told the Senator from Colorado the other day that he did read them as they came out, and that he considered the publication of them in this form to be very valuable.

Mr. SHAFROTH. I do not remember it, if that is the case; but I am satisfied that no considerable number of Senators read the decisions, and it seems to me that the price is entirely too high.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. May I interrupt the Senator? The Senator will remember, when this matter was up some days ago, the price was spoken of, and it was suggested to the Senator from Colorado whether it would not be possible to make some different arrangement. Has the Senator attempted to do anything of that sort so as to keep the price within what he thinks is a reasonable price?

Mr. SHAFROTH. No, I have not; and I will state the reason why I have not done so. It is possible that the members of the Judiciary Committee of the Senate ought to have these pamphlet copies. It seems to me if they do, that for the 18 members of that committee it would be a great deal cheaper to send to the West Publishing Co. for these temporary sets and also have the permanent sets remain in the office. I thought that would be a more economical way of doing it, and if the Senator will prepare a resolution of that kind, I am quite sure that the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate will agree to it. But under the conditions that are here, charging 80 cents a printed page, when we have no proposition to furnish them at any less, it seems to me that the only way is to annul the resolution of 1885, and if the printer wants to make a different contract let him come to us.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President, I am very sorry to see the Senator from Colorado assume the attitude he takes in reference to this matter. I think he is laboring under a misapprehension.

The decisions of the Supreme Court are printed in pamphlet form, and we generally have them sent to us within three or four days or a week after they have been announced. We could not possibly get them through any legal periodical published at distant points in that time.

I wish to say to the Senator from Colorado that for years and years I have been a constant reader of those decisions, and it is about the only part of the law that I have had a chance to keep track of. If Senators would read the decisions of the Supreme Court from day to day as they are issued, they would find what a variety of cases the court passes upon and how much valuable instruction and advice we may get from all those cases. The only objection I have to them is that they are not provided with a syllabus, and you have oftentimes to read a good part of a decision before you get into the meat of the subject and ascertain the questions involved.

Now, we are sitting here as legislators, working from day to day with many important legal questions constantly addressed to us. I can not conceive of any equipment that we need more than the decisions of our highest court. Senators must remember that the Supreme Court of the United States in passing upon great public questions is different from any other court in the land, and its decisions are more than those of any other court. They not only have to pass upon technical legal questions, but oftentimes great cases like the Minnesota case, that has lately been passed upon, and there are many other cases which involve great fundamental questions that concern the welfare of the country.

Take the Minnesota case. The direct question involved there was whether the States have any power at all left to them to regulate commerce within a State.

A short time ago we had important decisions on the water-power question in reference to the waters of the Sault Ste. Marie Canal. We have another decision relating to the dredging of some oyster beds in Long Island Sound, and constantly in the decisions of the Supreme Court new questions arise and are disposed of. Of all the public documents printed by the Senate, that I have occasion to examine, there is no Senate document from which I get as much benefit and as much valuable advice and instruction.

When the Senator says there are very few who read these decisions I am loath to believe it. I think there are a great many Senators in this body who even if they are not lawyers are glad to read those decisions.

It may be that the cost of printing the decisions is too high. As to that question, I have nothing to say, but I have this to say: If the price is too high, make it reasonable, but, for God's sake, do not deprive the Senate of the United States of the benefit of those decisions. We need them more than we need anything else in the shape of literature in this body.

Therefore, Mr. President, I move that the resolution be recommitted to the committee with instructions to amend it so as to provide for reasonable compensation for printing the decisions. I agree with the Senator from Colorado that the price is too high, and if it is too high we ought to make it moderate and proper, but we should never totally rescind the resolution and deprive the Senate of the value of those decisions. I think if Senators will reflect on this matter they will see that it is of more importance and more far-reaching than any of us are aware of. It is not a Mrs. Winslow's soothing sirup almanac affair. It is a matter that concerns the fundamental principles of the Government. If there is any class of men who need to be fully informed by the current decisions of the Supreme Court it is we who are legislating for the entire body of the American people.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Mr. President, I wish to make a parliamentary inquiry.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator will state it.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. I should like to ask the parliamentary situation of the resolution.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Colorado has asked unanimous consent for its present consideration.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. I shall object.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Objection is made.

INVESTIGATION OF ATTEMPTS TO INFLUENCE LEGISLATION.

Mr. OVERMAN. The time fixed for the "lobbying" committee to investigate the "lobby" to make its report was on the 28th, which will be next Saturday. Since that time was fixed the Senate has added new labors to the committee and extended its investigations. I am therefore compelled to ask that the Senate extend the time of the committee in which to make its report.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from North Carolina, from the Committee on the Judiciary, asks consent for an extension of the time of the committee to make its report on the alleged lobby investigation.

Mr. GALLINGER. What extension does the Senator ask?

Mr. OVERMAN. I thought we would get through by the 28th when I asked that that date be fixed. I want to make it indefinite now. We will report just as soon as we can.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there any objection to the request of the Senator from North Carolina? The Chair hears none. The motion prevails, and the time is extended.

The motion as agreed to was reduced to the form of a resolution (S. Res. 123), as follows:

Resolved, That the time when the Committee on the Judiciary was instructed to report to the Senate under the terms of Senate resolution 92, agreed to on May 29, 1913, be extended.

RAILROADS IN ALASKA.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I ask unanimous consent that the Senate take up for consideration the bill (S. 48) to authorize the President of the United States to locate, construct, and operate railroads in the Territory of Alaska, and for other purposes.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Oregon asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill which he has indicated.

Mr. SMOOT. I am quite sure that the bill can not be passed to-day. I do not like to object, but I shall have to object to its present consideration.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Objection is made.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I ask unanimous consent that a definite time be set for the consideration of the bill by the Senate—one week from to-day. I will say in this connection, Mr. President, that if the Senate will consent to take up the bill providing for the building of railroads in Alaska, whenever the tariff bill comes up, or if the proposed currency measure comes up for consideration, so far as I am concerned I will consent to the laying aside of Senate bill 48.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Inasmuch as the Democratic majority in the House of Representatives have decided officially to take up no general legislation at this session of Congress, I do not see that any great object could be gained by taking it up here. I shall therefore withhold my consent for any arrangement of that kind.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Then I move that the bill be taken up for consideration, notwithstanding the objection, and upon that I ask for the yeas and nays.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Oregon, notwithstanding the objection, moves that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Senate bill No. 48.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I ask for the yeas and nays, Mr. President.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is the request for the yeas and nays seconded by one-fifth of those present? [Putting the question.] The Chair rules that the request is not seconded by one-fifth of the Senators present.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I ask for a division.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. BACON. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to, and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After 1 hour and 5 minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened.

DIFFERENCES BETWEEN RAILWAY COMPANIES AND EMPLOYEES.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 2517) providing for mediation, conciliation, and arbitration in controversies between certain employers and their employees, and in that connection I wish to make a statement.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Nevada?

Mr. GALLINGER. I suggest to the Senator that I should very much like him to make his statement. I assume this is an enlargement of the so-called Erdman Act. Am I correct?

Mr. NEWLANDS. Yes.

Mr. President, the Senate is entirely familiar with the Erdman Act.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Nevada yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. NEWLANDS. I yield.

Mr. SMOOT. I notice from the bound calendar of bills on the desks of Senators that there is no print of the bill. Does the Senator know whether or not the bill has been printed?

Mr. NEWLANDS. The bill is here and will be put on the desks of Senators.

Mr. SMOOT. Was a report made on the bill?

Mr. NEWLANDS. There has been no report except a verbal report which appears in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of June 23, accompanied by a signed statement of 13 members of the Interstate Commerce Committee authorizing a favorable report of the bill.

Mr. OVERMAN. I notice the Senator from Nevada states that this is an extension of the Erdman Act.

Mr. NEWLANDS. It is an extension or an enlargement of the Erdman Act.

Mr. OVERMAN. The Erdman Act has been administered without having a $7,500 officer and a $5,000 officer. Why can we not extend it without having these great offices created with these large salaries?

Mr. NEWLANDS. If the Senator from North Carolina will listen to me for a few moments, I will make a brief statement which, I think, will be satisfactory to him.

Mr. SMOOT. I understand that unanimous consent for the consideration of this bill has not yet been granted, pending the statement of the Senator from Nevada [Mr. NEWLANDS]?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Unanimous consent for the consideration of the bill has not yet been granted.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Mr. President, the Senate is familiar with the Erdman Act and the various proceedings under it with a view to adjusting the differences between railroads and their employees, and the very conspicuous part that Justice Knapp, of the Commerce Court, and Mr. Neill, the Commissioner of Labor, have taken in all these matters of mediation. Their action in this important work of mediation and conciliation has absolutely won the confidence of both the employees and the employers. That act, however, has been found to be unsatisfactory by both parties, and for a long period of time an enlargement and extension of the act has been under consideration by the various brotherhoods connected with the railways, by a committee of railway presidents, consisting of five or six of the presidents of the greatest railway systems of the country, by conspicuous members of the Civic Federation, by Justice Knapp, and by Mr. Neill. The result of their deliberations has been a bill—Senate bill 2517—which I have introduced, and which has received the indorsement of all the railway brotherhoods in the country. The gentlemen forming this committee appeared——

Mr. KERN. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Nevada yield to the Senator from Indiana?

Mr. NEWLANDS. Yes.

Mr. KERN. How long has it been since the final draft of this bill was prepared?

Mr. NEWLANDS. The final draft has been prepared within the last 3 or 4 weeks and was presented to the Interstate Commerce Committee about 10 days ago. It was introduced on June 13, 1913, and was published in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.

Mr. KERN. Do I understand the Senator from Nevada to say that within that time the labor unions of the country have had an opportunity to examine the bill and to give it their approval?

Mr. NEWLANDS. As I understand, the approving action of the railroad brotherhoods was secured before the bill was introduced. The fact is, the bill has been drawn by the committee composed, as I have stated, of the heads of various brotherhoods, five or six of the railway presidents of the most prominent railway systems in the country, whose operations involve the employment, I believe, of 90,000 employees, the committee consisting also of a delegation from the Civic Federation and of Justice Knapp and Mr. Neill, former Commissioner of Labor. This bill embodies their unanimous report, which, as I understand, prior to its being offered as a bill, had the approval of the various railroad brotherhoods.

Mr. KERN. Does the Senator from Nevada intend to ask unanimous consent for the passage of this bill this afternoon?

Mr. NEWLANDS. I do.

Mr. KERN. Without giving to Senators the opportunity to study the bill? It is a very important measure.

Mr. NEWLANDS. I will state, with reference to that, that that is my purpose, and I want to state the condition of urgency which requires such action. We all know——

Mr. KERN. If the Senator will excuse me, as I understand, there is not even a written report accompanying the bill, setting forth either its merits or its demerits.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, may I interrupt the Senator from Nevada a moment?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Nevada yield to the Senator from Iowa?

Mr. NEWLANDS. I do.

Mr. CUMMINS. There are but two changes of any importance in the Erdman Act proposed by the bill introduced by the Senator from Nevada [Mr. NEWLANDS]. The first is enlarging the board of arbitration. The Erdman Act provides for a board of arbitration of three members. That has been found to be impracticably small. Neither the men nor the railroad companies are willing to submit great controversies to a board of arbitration consisting of three men.

Second, the appointment by the President of a distinct official known as a "mediator" instead of employing men already in the service of the Government.

There are other changes, but they are of no consequence whatever. Those are the two provisions intended by this bill to be added to the Erdman Act.

I may say, in supplement to what has already been stated, that this subject has been up for a long time and has been under consideration by those who are immediately concerned in it, namely, the railroads and their employees. The bill has been drawn through the joint efforts of the committees of the interested parties, aided by the present board of mediation, namely, the Chief Justice of the Commerce Court and the former Commissioner of Labor, Dr. Neill.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, will the chairman of the committee yield to me?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Nevada yield to the Senator from Arkansas?

Mr. NEWLANDS. Gladly.

Mr. ROBINSON. In connection with the statement which the Senator from Iowa [Mr. CUMMINS] has made, I call attention to the fact that there is another rather important change in the law proposed by this bill. In addition to enlarging the board of arbitration and creating the two salaried officers referred to, this bill provides that when an award has been made, and a difference arises between the parties as to the construction of the award, the question may be sent back to the board of arbitration to obtain the opinion or construction of the board as to its meaning. That has been considered to be a very important provision in that in the last case of great importance in which the Erdman Act was invoked an award was made, and the two parties to the award, the labor organization and the railroad companies, construed it very differently, and the award has not gone into effect for that reason. One party to the award, the railroad companies, has refused to consent, there being no authority of law for the matter to be referred back to the arbitrators.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Mr. President, I wish to state that there was a full hearing upon this subject by the Interstate Commerce Committee of the Senate, and that members of the Judiciary Committee of the other House, to which committee a similar bill introduced by Mr. CLAYTON, of the House, had been referred, attended those hearings. At those hearings the chiefs of the various railroad brotherhoods, prominent railway presidents, Judge Knapp, and Mr. Neill were fully heard. They all urged the passage of this bill without amendment.

The Secretary of Labor was present at that hearing, and whilst in sympathy with the bill, he objected to that provision which made the board of mediation absolutely independent of the Department of Labor. The representatives of the brotherhoods of the railroads insisted that that was an essential feature; that they desired the board of arbitration appointed by the President to be as independent of any department as is the Interstate Commerce Commission itself, and that, if it were subject to the direction and control of the head of a department, its usefulness would be seriously impaired.

Later on a meeting was held of the Judiciary Committee of the House; Secretary Wilson was further heard, and certain amendments were there presented by him to this bill, not materially altering its character but simply retaining the Chief of the Bureau of Labor and Statistics as a member of the board of mediation, thus maintaining its connection with the Labor Department. That was the most important amendment that he had to offer.

Mr. OVERMAN. That is as it has been.

Mr. NEWLANDS. That is as it has been; and that is where the various federations objected to its being.

Mr. OVERMAN. They want the board of mediation separated entirely from any department of the Government?

Mr. NEWLANDS. They want it to be independent.

Mr. OVERMAN. And the Government to have no control over these officers.

Mr. NEWLANDS. The President appoints them, and can remove them, of course, but the bureau itself is an independent bureau.

Mr. OVERMAN. Is not the purpose of the bill to give somebody a $7,500 office?

Mr. NEWLANDS. I do not think so, Mr. President. My belief is that they are absolutely sincere in the conviction——

Mr. OVERMAN. The man who is to be appointed——

Mr. NEWLANDS. One moment, if the Senator will hear me through. I believe they are sincere in the conviction that the operations of this board of mediation should be absolutely separated from any political department, just as the Interstate Commerce Commission itself is an independent commission not connected with any department. The Senator will realize that if the Interstate Commerce Commission were connected with the Department of Commerce, and its members subject to the direction, possibly, of a political department, its usefulness would be greatly impaired.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, will the Senator from Nevada yield to me for a moment?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Nevada yield to the Senator from Iowa?

Mr. NEWLANDS. Yes.

Mr. CUMMINS. I believe that there is great urgency for the passage of this bill. I hope that in determining whether we will take the bill under consideration we will not float into a debate upon possible amendments to it. What the Senator from Nevada is now saying relates to an amendment that has been suggested outside, but is not in the bill as reported by the committee. If we once get into a debate concerning amendments that may be offered, I fear we will never reach a consideration of the bill itself. Let us postpone them until the bill is taken up for consideration.

Mr. NEWLANDS. I will read a telegram which I have received from Mr. Seth Low, the head of the Civic Federation, regarding this matter. The telegram reads:

NEW YORK, June 26, 1913.

Hon. FRANCIS G. NEWLANDS, Washington, D. C.:

Judge CLAYTON informs me that House caucus unanimously authorized action upon our bill as amended by his committee. In accordance with my understanding with Judge CLAYTON I am telegraphing to ask you to pass Senate bill, as reported by you, without change. If I can bring about perfect accord on House bill, it can be substituted for yours. If not, the two bills will go to conference and the two Houses can choose between them. Please acknowledge in care of National Civic Federation, New York.

SETH LOW.

I wish to say that Mr. Low and certain others appeared before the House committee and agreed to the amendments suggested by Secretary Wilson; but they have not as yet been acted upon by the brotherhoods, and he is engaged now in communicating with them for the purpose of ascertaining their views.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President——

Mr. NEWLANDS. If the Senator will permit me to make my statement without interruption, I think he will be much better satisfied.

Mr. OVERMAN. It is in regard to his statement that I desire to interrupt the Senator. I want to say that I understand the House of Representatives in its caucus has indorsed the bill, with the provision for the appointment of the two officers stricken out. Will not the passage of the measure be hastened if the Senator will let the bill come over here from the House? The House bill is practically the same as that reported by the Senate committee, with the exception of the provision with regard to the two officers; and would it not be better for the House to act first and then let the Senate pass the House bill than to have each body pass a bill and have them cross?

Mr. NEWLANDS. I do not think so, Mr. President. The Senate is now in session, and if it passes this bill as it has been recommended by the federations, it will go to the House. If the House adheres to the amendments suggested by the Judiciary Committee, those amendments will be put on, and then the bill will go to conference.

Now, I wish to state that it is of the highest importance that immediate action should be taken upon this question. We all know that there is the greatest dissatisfaction upon the part of the railway employees of the country on account of the high cost of living, and that for some period they have been agitating for an increase of their wages.

Negotiations have been going on between the railways and the brotherhoods with reference to an increase of wages, and a vote is now being taken by the railway brotherhoods as to whether or not they will strike. The announcement of that vote will be made about the 4th of July.

It seemed to the Interstate Commerce Committee of the highest importance that a contention which would tie up the commerce of the country should be avoided. It seemed to the Interstate Commerce Committee that the course of the railway employees, through their brotherhoods, and of the railway officials, and of Justice Knapp and Mr. Neill and of the Civic Federation, should be commended as in the line of industrial peace, and that whatever suggestions they made with reference to a composition of these difficulties should be approved by congressional action. Certainly nothing whatever that they suggested was in conflict with the public good. They simply desire an independent tribunal, free from any political influence, which will act as a medium of conciliation between the employers and the employees. We thought we ought to accept their suggestion with hospitality, and we unanimously reported their bill to the Senate.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, will the chairman of the committee yield to me for a short statement?

Mr. NEWLANDS. Certainly.

Mr. ROBINSON. Referring to the imminence of a possible strike, the hearings before the committee disclosed the fact that all the railroads east of Chicago, employing approximately 90,000 men, and the employees thereof are involved in a controversy concerning wages, and that committees representing the organizations of employees and the railroads have agreed to disagree; have reached the conclusion that under the circumstances they can not mediate or arbitrate under the Erdman Act; and they have reached a further agreement that they will arbitrate or mediate under this act if it be passed. The proposed bill represents a measure which we are assured by representatives of all of the leading organizations and the leading railroads concerned in this controversy will avert a strike that in all probability will occur unless the bill is passed. This strike will tie up the commerce of the entire eastern part of the United States.

Such are the representations made before the committee at a hearing, at which were represented many of the important railroad systems of the eastern part of the United States and all of the leading organizations of railroad employees. As stated by the chairman of the committee, unless some assurance is given that this bill will speedily pass, a strike probably will be ordered about the 4th of July.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent for the consideration of the bill.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President, I am not sure but that this matter has received attention in my absence. If not, I desire to call the attention of the chairman of the committee to some misprints.

On page 9, in line 12, there are two letters at the end of the word "arbitration" that should not be there I think.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Yes; that should be corrected.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, in the same connection, for the purpose of calling attention to some very bad proof reading at the Government Printing Office, I will suggest that the word "party," in line 8, page 1, should be "partly."

Mr. NEWLANDS. Yes; I see the place to which the Senator refers.

Mr. GALLINGER. Let that be corrected. Then, on page 2, the word "Provided" is improperly spelled, and the proof reader did not discover that.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. What line?

Mr. GALLINGER. Line 17. The letter "i" is left out. I presume there may be other typographical mistakes, which, of course, will not invalidate the bill; but I call attention to these simply for the purpose of suggesting to the Public Printer that he has at least one very incompetent proof reader.

Mr. NEWLANDS. I move that section 1, page 1, line 8, be amended——

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair rules that typographical errors will be corrected without any motion being made.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, I favor the bill, but I am opposed to paying this officer $7,500 per annum when the work will not take all his time. Probably one day he will have nothing to do, and the next day he will be busy. His sole function will be the settlement of these difficulties. I do not see why we should pay an officer $7,500 a year for performing such duties when he can transact other business. If I understand correctly, he will be called upon only to settle these troubles, and yet it is proposed to pay him just as much as a Senator is paid who works here day and night.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Does the Senator wish to amend the bill by inserting a smaller sum in lieu of $7,500?

Mr. OVERMAN. I do. I move to amend——

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from North Carolina yield to the Senator from Ohio?

Mr. OVERMAN. I yield.

Mr. POMERENE. If I may be permitted, I want to suggest that it appeared at the hearings that Mr. Commissioner Neill and Mr. Justice Knapp had had under their supervision during the time they acted as mediators about 60 different cases. Mr. Commissioner Neill's time for a large part of the last year was occupied with two of these controversies, as I remember the testimony.

The thought is that there should be mediation commissioners who should be absolutely independent of the Department of Labor, so that the public and the parties to the controversy might feel that the mediators would be where they could act entirely independently of any influence either for or against either of the parties to the controversy. I feel entirely in sympathy with that proposition.

Mr. OVERMAN. I agree with the Senator; but that does not affect my proposed amendment.

Mr. POMERENE. It does to this extent: This is work of such a character that only men of the highest order of ability and discretion can perform it. Whether the salary is a little too large or a little too small does not concern me one-half so much as to have this legislation in the form in which it was presented by the several parties and to which they agreed. It represents the consensus of opinion of the laboring organizations, the railway organizations, and the Civic Federation.

Mr. OVERMAN. May I ask the Senator whether, if Mr. Neill is appointed to this place, he proposes to continue his employment with Mr. Guggenheim?

Mr. NEWLANDS. Let me say, upon that question, that Mr. Neill announced at the hearing that he would not under any conditions accept this appointment, that the work had been so trying that he would not undertake it another time for double or even treble the salary. Upon the statements made by him and by Justice Knapp, and by all the members of these brotherhoods, with reference to the exacting character of these duties, I was impressed with the very grave character of the service required and the necessity of adequately compensating it.

Mr. OVERMAN. I said that only to illustrate my position.

Mr. ROBINSON. May I ask the Senator from North Carolina a question?

Mr. OVERMAN. Yes.

Mr. ROBINSON. What is the amendment which the Senator proposes? I have not heard it offered yet.

Mr. OVERMAN. I was about to offer it when I was interrupted.

Mr. ROBINSON. I should like to hear it.

Mr. OVERMAN. I wish to state the reason why I asked the question. I did not apply it especially to Mr. Neill, but only as an illustration.

Mr. Neill acted under the Erdman Act for $10 a day when he had 60 cases, and ran the Bureau of Labor at the same time. Judge Knapp received a salary as judge of the Commerce Court, and he acted at the same time under the Erdman Act. I know, and Senators know, that this work is not going to take all the time of any man. Probably it might occupy him two or three times a year or half a dozen times or even sixty times a year, but he could carry on other business.

In answer to the Senator from Ohio, I will say that I think a salary of $5,000 is sufficient, and any good man will take the appointment at that figure, because he can transact other business at the same time. I think it is paying too much in comparison with what other men are getting from the Government. Senators work all the time during the entire year and they get only $7,500, and here it is proposed to pay a man $7,500 who will not have to work half his time.

Mr. ROBINSON. Will the Senator yield to me for a brief statement?

Mr. OVERMAN. Yes, sir.

Mr. ROBINSON. The record discloses that after the Erdman Act was passed in 1898 it was not availed of until 1906. During the less than seven years that have passed since that time there have been 60 cases, some of them of the very greatest importance.

Mr. OVERMAN. Sixty cases in seven years!

Mr. ROBINSON. But the Senator from North Carolina must bear in mind the fact that these cases have involved the very greatest of complications——

Mr. OVERMAN. Why, of course.

Mr. ROBINSON. And, in some instance at least, the work has required successive days and weeks and even months of negotiation.

Mr. OVERMAN. Yes.

Mr. ROBINSON. The labor is a very arduous one, in the very nature of things. There must be confidence reposed in the mediators on the part of both the employers and the employees, and it does seem to me that if an office is to be created at all, a salary of $7,500 is a reasonable one.

If the Senator from North Carolina will pardon me for a further statement, I think it quite probable, or at least possible, that this provision will go out of the bill before it finally becomes a law. We are in this situation: The bill as presented here represents an agreement between committees from the railroads and from their employees. As can be easily understood by every one familiar with the conditions, there is always a degree of suspicion upon the part of both parties to such controversies that the other party is trying to secure the advantage. The necessity for passing this bill in its present form lies in the fact that it will be of no value whatever unless it is acceptable to both the railroads and their employees. It might be said that this amendment would not make it objectionable; but, singularly, it was disclosed during the hearings that a change in the number of arbitrators agreed on, the number being six, would make it absolutely objectionable.

Mr. OVERMAN. That would be a material change.

Mr. ROBINSON. Yes.

Mr. OVERMAN. This is only a matter of detail.

Mr. ROBINSON. But if the Senator will pardon me, in view of the fact that negotiations are now being conducted between the representatives of the Civic Federation, the railroads, and their employees, with a view to eliminating entirely this feature of the bill, if it can be done without in their judgment impairing the usefulness of the measure and thus not imposing any additional expense on the Government, it seems to me it is of the greatest importance that we should not spend much time here in considering whether the salary should be $5,000 or $7,500. The importance of these duties has increased every year, and will continue to increase in the future. I submit to this body that if, as a result of its deliberations, a tribunal can be created with a reasonable certainty of averting the now pending and threatened strike, the importance of the results that will be thus accomplished will minimize into insignificance the question of a salary of $7,500 or of $5,000, to say nothing of what it means for the future.

Mr. OVERMAN. I know it means a great deal, and I am in favor of the bill in its principles and everything about it, except that I do not want to pay a man $7,500 a year to settle 60 cases in seven years. I think it is too much money; and, representing the taxpayers of the country, I move to amend by striking out "$7,500" and inserting "$5,000."

Mr. KERN. Mr. President, I hope the amendment offered by the Senator from North Carolina will not prevail. I think it would be far preferable to have a salary of $10,000 rather than to reduce the proposed salary to $5,000.

The responsibility resting upon the incumbent of the position is of the highest order. It is of the highest importance that the decisions of such a man should command instant respect on the part of both parties to the controversy. The duty is not confined merely to sitting at a judge's desk and hearing evidence now and then. It will be necessary to find a man who is familiar with the general situation, in the first place, and who, in addition to this, is of such mental training and ability that he will be able to comprehend the subject matter in controversy and to do justice between the parties, and who is of such high character and exalted reputation that his decision will command instant respect. He must take time to familiarize himself with the entire economic situation in the country.

This bill, as I understand it, calls for the services of a high-grade man. I hope the President will not be required to look out into the field for a high-grade man for whom a low-grade salary has been provided.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President, as a member of the committee which considered the bill and reported it, I hope the amendment offered by the Senator from North Carolina will not prevail.

In addition to the well-founded arguments that have been already presented justifying this amount of salary, I think Senators should bear in mind the fact that the work of the commissioner of mediation and conciliation is almost emergency work. In addition to requiring a man who is beyond any suspicion whatever and is an absolutely impartial judge, the duties of the office almost necessarily require that he shall not be engaged in any other business. An emergency suddenly arises, and the commissioner, as one of the members of this tribunal, may have to depart suddenly, upon receipt of a telegram at midnight, for any part of this country, and he may have to remain for weeks upon the ground where the seat of the trouble is.

It seems to me that if it is the purpose of the bill to create a tribunal which will command the confidence of both employers and employees in the railroad service all over this great country, the duties of the office necessarily preventing the commissioner engaging, steadily at least, in any other kind of business, $7,500 a year is little enough to pay for a man who must maintain some seclusion, some such judicial attitude as a judge maintains.

Mr. OVERMAN. May I ask the Senator a question?

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Certainly.

Mr. OVERMAN. Judge Knapp presided over the Commerce Court and tried all his cases, and he was able to go and attend to these matters, and he was willing to go for a compensation of $10 a day.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President, if I may interrupt the Senator——

Mr. OVERMAN. Are there any more duties than mere arbitration? Are there any more duties devolved upon him than those under the Erdman Act?

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I will state what I think the situation would be. The testimony before the committee was that both Mr. Neill and Judge Knapp had been taken away for long periods of time from the duties which they ought to have been performing here, and in order to perform these duties they had abandoned their other duties and had to work nights and Sundays for weeks to get up with the duties of their offices here.

The testimony was also that in some of these arbitrations it had been two months before the award had been filed. It seems to me that to take a man from Washington to the Pacific coast and make him stay there two or three months, and in the meantime have his service demanded in another section of the country, perhaps as soon as he has returned, and to keep himself posted and equipped by the necessary study and familiarizing himself with all the phases of these difficulties, $7,500 a year is not excessive in these times, in the way that first-class men should be paid, as compensation for this office.

If there is adequate necessity for the creation of this board at all, I think a reasonable salary should be paid, salary enough to warrant a man in leaving a respectable employment in the capital of the Nation, and salary enough to insure his adequate support from this office, and not make it necessary for him to seek other means of maintaining himself and his family.

I hope the amendment will not prevail.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Mr. President, as a member of the committee, observing the zeal and almost the enthusiasm with which both sides of the great question of employer and employee spoke for this bill and the offices created under it, looking toward the mediation of questions that might arise between them, committing themselves as they did to this method of settling their difficulties, the thought occurred to me then, and it has impressed me more since, that where such stupendous issues are at stake, involving as they do the very commerce of the country, organized now on the part of labor with, of course, organization on the part of capital, if we may put it in that form, the cheapest possible investment, in my opinion, that the United States can make is to pay $7,500 for that combination of brain and character which will not only invite but will retain the confidence of both parties and bring about from time to time a settlement of questions that would otherwise cost millions of dollars and hundreds of lives from an antagonism between two forces that the Government has used every means within its power in a legitimate way to reconcile.

To my mind it was a hopeful sign when the parties representing the two great elements of our industrial life on one common ground devised means which, in their judgment, will meet and obviate the terrible conditions that have existed heretofore. They recommended upon their own initiative a salary of $7,500 for a man who they hope will sit as the great mediator between the contending forces. For us to get a man who is not worth that amount would be worse than to get none at all. It would be a disaster to both parties if we were to attempt to get a cheap man, a man who could not comprehend the equity involved in any case that might come before him. As has been suggested by the Senator who has just taken his seat, it will necessitate that the man should familiarize himself with the conditions that exist.

Mr. OVERMAN. May I ask the Senator a question?

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Certainly.

Mr. OVERMAN. We have had two good men heretofore, have we not?

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. As has been suggested, their duties were divided.

Mr. OVERMAN. They were paid $10 a day when doing the work.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. I understand that, Mr. President, but that does not enter into this question. It is a distinct function that is now proposed to be created for one of the most delicate positions that a man can possibly be placed in. If these parties should be so unfortunate as to get a man who by mental and moral capacity is unfit to discharge the duties the office would naturally impose upon him, he would be a dear man at any expenditure, and if we get one who will adequately fill the place he would be a cheap man even at a fabulous salary.

In view of that fact and in view of the delicate relations, distinct from almost any other that we could possibly form here, I, for one, as a member of the committee, shall vote for the salaries as they are now set forth in the bill.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, I do not quite understand the question just put to the Senator from South Carolina by the Senator from North Carolina. One of the mediators under the act as it is now is the former chairman of the Interstate Commerce Commission, now justice of the Commerce Court. Does the Senator from North Carolina understand that he received but $10 per day?

Mr. OVERMAN. I understood that while he was receiving $7,500, I believe it is, or $6,500, as judge of the Commerce Court, he was appointed to act under the Erdman Act as a mediator, and when he was on that business he was allowed $10 a day while he was serving the country as a judge, and as a judge he received a salary of $7,500.

Mr. CUMMINS. But he received his salary as a member of the Interstate Commerce Commission throughout the year, and he received whatever was received under the Erdman Act in addition.

Mr. OVERMAN. Ten dollars a day.

Mr. CUMMINS. So the Senator's conclusion that a fit man could be secured for $10 a day——

Mr. OVERMAN. Not at all.

Mr. CUMMINS. Is hardly warranted by the facts.

Mr. OVERMAN. No; I said that these gentlemen—Judge Knapp and Mr. Neill—received their salaries and did this extra work for $10 a day. You may get an inferior man for $100,000 a year and you may get a good man for $5,000 a year. The point I was making is that a man undertaking this work would not be compelled to devote all his time to this particular work, because probably one of these strikes would not occur in three months or six months or a year, and in case no strikes should occur in the year he would get $7,500 for doing nothing.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, I understand now what the Senator from North Carolina meant. Personally I am very much in favor of the appointment of a distinct mediator who fills that office and no other, and I have confidence enough in the President of the United States to believe that he will select a man who will perform not only with great fidelity but with high competency the very difficult duties of this place.

Hitherto the Erdman Act has been an experiment. It was an experiment when the chairman of the Interstate Commerce Commission and the Commissioner of Labor were designated as mediators. It has happened that those two men, who were originally selected for other duties, have rendered an invaluable service to the people of this country in mediating between the employer on the one hand and the employees upon the other.

Personally I believe the work which those men have done for the people of the United States is more valuable in conserving peace as well as property than the work of any other men in the same time under our institutions. Now, those men are passing out, and it will become necessary, if the bill is passed in its present form, for the President to select another man and an assistant as well, because the bill provides for an assistant at $5,000 a year, who will endeavor to carry on the very honorable as well as valuable service which those men have rendered.

I think the selection of that man will call on the part of the President of the United States for a keener insight into human nature than he has ever been compelled to exercise in the work that he has hitherto done. He must select, first, a man who has the respect of the railways of the country and who has the respect of the railway men of the country—a man in whom both sides in this mighty controversy that is going on continually have confidence, because without complete respect and without absolute confidence their service will be of no consequence whatever. I do not believe that you can find such a man who would be willing to leave whatever employment he may now have and enter this service, with all its vexations, with all its hardships, with all its opportunities to be misunderstood, for $5,000. I think it would be disparaging the man, to begin with, to ask him to render this service for $5,000 per year.

Mr. OVERMAN. I agree that we ought to have a first-class man—such a man as the Senator describes. I hope the President will get him. But I see that the bill makes the term seven years. It is a fixed term for seven years. Suppose you get one who was not that kind of a man. You have him for seven years. What are you going to do about it?

Mr. CUMMINS. He is removable.

Mr. OVERMAN. The President might remove him for misconduct; but suppose he is guilty of no misconduct, yet he is not the kind of a man to conform to the Senator's idea.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, that is one of the hazards which we all must incur in a Government like ours. That is true of every judicial appointment as well. The appointing power may make a mistake.

Mr. OVERMAN. But the idea I want to bring out is why the term is made seven years instead of four, the ordinary term.

Mr. CUMMINS. I am not responsible for that, Mr. President, and I would have no great objection on my part to a shorter term of office. However, my fear of a mistake is not so great as to induce me to change the term, although I would not oppose it.

But I do want the Senate to reflect seriously before it undertakes to secure a man who will be worthy of the confidence that I have attempted to describe for a salary of $5,000. We will not be apt to secure him.

I agree with the Senator from Indiana [Mr. KERN] that the salary ought to be $10,000 per year, rather than $7,500 per year. If the President is able, as I hope he will be able, to select the right man for the place, he will earn for the people of this country his salary a hundred times over every year. I have no doubt that the mediation which has been carried forward by Judge Knapp and by Dr. Neill, followed by the arbitrations which sometimes ensue, have saved to the people of this country millions and millions of dollars.

Our difficulty, as stated by the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON], is that we are confronting one, if not two, of the most momentous strikes the country has ever seen. We can not secure arbitration between the railway companies and the men, because at least the railway companies are not willing to submit their cause to a board of three men. Both sides have agreed that if not the board of mediation but the board of arbitrators can be increased to six or nine men, then they will submit the questions in controversy to the board and abide by the award, whatever it may be. That fact constitutes the urgency of this measure.

But after all, the arbitration which may follow is not more important than the mediation which precedes the arbitration and very often settles the controversy. Let us therefore give the President the range at least in selecting a man that this fairly adequate salary will give him. Let us not confine him in the selection to men who are willing to labor for the public for $5,000 per year. I feel confident that if we enlarge the field in which he may make his selection we will be abundantly compensated for it in the outcome of our work.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, I am in favor of this bill as it is written, and though in some respects I would prefer to see a change I will not vote to change a single word in it, and for the reason I shall state.

It appeared before the committee that the railway companies, through their presidents and representatives, and the railway men's organizations, through their chiefs, said that this bill represented months of work; that while there were slight differences of opinion they all agreed to accept it as a solution of the problem. A number of the witnesses, when interrogated before the committee, said, in substance, that if the bill was passed as it was written they did not believe there would be a single railroad or a single organization that would refuse to accept the plan of settlement here adopted.

It stands to reason that when they come before the Congress asking that this plan be incorporated into a statute no one of these parties would be in a position where he could honorably say, "I will not accept the plan of mediation or of arbitration which is therein contained."

My friend from North Carolina [Mr. OVERMAN] raises the suggestion that if we get an undesirable man we can remove him only for cause. That, perhaps, is true, but if he becomes so objectionable that these parties will not use him the remedy lies with Congress to repeal the law or to refuse to vote the necessary funds with which to carry on the work of the department.

For this reason and because of the imminency of the situation that is before us, I hope there will not be a single objection raised to any provision in the bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. OVERMAN].

The amendment was rejected.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. NEWLANDS. With reference to the bill just passed, I should like to state that it is important that it should go to the House to-morrow morning.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I desire to suggest that the Secretary correct an error in spelling in the bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary has been directed to correct errors in spelling and other clerical errors.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I desire to call the Secretary's attention to an error that has not yet been noticed. The word "absence," on page 14, line 5, is misspelled and ought to be corrected.

Mr. GALLINGER. There is also a semicolon after the word "years," in line 17, page 13, which ought to come out.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The corrections will be made.

ASSIGNMENT OF DISTRICT JUDGES.

Mr. O'GORMAN. Mr. President, a few days since the Senate by unanimous consent considered and passed Senate bill 2254, which provides for the relief of certain Federal courts throughout the country. The senior Senator from Arkansas [Mr. CLARKE] immediately after the passage of the bill gave notice of a motion to reconsider. At his suggestion I shall consent to the insertion of the words "as to the trial of causes" after the word "powers," in the second line of the second page. The notice to reconsider the votes by which the bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed having been entered, I make that motion.

The motion to reconsider was agreed to, and the Senate resumed the consideration of the bill.

Mr. O'GORMAN. I offer the amendment to insert the words "as to the trial of causes" after the word "powers," in line 2, page 2.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 2, line 2, after the word "powers," it is proposed to insert "as to the trial of causes."

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from New York [Mr. O'GORMAN].

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I inquire of the Senator from New York what will be the effect of that amendment?

Mr. O'GORMAN. It proposes to confine the work of the judge who may be assigned from one district to another solely to the trial of causes. That is all we require. The Senator from Arkansas [Mr. CLARKE] had some objection to judges from other districts coming in and granting ex parte injunctions and appointing receivers. The only relief which is actually sought is the aid of judges from other districts to dispatch and dispose of pending litigation.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Would the amendment prevent the judge temporarily assigned to the district from passing upon a demurrer, for example?

Mr. O'GORMAN. Not if it should arise in the trial of a cause. Such judge is vested with all the power possessed by a resident judge in the trial of a cause.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. The Senator, as I understand, says that the amendment simply limits the power of the judge so designated to the trial.

Mr. O'GORMAN. Yes.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I would have some doubt about a judge having power under such a provision to dispose of any preliminary matter such as a demurrer.

Mr. CUMMINS. Such a judge certainly ought to have the power to make up the issue. He ought to have the power to hear a motion that may arise on the pleadings.

Mr. O'GORMAN. The issues are framed by the pleadings, and the only purpose of this legislation is to secure the aid of judges from other districts to go into districts where there may be an accumulation of business to aid in the trial of causes.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Mr. President, I dislike to interfere with the passage of this bill, because I consider it a very important and a very necessary measure, but I think there is under the amendment proposed some danger of limiting the power of such a judge too much. We certainly do not want to provide by law that the judge can do nothing but try the case when it may be quite necessary before the trial is entered upon to dispose of preliminary matters. It might, at any rate, raise some grave question as to the power of the judge.

Mr. O'GORMAN. The language, as I view it, is free from any doubt. We only need, particularly in the city of New York at this time, judges from other districts to try causes. The local judges can attend to the ordinary preliminary applications.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President, if the Senator will yield to me, has he considered the question whether a judge under such circumstances would have the power, after the trial term was over, to sign a bill of exceptions? That is a very important matter. Would a judge from another district, coming there under the provisions of the pending bill to try a case, have a right after the trial to sign a bill of exceptions?

Mr. O'GORMAN. The fact is that the amendment suggested was the only one insisted upon by the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. CLARKE], although in the last paragraph of the bill there is a provision that a judge so assigned shall possess all the powers ordinarily conferred upon a resident judge.

Mr. NELSON. Is the Senator clear that he would have a right to sign a bill of exceptions?

Mr. O'GORMAN. Under that provision, yes. Perhaps, if the Secretary will read the bill, the objection may be found to be groundless.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Before that is done let me make the further suggestion, in view of what the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. NELSON] has suggested, as to whether or not the judge would have the power to pass upon a motion for a new trial. The Senator from New York understands how important it is that the judge who tries the case should pass upon the motion for a new trial, if one is made.

Mr. O'GORMAN. Yes.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Will we, by the language the Senator proposes to insert, so limit his power that he can not do that?

Mr. O'GORMAN. Whatever limitation is imposed upon the functions of the judge by the amendment suggested by the Senator from Arkansas is, in my judgment, absolutely neutralized by the last paragraph of the bill; and if Senators will allow the Secretary to read I think they will agree with me as to that. I ask that the Secretary read the bill, Mr. President.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read as requested.

The Secretary read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That chapter 1, section 18, of the Judicial Code be amended by adding thereto the following:

"Whenever it shall be certified by any senior circuit judge of any circuit, or, in his absence, by the circuit justice of the circuit in which the district lies, that on account of the accumulation or urgency of business in any district court in said circuit it is impracticable to designate and appoint a sufficient number of district judges of other districts within the circuit to relieve such accumulation or urgency of business, the Chief Justice may, if in his judgment the public interests so require, designate and appoint the judge of any district court in another circuit to hold a district court, and to have and exercise within the district to which he is so assigned the same powers that are vested in the judge thereof: Provided, That such judge so designated and appointed shall have consented in writing to such designation and appointment: And provided further, That the senior circuit judge of the circuit within which such judge so designated and appointed resides shall certify, in writing, that the business of the district of such judge will not suffer thereby. Such appointment shall be filed in the clerk's office and entered on the minutes of the said district court, and a certified copy thereof, under the seal of the court, shall be transmitted by the clerk to the judge so designated and appointed. Each of the said district judges may, in the case of such appointment, hold separately, at the same time, a district court in such district, and discharge all of the judicial duties of the district judges therein."

The VICE PRESIDENT. The proposed amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. The proposed amendment of the Committee on the Judiciary is, on page 2, line 2, after the word "powers," to insert "as to the trial of causes," so as to read:

The Chief Justice may, if in his judgment the public interests so require, designate and appoint the judge of any district court in another circuit to hold a district court, and to have and exercise within the district to which he is so assigned the same powers as to the trial of causes that are vested in the judge thereof.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment of the committee.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President——

Mr. O'GORMAN. If there is any defect, it can be cured in conference.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I desire to ask the Senator from New York if there would be any damage done by delaying this matter until the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. CLARKE] can be present?

Mr. O'GORMAN. No.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I myself think if the amendment be adopted it will be a serious limitation upon the power of the judge who is sent to take the place of the local judge. The amendment would simply give him such power as the local judge has in the trial of a cause and no power to rule upon possible amendments to the pleadings or on a motion to set aside the judgment or a motion for a new trial or any of the many interlocutory or subsequent motions which might arise. While I am not prepared to vote against the bill now, and should not do so, unless there is immediate necessity for its passage, I should prefer to have the Senator from Arkansas explain what he thinks the effect of the amendment will be.

Mr. O'GORMAN. I have no objection to the bill going over for the present.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will go over.

HOUR OF MEETING TO-MORROW.

Mr. KERN. I move that when the Senate adjourns to-day it adjourn until to-morrow at 2 o'clock in the afternoon.

The motion was agreed to.

EXPORTATION OF ARMS.

Mr. FALL. Mr. President, I desire to give notice that immediately after the morning business at the next session of the Senate I shall address the Senate on the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 43) to repeal the joint resolution of March 14, 1912, authorizing the President to prohibit the exportation of arms, and so forth. I give this notice subject to the consideration of the conference report on the Indian appropriation bill, not wishing to interfere with it.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. I move that the Senate adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 5 o'clock and 30 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Friday, June 27, 1913, at 2 o'clock p. m.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

THURSDAY, June 26, 1913.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Father in heaven, we come to Thee with open hearts, praying that Thy spirit may enter in and abide with us, that we may be in harmony with Thee as we journey on toward the goal for which we all long in our better moments; a life so pure, so noble, so generous, so godlike, that the angels round the throne may join in the everlasting chorus, "Rejoice, for the Lord brings back His own." For Thine is the kingdom and the power and the glory forever. Amen.

THE JOURNAL.

The Journal of the proceedings of Tuesday, June 24, 1913, was read.

The SPEAKER. If there be no objection, the Journal will be considered as approved.

Mr. MANN. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, I notice that in the Journal it is recited that—

> Under clause 2 of Rule XIII, bills and resolutions were severally reported from committees, delivered to the Clerk, and referred to the several calendars therein named, as follows.

Then it recites the two privileged bills reported by the gentleman from New York [Mr. HARRISON] Tuesday on the floor.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII, only those bills are reported which are not privileged and not entitled to be reported from the floor.

The SPEAKER. What is the clause under which they ought to have been reported? Is it clause 56——

Mr. MANN. Clause 56 of Rule XI, I believe. Those bills were reported on the floor as privileged bills.

The SPEAKER. Yes.

Mr. MANN. They do not belong under clause 2 of Rule XIII.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman is entirely correct.

Mr. MANN. I call attention to it, as the Clerk probably did not know, so that hereafter he may leave it out of the RECORD in that place where it does not belong, and not put it in the Journal.

The SPEAKER. The correction suggested by the gentleman from Illinois will be made, and as corrected, if there be no objection, the Journal will stand approved.

There was no objection.

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES.

A message, in writing, from the President of the United States was communicated to the House of Representatives by Mr. Latta, one of his secretaries.

INDIAN APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I desire to present a conference report on the Indian appropriation bill, H. R. 1917, and ask that it be printed under the rule.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman presents a conference report for printing under the rule. The Clerk will report the title.

The Clerk read the title of the bill (H. R. 1917) making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Bureau of Indian Affairs, for fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes, and for other purposes, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1914.

The conference report and statement of the managers on the part of the House are as follows:

CONFERENCE REPORT (NO. 28).

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 1917) making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Bureau of Indian Affairs, for fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes, and for other purposes, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1914, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses, as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendments numbered 5, 8, 13, 14, 16, 17, 19, 20, 22, 23, 24, 26, 30, 31, 38, 40, 41, 45, 46, and 50.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 1, 2, 3, 4, 6, 7, 9, 12, 15, 18, 27, 32, 34, 37, 39, 42, 43, 44, 47, 48, 49, 52, and 54, and agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 10: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 10, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the amendment proposed insert the following:

"Provided, That hereafter upon the determination of the heirs of a deceased Indian by the Secretary of the Interior there shall be paid by such heirs or from the estate of such deceased Indian or deducted from the proceeds from the sale of the land of the deceased allottee or from any trust funds belonging to the estate of the decedent, the sum of $15, to cover the cost of determining the heirs to the estate of the said deceased allottee, which amount shall be accounted for and paid into the Treasury of the United States and a report made annually to Congress by the Secretary of the Interior on or before the first Monday in December of all moneys collected and deposited as herein directed"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 11: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 11, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In line 1 of the proposed amendment, strike out the word "thorough"; and in lines 36 and 37 of the amendment, strike out the words "at the second session of" and insert the word "during"; and in line 43 of the proposed amendment, strike out "$50,000" and insert "$25,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 11½: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 11½, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In line 3 of the proposed amendment, after the word "complete," insert the word "separate"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 11¾: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 11¾, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In line 15 of page 4 of the proposed amendment strike out the words "Sec. 2" at the beginning of the line; and in line 17 of page 4 of the proposed amendment strike out the words "Sec. 3" at the beginning of the line; and in line 1 of page 5 of the proposed amendment strike out the words "Sec. 4" at the beginning of the line; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 21: That the House recede from its disagreement of the amendment of the Senate numbered 21, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$325,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 25: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 25, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In line 1 of the proposed amendment strike out the words "the balance" and insert "$50,000," and in lines 3, 4, and 5 of the proposed amendment strike out the words "or which shall hereafter be deposited to their credit, including the proceeds from the sale of surplus lands"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 28: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 28, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the amendment proposed insert the following:

"SEC. 13. For support and education of 400 Indian pupils at the Indian school at Albuquerque, N. Mex., and for pay of superintendent, $68,600; for general repairs and improvements, $5,000; new buildings, $15,000; in all, $88,600."

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 29: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 29, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the amendment proposed insert the following: "For support and education of 300 Indian pupils at the Indian school at Santa Fe, N. Mex., and for pay of superintendent, $51,900; for general repairs and improvements, $6,000; for water supply, $1,600; for girls' dormitory, $18,000; in all, $77,500"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 33: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 33, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the amendment proposed insert the following: "For support and education of 200 Indian pupils at the Indian school, Wahpeton, N. Dak., and pay of superintendent, $35,200; for general repairs and improvements, $5,000; for addition to barn, $2,500; for dairy cows, $1,000; in all, $43,700"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 35: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 35, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In line 9 of the proposed amendment strike out the word "five" and insert "four" in lieu thereof; and in line 17 of the amendment strike out the period and insert a colon and the following: "Provided further, That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized in his discretion to grant to settlers a preference right to purchase for 90 days from and after notice, at the appraised price, exclusive of improvements, such lands as were occupied by such settlers in good faith on January 1, 1913"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 36: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 36, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed to be stricken out by the amendment of the Senate insert the following: "That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized in his discretion to extend each of the deferred payments on the town lots of the north addition to the city of Lawton, Okla., one year from the date on which they become due under existing law: Provided, That no additional extension shall be granted: And provided further, That no title shall issue to any such purchaser until all deferred payments, interest, and taxes have been made as provided in the act of March 27, 1908 (35 Stat., p. 49), and the act of February 18, 1909 (35 Stat., p. 637)"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 51: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 51, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the proposed amendment of the Senate, insert the following: "A commission consisting of two members of the Senate Committee on Indian Affairs, to be appointed by the chairman of said committee, and two Members of the House of Representatives, to be appointed by the Speaker, is hereby created for the purpose of investigating the necessity and feasibility of establishing, equipping, and maintaining a tuberculosis sanitarium in New Mexico for the treatment of tuberculous Indians, and to also investigate the necessity and feasibility of procuring impounded waters for the Yakima Indian Reservation or the construction of an irrigation system upon said reservation, to impound the waters of the Yakima River, Wash., for the reclamation of the lands on said reservation and for the use and benefit of the Indians of said reservation. That said commission shall have full power to make the investigations herein provided for, and shall have authority to subpœna and compel the attendance of witnesses, administer oaths, take testimony, incur expenses, employ clerical help, and do and perform all acts necessary to make a thorough and complete investigation of the subjects herein mentioned, and that said commission shall report to Congress on or before January 1, 1914: Provided, That one-half of all necessary expenses incident to and in connection with the making of the investigation herein provided for, including traveling expenses of the members of the commission, shall be paid from the contingent fund of the House of Representatives and one-half from the contingent fund of the Senate on vouchers therefor signed by the chairman of the said commission, who shall be designated by the members of the said commission"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 53: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 53, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In line 3 of the proposed amendment insert the word "actually" after the word "land," and strike out "$400" in line 7 of the amendment and insert "$250" in lieu thereof, so as to read as follows:

"That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized to purchase for the Skagit Tribe of Indians in the State of Washington the tract of land actually used by them as a tribal burial ground, and there is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $250, or so much thereof as may be necessary, to carry out this provision."

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 55: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 55, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the amendment proposed insert the following:

"SEC. 26. On or before the 1st day of July, 1914, the Secretary of the Interior shall cause a system of bookkeeping to be installed in the Bureau of Indian Affairs, which will afford a ready analysis of expenditures by appropriations and allotments and by units of the service, showing for each class of work or activity carried on, the expenditures for the operation of the service, for repairs and preservation of property, for new and additional property, salaries and wages of employees, and for other expenditures. Provision shall be made by the Secretary of the Interior for further analysis of each of the foregoing classes of expenditures if, in his judgment, he shall deem it advisable.

"Annually, after July 1, 1914, a detailed statement of expenditures as hereinbefore described, shall be incorporated in the annual report of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs and transmitted by the Secretary of the Interior to Congress on or before the first Monday in December.

"Before any appropriation for the Indian Service is obligated or expended, the Secretary of the Interior shall make allotments thereof in conformity with the intent and purposes of this act, and such allotments shall not be altered or modified except with his approval.

"After July 1, 1914, the estimates for appropriations for the Indian service submitted by the Secretary of the Interior, shall be accompanied by a detailed statement, classified in the manner prescribed in the first paragraph of this section showing the purposes for which the appropriations are required."

And the Senate agree to the same.

STATEMENT.

The department estimates for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1914, amounted to $11,303,316.53.

The bill as it passed the House carried appropriations as follows:

Gratuity	$7,196,869.98
Reimbursable	1,588,700.00
Treaty	625,560.00
Trust funds	454,000.00
Total	9,865,129.98

The bill as it passed the Senate carried appropriations as follows:

Gratuity	$7,738,272.17
Reimbursable	2,961,900.00
Treaty	625,560.00
Trust funds	464,500.00
Total	11,790,232.17

The bill as agreed upon in conference carries appropriations as follows:

Gratuity	$7,242,559.67
Reimbursable	1,618,709.00
Treaty	625,560.00
Trust funds	562,575.07
Total	10,049,394.74

This is a reduction of $1,740,837.43 over the bill as it passed the Senate and an increase of $184,264.76 over the bill as passed by the House.

The Senate conferees have receded on the following amendments: 5, 8, 13, 14, 16, 17, 19, 20, 22, 23, 24, 26, 30, 31, 38, 40, 41, 45, 46, 50.

The House conferees have receded unqualifiedly on the following amendments: 1, 2, 3, 4, 6, 7, 9, 11¾, 12, 15, 18, 27, 32, 34, 37, 39, 42, 43, 44, 47, 48, 49, 52, 54.

The effect of the recession of the House conferees on the amendments on which they have unqualifiedly receded is as follows:

No. 1. Is a decrease of $20,000 in said appropriation and which will not be needed on account of amendment 2.

No. 2. Is a proviso that none of said appropriation shall be used for allotment work in New Mexico and Arizona.

No. 3. The words "and peyote" are stricken out for the reason that the Indians claim this peyote is used in their religious worship and would cause a great deal of contention.

No. 4. Is an increase of $25,000 for the suppression of liquor among Indians, and from statements made it was badly needed.

No. 6. The provision covered by this amendment was in the wrong place in the paragraph and is changed to proper one by amendment 7.

No. 7. Merely places the proviso, as indicated by amendment 6, at the proper place in the paragraph.

No. 9. Is only to correct the phraseology.

No. 12. Changes the phraseology.

No. 15. Is for the completion and repair of a road in the Hoopa Valley Indian Reservation, Cal., and which has heretofore been appropriated for.

No. 18. Does not carry an appropriation, but provides that any Indian allottee on the Fond du Lac Reservation in Minnesota who has not received 80 acres of land as an allotment may now take additional acreage to amount to said 80 acres.

No. 27. Is to correct the totals.

No. 32. Does not carry any additional appropriation, but provides that said attorney shall be designated by the Secretary of the Interior.

No. 34. Is a much needed appropriation to ascertain if the lands embraced in Sullys Hill Park, N. Dak., contain valuable minerals.

No. 37. That the Apache prisoners of war who were recently released from the Fort Sill Military Reservation, Okla., and who elected to stay in Oklahoma, and an appropriation heretofore made to purchase deceased Indian allotments in Oklahoma for them, may be allotted their land so purchased.

No. 39. Is an appropriation of $10,000 for the purpose of completing the appraisement and classification of the coal and asphalt lands of the Choctaw and Chickasaw Nations in Oklahoma, so that the surface may be sold.

No. 42. Is for the purpose of setting aside four sections of land belonging to the Choctaw and Chickasaw Nations and to be used for sanatorium purposes for the benefit of said tribes.

No. 43. Provides that no contract made with any Indian, where such contract relates to tribal funds or property in the hands of the United States, shall be valid for payment for services rendered in relation thereto unless the consent of the United States shall be previously given.

No. 44. Appropriates $500 out of the tribal funds of the Choctaw Nation for the purpose of erecting a monument to the memory of Green McCurtain, late deceased chief of the Choctaw Nation, and appropriated at request of said nation.

No. 47. To reimburse Eugene H. Baldwin for traveling expenses incurred by him under instructions of the Indian Office in returning to his home.

No. 48. Strikes out a $50,000 appropriation for irrigation.

No. 49. Does not carry additional appropriation, but provides for additional 50 pupils at the Cushman Indian School in Washington.

No. 52. Provides for reimbursement to the Colville Indians for certain lands.

No. 54. To withhold the sale of the timber on the Bad River Reservation in Wisconsin.

On the following amendments the House conferees receded with modifying or substitute amendments, to wit:

No. 10. Requires that an amount not to exceed $15 may be charged against the estate of a deceased Indian for the purposes of defraying expenses to determine the rightful heirs.

No. 11. Provides for the appointment of a joint commission to be composed of three Members of the Senate and three Members of the House of Representatives, to investigate and recommend changes in the administration of Indian affairs.

No. 11½. To enable the Secretary of the Interior to employ an expert accountant for the purpose of preparing a complete separate fiscal and financial history of each of the Five Civilized Tribes.

No. 11¾. Is for the purpose of making an exchange of lands in Colorado and now owned by the Indians for lieu lands so that some historic grounds may be perpetuated or created into a park and in accordance with a treaty heretofore made.

No. 21. Is a much needed increase for continuing the construction of the irrigation system on the allotted lands of the Indians on the Flathead Reservation in Montana.

No. 25. Appropriates $50,000 out of the tribal funds now on deposit in the Treasury to the credit of the Blackfeet Tribe of Indians in Montana to be used for the promotion of civilization and self-support among said Indians.

No. 28. An increase of attendance from 300 to 400 pupils at the Indian school in Albuquerque, N. Mex., and an increase of $2,000 for much needed improvements in caring for said increase of pupils.

No. 29. An increase of $2,000 for much needed improvements at Sante Fe (N. Mex.) Indian School.

No. 33. Provides for increase of attendance and care of said pupils at Wahpeton (N. Dak.) Indian School.

No. 35. Authorizes the Secretary of the Interior to sell the unused and unallotted or remnant lands belonging to the Kiowa, Comanche, Apache, and Wichita Indians in Oklahoma, and the proceeds thereof to be used for the maintenance of a hospital heretofore appropriated for and for the use and benefit of said Indians; also it gives the actual settlers a prior right to purchase at the appraised value.

No. 36. Provides for an extension of time to purchasers of certain town lots sold in Lawton, Okla., for a term of one year and upon the payment of interest due.

No. 51. Provides for a joint commission consisting of two Members of the Senate and two Members of the House of Representatives to investigate the necessity and feasibility of procuring impounded waters, and for irrigation on the Yakima Indian Reservation in the State of Washington; also the feasibility of equipping and maintaining a tuberculosis hospital in New Mexico.

No. 53. For the purchase of a tract of land for the Skagit Indians used by them as a burial ground.

No. 53. Requesting the Secretary of the Interior to establish a system of bookkeeping in the Indian Bureau in order to give more detailed information in regard to the expenditures of money for said bureau.

JNO. H. STEPHENS,
C. D. CARTER,
CHAS. H. BURKE,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, as I understand, this conference report has first to be acted on in the Senate.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. That is correct.

Mr. MANN. It is expected that it will be disposed of in the Senate to-day?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I understand they intend to try to dispose of it to-day. That is the intention of those in charge of it.

Mr. MANN. Is it the intention of the gentleman from Texas to ask for a session of the House to-morrow?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I think it would be advisable to have a session to-morrow for the purpose of disposing of this conference report.

Mr. MANN. Has that been determined upon?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. It has not. It is advisable to dispose of this conference report so that the bill may go to the President, as the 1st of July is next Tuesday.

Mr. MANN. I asked the question while a large number of Members were present, so that we might be informed if it had been determined upon.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. It has not, because we do not know what the Senate will do.

ROADS.

Mr. SHACKLEFORD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all bills which have heretofore been introduced relating to the construction and maintenance of roads, which were referred to various committees before the Roads Committee was created, may be returned to the Speaker and let him refer them de novo to the proper committee.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SHACKLEFORD. Yes.

Mr. MANN. Is there not some way of ascertaining the numbers and titles of the bills? How could the gentleman's object be attained without the record showing the numbers and titles of the bills?

Mr. SHACKLEFORD. There are some 50 of them, and it occurred to me that if the Speaker could get them back from the committees to which they have been referred, they could then be referred to the appropriate committee.

The SPEAKER. The Chair wishes gentlemen would speak so they can be heard.

Mr. MANN. How will the Speaker know what bills they are unless he has at least the numbers of them?

Mr. SHACKLEFORD. There is some force in the suggestion of the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. MANN. Of course no one has any objection to the gentleman's proposition, but it seems to me that it would be desirable, in order to protect the employees of the House, for some one to get the numbers of these bills.

Mr. SHACKLEFORD. Mr. Speaker, I will withdraw the request for the present.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will state that if any of the committees have bills that ought to go to the Roads Committee they can bring them into the House and have a change of reference made, as is frequently done.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

Mr. SMITH of Minnesota. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the leave of absence of my colleague, Mr. MANAHAN, be extended for three weeks, on account of important business.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Minnesota asks unanimous consent that the leave of his colleague, Mr. MANAHAN, be extended for three weeks, on account of important business. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

BIRTHDAY OF HON. SERENO E. PAYNE.

The SPEAKER. While there is nothing in the rules to justify it, the Chair will take the privilege of extending congratulations to the distinguished gentleman from New York, the Hon. SERENO E. PAYNE, the father of the House, on having reached his seventieth birthday in such fine kelter, both mentally and physically. [Applause.]

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, I desire to thank the Speaker of the House for this kindly recognition and kind congratulations, and also to thank the Members of the House for the manner in which it has been received by them.

The most prominent thought that comes to me on this my seventieth birthday in connection with the House is the fact that I have seen so much of good in my fellow men, that I have seen so many men in this House during the 30 years which I have been a Member, on both sides of the aisle, without distinction of party, who appear to me to be honest, patriotic, able, trying to do according to the light they had the duty that was before them, and striving for what each one thought was for the best interests of the country. The thought that comes to me to-day is one of gratitude that I have had the opportunity of associating with so many men of that high character who have become lifelong friends during the years I have been here. [Applause.]

PROVIDING EXPENSES OF DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA VETERANS TO GETTYSBURG.

Mr. FOWLER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the resolution which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

House joint resolution appropriating $4,000 to defray traveling expenses of soldiers of the Civil War, now residing in the District of Columbia, from Washington, D. C., to Gettysburg, Pa., and return.

Resolved, etc., That to defray the traveling expenses of all honorably discharged soldiers of the Civil War and of all soldiers of the Confederate armies who rendered honorable service therein, now residing in the District of Columbia, from Washington, D. C., to Gettysburg, Pa., and return, to enable such soldiers to attend the celebration of the Fiftieth Anniversary of the Battle of Gettysburg, to be held at Gettysburg July 1, 2, 3, and 4, 1913, there is appropriated, one-half out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated and one-half out of the revenues of the District of Columbia, the sum of $4,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary.

That such appropriation shall be expended by a commission consisting of the Secretary of War; Col. Thomas S. Hopkins, past commander of the Department of the Potomac, Grand Army of the Republic; and Capt. D. B. Mull, ex-commander of a post in Georgia, United Confederate Veterans, residents of the District of Columbia. That said commission is authorized to adopt such rules for the determination of the persons entitled to the transportation hereunder as they may deem proper.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. CALLAWAY. Mr. Speaker, I object.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas objects.

CONFEDERATE REUNION AT BRUNSWICK, GA.

Mr. HOWARD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that House joint resolution 98, introduced by my colleague, Mr. WALKER, providing for the loaning of tents for the Confederate reunion, to be held at Brunswick, Ga., be taken up for immediate consideration.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

Joint resolution 98 (H. Rept. 26).

Resolved, etc., That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized to loan, at his discretion, to the executive committee of the Confederate Veterans' Reunion, to be held at Brunswick, Ga., in the month of July, 1913, such tents, with necessary poles, ridges, and pins as may be required at said reunion: Provided, That no expense shall be caused the United States Government by the delivery and return of said property, the same to be delivered to said committee designated at such time prior to the holding of said reunion as may be agreed upon by the Secretary of War and J. G. Weatherly, general chairman of said executive committee: And provided further, That the Secretary of War shall, before delivering such property, take from said J. G. Weatherly a good and sufficient bond for the safe return of said property in good order and condition, and the whole without expense to the United States.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. FOWLER. I object.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois objects.

Mr. HOWARD. Mr. Speaker, I want to request——

The SPEAKER. That is the end of it. A Member has the right to object to anything that is called up by unanimous consent, without giving any reason whatever.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of both of these resolutions which have been called up this morning and to which objection has been made.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent that both of these resolutions be considered by unanimous consent. Is there objection?

Mr. CALLAWAY. Mr. Speaker, I made objection to the first one a while ago.

The SPEAKER. That is true; but this is a new request.

Mr. CALLAWAY. Mr. Speaker, I make the same objection now.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman reserve his objection for a moment?

Mr. CALLAWAY. I will reserve the objection for a moment; yes.

The SPEAKER. The House will be in order. The Chair requests the occupants of the gallery to be in order. They are here by courtesy of the House. A conversation between two or more occupants of the gallery, however unthoughtedly it may be indulged in, if indulged in generally throughout the gallery, adds very much to the confusion in the House.

The gentleman from Illinois is recognized.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I have much the same feeling that the gentleman from Texas [Mr. CALLAWAY] has in reference to the expenditures of the public money on matters of this sort; and yet it has become the practice of Congress, whether right or wrong, to loan tents under the control of the War Department for the meeting of Union or Confederate soldiers. In the last Congress the Senate added an amendment to a resolution relating to that matter, providing that it should never be done hereafter, to which the House disagreed. That is one proposition. This resolution is called up at this time and unless acted upon now will undoubtedly result in the failure of the meeting of a few or more Confederate veterans at this particular place.

On the other hand, there is this meeting at Gettysburg of Union and Confederate veterans. Nearly all of the States have already provided for the payment of the traveling expenses of these Union and Confederate veterans to Gettysburg. The State of Pennsylvania and the National Government combined have provided for their care, support, feeding, sleeping, and all other accommodations while at Gettysburg. The resolution introduced by my colleague [Mr. FOWLER] involves the possible expenditure of $4,000. That is probably more than can be expended for this purpose to send those Union and Confederate veterans who live in the District of Columbia to Gettysburg, as is done elsewhere by the States. We have heard a great deal on different occasions in this House about a reunited country, especially since the Spanish War, and it seems to me that at this time, on the first occasion recognized by the General Government where Union and Confederate veterans are asked to meet together upon a bloody battlefield, as an evidence of final and complete reconciliation of themselves and of the different parts of the country, we might well authorize the expenditure of $4,000 to send these old men over to Gettysburg. Soon they will go over the road to the far beyond and we will be at no further expense on their account, and I hope the gentleman from Texas will permit these resolutions to be considered by the House at this time. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. CALLAWAY. Mr. Speaker, I object.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas objects.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted—

To Mr. BARTHOLDT, indefinitely, on account of illness in his family;

To Mr. HELVERING, for 10 days, on account of important business;

To Mr. BEALL of Texas, indefinitely, on account of illness in his family.

To Mr. HAYDEN, for three days, on account of important business.

UNITED STATES JUDGE, EASTERN DISTRICT OF PENNSYLVANIA.

Mr. CLAYTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to call up for present consideration the bill (H. R. 32) to provide for the appointment of an additional district judge in and for the eastern district of Pennsylvania, with Senate amendments thereto, disagree to the Senate amendments, and ask for a conference.

Mr. BARTLETT. The bill is on the Speaker's table, is it not?

Mr. CLAYTON. No; it was taken from the Speaker's table and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary. I brought the report in this morning, but it has not yet gone through the basket. Hence, it is a matter that requires unanimous consent. It is the Philadelphia judgeship matter. My proposition is to disagree to the two amendments which the Senate placed upon the bill, one of which strikes out the Cullop amendment requiring the President to give the names of the indorsers of a judge, and the other being a provision for the appointment of an additional circuit judge in the fourth circuit. Now, the Committee on the Judiciary has disagreed to both the Senate amendments, and I am simply asking unanimous consent that the matter may be——

Mr. BARTLETT. Will the gentleman yield?

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Alabama yield to the gentleman from Georgia?

Mr. CLAYTON. Certainly.

Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. Speaker, I am not going to object to the gentleman's request; of course I would not, I very rarely do so; but because I do not object I do not want to be put in the position of consenting to the disagreement to the Senate amendment in striking off what is known as the Cullop amendment. I would like very much to vote on that as I voted when it was offered. I voted against it, and I am prepared to vote against it at all times and on all occasions.

Mr. CLAYTON. It will be so construed——

Mr. BARTLETT. I do not want to object.

Mr. CLAYTON (continuing). The gentleman's position is well known and appreciated, and the conference committee, if it is authorized, will report back to the House.

Mr. DONOVAN. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman from Connecticut rise?

Mr. DONOVAN. Mr. Speaker, I wish to reserve the right to object. I desire to call the attention of the House to this: For some reason, which the ordinary man can not understand, there is this determined concerted action to have added an additional judge to our retinue of judges in these United States. If they had the interest of the administration of justice at heart, they would fill the vacancy that now exists instead of adding an additional one. A judge died several months ago, nearly a year, and yet there is no effort on the part of these very able gentlemen to fill the vacancy, but for political purposes, and you can attribute it to that and nothing else, they are determined to get another judge in that district. Mr. Speaker, I object.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. DONOVAN] objects.

Mr. CLAYTON. I hope the gentleman is happy since he has delivered himself.

Mr. DONOVAN. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a parliamentary inquiry, and that is that the distinguished gentleman from Alabama should address the Chair in addressing the House.

The SPEAKER. Well, the Speaker has no control over the gentleman from Alabama when he is making a private remark to some of his cronies.

Mr. CLAYTON. May I again observe I hope the gentleman from Connecticut is happy?

Mr. DONOVAN. Mr. Speaker——

Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. Speaker, regular order.

The SPEAKER. The regular order is the gentleman from New York [Mr. HARRISON].

Mr. HARRISON of New York. Mr. Speaker, I will withhold my motion for a moment in order that the gentleman from Florida may prefer a request.

CHANGE OF REFERENCE.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Mr. Speaker, I desire to ask unanimous consent that this bill may be referred to the District of Columbia Committee.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the title of the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 3380) providing for the construction of a bridge across the Anacostia River in the District of Columbia.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Florida asks unanimous consent for a change of reference of that bill to the District of Columbia Committee.

Mr. MANN. From what committee?

Mr. CLARK of Florida. From the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds. It is a bill providing for the construction of a bridge across the Anacostia River here in the District.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

PROHIBITION OF THE IMPORTATION OF OPIUM.

Mr. HARRISON of New York. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill H. R. 1966.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill by title.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 1966) to amend an act entitled "An act to prohibit the importation and use of opium for other than medicinal purposes," approved February 9, 1909.

Mr. HARRISON of New York. Mr. Speaker, pending the putting of that motion, I wish to ask unanimous consent for the limiting of general debate.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, I will say to the gentleman I do not know of any opposition to the bill on this side of the House, as no gentleman has asked me for any time. I think if the gentleman will move to go into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union the debate will exhaust itself very soon.

Mr. HARRISON of New York. Under those circumstances I will withdraw my request.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I may say that I have some observations to make on the bill, and I shall object to any agreement to close the time.

Mr. GARDNER. Mr. Speaker, I should want to have an opportunity to discuss a provision of section 7, in regard to the penalty.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman has withdrawn his request.

Mr. HARRISON of New York. I withdraw my request.

The SPEAKER. Has the gentleman come to any conclusion?

Mr. HARRISON of New York. No.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York moves that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the purpose of considering the bill H. R. 1966.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill H. R. 1966, a bill to amend an act entitled "An act to prohibit the importation and use of opium for other than medicinal purposes," approved February 9, 1909, with Mr. SIMS in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk proceeded with the reading of the bill.

Mr. HARRISON of New York. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the first reading of the bill be dispensed with.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent that the first reading of the bill be dispensed with. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. HARRISON of New York. Mr. Chairman, before we proceed to the discussion of the bill itself, I wish to yield five minutes to the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. HARDWICK].

Mr. HARDWICK. Mr. Chairman, I want to say to the gentlemen of the committee that certain publications in various papers of the country this morning do myself and various Members of the majority side a grave injustice, I think. Because certain Members of the majority side, and a majority of those Members, are opposed to a particular plan of establishing a budget committee, these papers have seen fit to classify us as "pork-barrel" statesmen. For one, I do not rest very lightly under that charge. I recall when only two gentlemen on this side of the Chamber were heard at all to protest against a certain bill that some of us regarded as unwise in some of its provisions, that those two gentlemen were the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD] and myself. I have never been on one of these so-called "pork-barrel" committees. I have never tried to get through, and have never been concerned in any such movement, either special or general, in this House, if, indeed, there has been such a movement.

Mr. Chairman, it is absolutely unfair and unjust to me and to many of the gentlemen who voted the same way as I did on this question to contend that because we opposed a particular proposition that would concentrate unheard-of power in certain gentlemen on this side we are opposed to any reasonable, just, and fairly constructed budget-committee plan. There was one fatal defect in the budget-committee plan that these newspapers referred to. There was absolutely no check whatever on the appropriating committees of this House under the plan presented by the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD], and if his plan had been adopted and the Committee on Military Affairs, for instance, through its representatives on the budget committee, combined with the Committee on Naval Affairs and the Committee on Post Office and Post Roads, and so on—all the appropriating committee representatives, in other words, combined against the few Members provided who are not members of appropriating committees, there could easily have been organized a "hog combine" that would have been the worst this country has ever seen. In my judgment, before this House will ever consent to a budget committee there must be some balance provided between the appropriating committees and nonappropriating committees of this House. It was utterly unfair to the gentlemen who had been elected to committees under a caucus rule that they should not serve on any other committee, that they should attempt to put themselves on the most powerful committee in this House, under the action proposed to the caucus. If we can have a budget committee that is fairly constructed, that will have practically the powers proposed by the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD], and that will not concentrate in the hands of one man the two most important chairmanships in this House, and the members of which can be elected in a free and open caucus without strings of any sort tied to them and without previous nomination from any committee, then I am for a budget committee.

But never will I support a proposition of the kind reported to the Democratic caucus yesterday by the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD], because if we were to adopt such a proposition it would result in an intolerable concentration of power and authority in the hands of the gentleman from Alabama and just a few other men; that is most undemocratic, most unreasonable, and most unjust. We would have enthroned a system of czarism beside which Cannonism would have been a most benevolent and liberal system.

Mr. DONOVAN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield to me for an interruption?

Mr. HARDWICK. With pleasure.

Mr. DONOVAN. Is the distinguished gentleman from Georgia washing his dirty office linen here?

Mr. HARDWICK. I do not see how dirty Democratic linen would interest the gentleman from Connecticut. [Laughter.]

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Georgia yield?

Mr. HARDWICK. No; not for such a purpose. I do not see how the washing of dirty Democratic linen could hurt the feelings of the gentleman from Connecticut. My only wonder is that he should be on the Democratic side at all. [Laughter.]

Mr. DONOVAN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman from New York [Mr. HARRISON] yield to me for a couple of minutes?

Mr. HARRISON of New York. I do not want to do any discourtesy to the gentleman from Connecticut, but I would like very much to proceed with the legislation in hand.

Mr. DONOVAN. The gentleman refuses to yield?

Mr. HARRISON of New York. I do not like to be put in the position of refusing to yield.

Mr. CLAYTON. Mr. Chairman, may I say that I hope we are all happy now? [Laughter.]

Mr. MANN. I will assure the gentleman from Connecticut that he can get time later on.

Mr. HARRISON of New York. Mr. Chairman, the bill H. R. 1966 is reported by the Committee on Ways and Means by a unanimous vote of the committee. It is the second one of a series of three bills attempting to regulate the traffic in opium and other narcotics both at home and between our country and foreign countries.

I thought that perhaps the use of a little narcotic talk just now might be useful on our side, and that is why I refused to yield a moment ago to the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. DONOVAN].

Mr. DONOVAN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from New York yield to the gentleman from Connecticut?

Mr. HARRISON of New York. I will yield for a question with pleasure.

Mr. DONOVAN. Oh, I do not simply want to ask a question. I can appreciate, though, that the intellectual gentleman from New York [Mr. HARRISON], as well as the distinguished character who appears in this House as a Representative from Georgia [Mr. HARDWICK], with all their intellect, may have much to fear from what I might say. [Laughter.]

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from New York yield?

Mr. HARRISON of New York. Mr. Chairman, I will yield with pleasure for a question, but the gentleman does not now ask me to do so.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York will proceed.

Mr. HARRISON of New York. Mr. Chairman, as I was stating, this is the second one of our series of three bills to regulate the traffic in narcotics. This bill deals with the international side of the question. It is a reenactment of the opium-exclusion act of February 21, 1909, with the addition of some more drastic provisions, and with a further provision prohibiting the exportation of opium from the United States under certain circumstances.

The matter was first called to the attention of the Congress during the sitting of the International Opium Commission, which met in Shanghai in 1909, and which was attended by the representatives of most of the leading powers of the world. The meeting was instigated by the United States for the purpose of putting an end, if possible, to the international traffic in opium.

Shortly after we acquired the Philippines we found that the people of those islands were suffering very much from the traffic in opium, and that is what caused us to start this series of international commissions and conventions. We found, however, that although the commissions met primarily at our request we ourselves were open to some reproach in these matters, inasmuch as we permitted the importation of smoking opium into the United States, and during the preceding 50 years we had actually collected about $27,000,000 of revenue upon this drug. So when that was called to the attention of Congress we passed the opium-exclusion act, which absolutely forbade the importation of smoking opium into the United States. That went into effect on April 1, 1909.

It was soon found that it was difficult to enforce that act, and that the smuggling of smoking opium, beginning on the 1st of April, 1909, had been growing ever since, in spite of all the efforts of the Government to stop it; and this act is designed to cure the defect in the opium-exclusion act and to stop that smuggling.

The committee hopes to effect that purpose in two respects. One of these is in casting the burden of proof upon anybody who has any smoking opium in his possession in the United States to show that it was imported before April 1, 1909, the date after which such importation was prohibited. Now, the reason why that became necessary was because the smugglers, by a very ingenious device, contrived to take the stamps off the containers and fill the containers with smuggled opium and put the stamps back again, and then sell it as if it had been imported legally before the 1st of April, 1909.

It was difficult, if not impossible, to secure the evidence to refute the face value of the stamp itself. This bill proposes to cast the burden of proof upon the possessor of smoking opium in that respect.

Then there is another way in which the opium-exclusion act was found to be inefficient. As soon as the importation of smoking opium was absolutely prohibited, it was found that vessels were bringing it into San Francisco Harbor, and in the harbor transferring it to other vessels which would go down to the west coast of Mexico, and then it would come into the United States in great quantities overland. The matter was submitted to the Department of Justice for its decision, and the Attorney General, who was Mr. Wickersham at that time, gave an opinion that this practice, so far as it related to the transshipment from ship to ship in San Francisco Harbor, was not illegal, because there was no importation there. The importation was forbidden, and no importation was actually taking place there. So the Secretary of the Treasury issued a regulation that all this opium was to be transshipped and gotten out of our harbors within 15 days; but the smuggling went on.

Now, this act, in a manner which I will discuss when we come to that, proposes to put an end to that also, by forbidding absolutely anybody within the jurisdiction of the United States, upon any vessel or any railroad car, or any conveyance coming into the United States, having any smoking opium in his possession; casting the burden of proof on him to show that he did not obtain it illegally, and providing penalties for the infraction of the act.

There is just one other matter that I should like to discuss very briefly now in the general debate, and that is the question of the prohibition of the exportation of opium from the United States.

The committee to which the bill was referred gave a great deal of consideration to the constitutional question, namely, as to whether we have any constitutional right to prohibit the exportation of anything, and some time was devoted by members of the committee to a study of the law, to see if any precedents could be found affecting that constitutional question.

We discovered that there are no adjudications exactly in point, and there is certainly no decision of the Supreme Court which would prohibit this clause of the bill as being unconstitutional. So, in the absence of any unfavorable decisions by the courts, we proceeded upon the belief that the commerce clause of the Constitution is sufficiently broad to permit us, in the regulation of commerce, to prohibit exportations absolutely. There are dicta of the court in the Northern Securities case which state clearly what I believe we all know, that the commerce clause of the Constitution is very broad, and that in the application of it laws may be passed which do amount to the prohibition of exports.

Now, although it may not be exactly in point, it has been the custom, as gentlemen are well aware, to prohibit the exportation from the United States of various articles which are known as contraband of war during times of foreign disturbance. Generally we have proceeded in that matter under neutrality treaties, but in the case of our dealings with Mexico last year a joint resolution passed the Congress, in which no limit was placed as to countries with which we had neutrality treaties; but a general permission was given to the President of the United States to prohibit the exportation of arms and munitions of war whenever any internal disturbance exists in any American country. Certainly, if that act was constitutional, I am satisfied that this act is constitutional. The House, as I recollect, amended that resolution by extending the prohibition to the exportation of coal as well as munitions of war.

The embargo act of 1807 absolutely forbade exportations at all, and I have never heard the constitutionality of that act questioned.

Further in point, perhaps, may be the prohibition found in the law against the exportation of obscene literature and other offensive matters through the mails.

Mr. MILLER. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. HARRISON of New York. With pleasure.

Mr. MILLER. This act forbids the exportation of smoking opium. I should like to know to what countries that exportation from this country now goes on.

Mr. HARRISON of New York. It is improbable that any smoking opium is legally exported from the United States to any country, and almost all the civilized countries of the world prohibit its importation; but I am informed that we do export medicinal opium and other narcotics in some quantities to Canada, Mexico, and perhaps to some of the South American countries, as well as the West Indies.

Mr. MILLER. Is it intended by this prohibition to permit the exportation of medicinal opium?

Mr. HARRISON of New York. It is an absolute prohibition of the exportation of smoking opium and a qualified exportation of medicinal narcotics to those countries which regulate or prohibit those articles.

Mr. MILLER. Why would it not be a good thing to allow the exportation of smoking opium and get rid of it and let it be handled about on the high seas?

Mr. HARRISON of New York. That is the precise object the international convention set out to accomplish to get rid of opium all over the world, and these clauses of the bill I am discussing are put in in conformity to article 4 of last year's convention for that very purpose.

Mr. MILLER. Has the committee thoroughly considered the prohibition of exports? It seems to me that it is not parallel at all between articles which are contraband of war and opium or anything else.

Mr. HARRISON of New York. That was the question which I was discussing when the gentleman from Minnesota first interrupted me.

Mr. MILLER. I thought the gentleman had concluded.

Mr. HARRISON of New York. I have practically concluded; I had only one other matter to call to the attention of the committee, and that was the so-called white-slave act known as the Mann bill, prohibiting the exportation of persons for immoral purposes; that perhaps is in point in the legal consideration of the question.

Mr. MILLER. Does that prohibit the exportation of such a person?

Mr. HARRISON of New York. It does.

Mr. MILLER. But a person is not a commodity, if the gentleman will permit.

Mr. HARRISON of New York. I think if that is constitutional, the other is, whether it is a person or commodity which is exported. The law seems to be clear that you can not put a tax or impost upon exports themselves, and in conformity to that state of the law we struck out of the third of our narcotic bills all reference to exporters, because that bill proposed to collect a license tax on exporters. A review of the authorities convinced the committee that a license tax on an exporter might be construed to be a tax on the exports themselves. So we struck that out. This, however, is based on the commerce clause of the Constitution, and I think that clause regulating commerce is sufficiently broad to allow us to prohibit the export, which is what this bill proposes to do.

Mr. SISSON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HARRISON of New York. Certainly.

Mr. SISSON. I was not here when the bill was taken up. Is this H. R. 6202 or H. R. 1966?

Mr. HARRISON of New York. The latter.

Mr. SISSON. Is it the purpose of the bill to raise revenue?

Mr. HARRISON of New York. The purpose of the bill can hardly be said to raise revenue, because it prohibits the importation of something upon which we have heretofore collected revenue.

Mr. SISSON. The gentleman bases the right of Congress to make this legislation upon the interstate-commerce clause of the Constitution?

Mr. HARRISON of New York. I do.

Mr. SISSON. Does the gentleman believe that the regulation of interstate commerce under the decisions of the Supreme Court will permit a law to absolutely prohibit commerce entirely?

Mr. HARRISON of New York. The gentleman is submitting a question as to the interstate-commerce clause to which I have given as much attention in this connection as the question of the foreign commerce. If he will permit me to read the language of the court in the Northern Securities Cos. against the United States, One hundred and ninety-third United States——

Mr. SISSON. I am familiar with the decision, but I do not know to what particular portion the gentleman refers.

Mr. HARRISON of New York. I have here a brief excerpt which I will read:

By the express words of the Constitution—

Says Justice Harlan—

Congress has power to regulate commerce with foreign nations and among the several States and with the Indian tribes. In view of the numerous decisions of this court, there ought not at this day to be any doubt of the general scope of such power. In some circumstance regulation may properly take the form of and have the effect of prohibition. Again and again this court has reaffirmed the doctrine announced in the great judgment rendered by Chief Justice Marshall for the court in Gibbons v. Ogden (9 Wheat., 1, 196 and 197), that the power of Congress to regulate commerce among the States and with foreign nations is the power "to prescribe the rule by which commerce is to be governed; that such power is complete in itself, may be exercised to its utmost extent, and acknowledges no limitations other than are prescribed in the Constitution"; that "if, as has always been understood, the sovereignty of Congress, though limited to specified objects, is plenary as to those objects, the power over commerce with foreign nations and among the several States is vested in Congress as absolutely as it would be in a single government having in its constitution the same restrictions on the exercise of the power as are found in the Constitution of the United States"; that a sound construction of the Constitution allows to Congress a large discretion "with respect to the means by which the powers it confers are to be carried into execution, which enables that body to perform the high duties assigned to it in the manner most beneficial to the people"; and that if the end to be accomplished is within the scope of the Constitution "all means which are appropriate, which are plainly adapted to that end, and which are not prohibited, are constitutional."

Mr. SISSON. If the gentleman will permit, I am familiar with the doctrine in that case, but in this bill are you not seeking to do under one clause of the Federal Constitution what is specifically prohibited in another clause of the Constitution, to wit, to levy an export duty? In other words, are you not endeavoring under the interstate commerce clause of the Federal Constitution to levy an export duty, which is a direct violation of another clause of the Constitution?

Mr. HARRISON of New York. We are not proposing to levy any impost or duty. We are prohibiting the export. We are not attempting to collect revenue, but to regulate commerce.

Mr. SISSON. I am endeavoring to get the distinction which is suggested sotto voce by my friend from Texas [Mr. GARNER], how it is that you have no right to levy an export duty on an article and at the same time you have a right to prohibit the exportation of that article.

Mr. HARRISON of New York. One clause of the Constitution relates to the raising of revenue, and that we are not attempting to change; and the other clause of the Constitution gives us police power by giving us control of our foreign commerce.

Mr. SISSON. The gentleman now gets at the point of the case. Does the gentleman believe that the Constitution construed as a whole ever contemplated that Congress would exercise either of these powers in the exercise of a police power? The purpose of this bill—and we are all in sympathy with it—is to prevent the use of opium in the United States, destructive as it is of human happiness and human life; but the question now is whether or not the purpose you desire to reach is a purpose that would be permitted under any clause of the Constitution?

Mr. GARNER. Mr. Chairman, may I interrupt there?

Mr. HARRISON of New York. Certainly.

Mr. GARNER. Is not this about the status of this particular phase of this bill, that you propose in this bill to prohibit the exportation, but do not propose to levy an export duty, and that the courts have never specifically determined that you could not prohibit exportation?

Mr. HARRISON of New York. Not only that. Not only have they not so decided, according to my reading of the decisions, but the matter has actually been already done by acts of Congress in the cases which I specified in my remarks.

Mr. SISSON. I understand, however, that the real purpose of the bill is to regulate among the people the manner in which they may get opium. That is the real purpose of the bill.

Mr. HARRISON of New York. Among the different peoples of the world, in this case.

Mr. SISSON. But the principal purpose of the bill is as it affects the people of the United States. You are not attempting to legislate for the other nations of the world.

Mr. HARRISON of New York. I admit it would be presumptuous for us to attempt to legislate for any other country, but the gentleman is perhaps now thinking of the third one of the bills which deals with the domestic traffic in narcotics. We are at present considering the second bill, which is merely carrying out pledges that we assumed in the last international convention, substantially all of the countries agreeing to enact similar provisions.

Mr. SISSON. I am in entire sympathy with the bill, but I would like to be able, if I could do so, to get from the committee, and especially from the gentleman who has charge of the bill, the exact position which the committee assumes, so that we may be able, if the question is raised, to defend it upon constitutional grounds.

Mr. HARRISON of New York. I know no Member of this House who would be better able to make that defense if he be convinced of the constitutionality of it than the gentleman from Mississippi, and I had hoped that by this time I had convinced him.

Mr. SISSON. I will be very frank with the gentleman and say that I did not hear all of his argument, because I was endeavoring to read the bill. I see the difference between the bills, and the bill now under consideration is the bill to regulate the opium traffic between nations or between our Nation and other nations. In our effort to reach a desired result we are attempting under the interstate-commerce clause of the Constitution, which permits us, of course, to deal with foreign nations, to bring about a certain result. It is under that clause only that we can deal with foreign nations, that being prohibited to the States. Now, that being true, if you, in reference to opium, shall prohibit the exportation of opium entirely from the United States, upon the same reasoning why could you not prohibit the exportation of other articles?

Mr. HARRISON of New York. Well, I consider that was actually done under the second administration of Mr. Jefferson in the embargo act.

Mr. SISSON. Well, the embargo act was placed, however, as I conceive it, upon a different principle; but there is this in many of the decisions of the court, that the regulation of these things which are deleterious to the human family is peculiarly within the powers of the State if it affects them internally, and so far as external relations of the United States are concerned, I do not know of a decision where the Supreme Court has said that if the use of those article should be deleterious in international affairs that the delegated powers to the Federal Government would give the Federal Government today a right to do what the States may do under their police powers.

Mr. HARRISON of New York. Well, I should like to call the attention of the gentleman from Mississippi once more to the line of argument which, perhaps, escaped his attention—that the question of exportation of arms and munitions of war, which he contends is not in point because they are generally based upon neutrality treaties, was not so based in the joint resolution which passed Congress last year in relation to the importation of those articles into Mexico, because that resolution, presented to the Senate by the senior Senator from New York, one of the most distinguished lawyers in the United States, who drew it, specifically gave the President the power to prohibit the exportation of those articles, without any reference by name to neutrality treaties but whenever cases of internal disorder in any American country are found to exist, and that I conceive to be broad enough to be in point in this argument.

Mr. SISSON. I recollect the resolution referred to by the gentleman from New York, but I do not know I am in entire sympathy regarding the conclusions reached by the Senator from New York; but this thing is largely to be determined by the viewpoint that we take of the Federal Constitution. Some of the political schools give it a very broad construction, and those who belong to the school to which I belong would give it a restrictive construction; and I believe that restrictive construction of the Constitution would, perhaps, except to a war measure, prevent that sort of legislation, though it has been done and there has been no question raised. But I desire to state to the gentleman from New York I am in entire sympathy with the purposes of the bill, but I have some grave doubts about its constitutionality.

Mr. GARDNER. May I ask the gentleman from Mississippi a question?

Mr. SISSON. Yes.

Mr. GARDNER. Under what clause of the Constitution does the gentleman think the importation of impure teas is forbidden, or obscene literature.

Mr. SISSON. There is a difference between the constitutionality of a provision in reference to imports and exports. The Congress specifically has the power to levy a tax upon imports.

Mr. GARDNER. But not to prohibit imports?

Mr. SISSON. I do not believe that Congress has the right to prohibit imports.

Mr. PAYNE. I want to say to the gentleman right now that a party has got about $20,000 worth of tea that is about to be dumped into the Hudson because of our law prohibiting the importation of any impure tea.

Mr. SISSON. True; I will say to the gentleman from New York——

Mr. PAYNE. And there is a good chance for a lawsuit there.

Mr. SISSON. That may be true——

Mr. PAYNE. And none of their lawyers have discovered that law was unconstitutional or raised that question. They have raised every other question, and the litigation has been going on for a long time.

Mr. SISSON. I will say to the gentleman from New York, notwithstanding the fact we may now be compelled to submit to whatever decision the court makes in reference to that matter, I am not willing to concede the righteousness of the decision under the Constitution.

Mr. PAYNE. I helped pass the law—I think I reported it—and I thought it was right to do it under that clause giving us power to regulate commerce. It certainly was not under the clause allowing us to put an import tax upon teas or any other articles because that is specific.

Mr. SISSON. The difference between the gentleman from New York and myself is as to the construction of the word "regulate." As to whether the word "regulate" can be construed to mean "prohibit" or not is a question that has been discussed for a number of years.

Mr. PAYNE. We thought it was a proper construction when we passed that law, and no one has raised the constitutional question, although there is a case now under it that has been in litigation for three years.

Mr. BURNETT. Has not the court decided time and time again that the word "regulate" does not mean "prohibit"?

Mr. SISSON. I want to say to the other gentleman from New York that my reason for raising this question is this: If under the guise of a bill of this character Congress shall assume the right to prohibit the exportation of articles from the United States, it sets a precedent where the discretion of Congress then becomes the constitutional provision rather than the limitation within the Constitution itself.

Mr. PAYNE. No. The court determines that question as to whether Congress has the discretion or not. Congress may exercise what they believe to be their right, but the court finally determines it.

Mr. SISSON. I do not concede that Congress has the right to pass any law with the idea that the court will put us right. We ought to be right ourselves before the court puts us right. I doubt extremely whether or not it is ever wise for the Supreme Court of the United States—and I agree with Jefferson—to so declare, when we ought to have construed it for ourselves.

Mr. PAYNE. Congress was early given that right, that it might be construed by able lawyers.

Mr. SISSON. I will say to the gentleman from New York that before the Supreme Court ever did reach that conclusion it took the reasoning of Justice Marshall, who had as much ingenuity as any lawyer who ever lived; and I have failed, in all the powerful reasoning of his mighty brain, to find one single peg on which to hinge it, and the gentleman knows that was the cause of the breach between Jefferson and the then Chief Justice of the Supreme Court of the United States.

Mr. PAYNE. Whatever the cause, I thank God for John Marshall.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman from New York [Mr. PAYNE] permit me to ask a question of the gentleman from Mississippi?

Mr. PAYNE. I will.

Mr. SISSON. I will answer the question if I can.

Mr. MANN. I understood the gentleman to raise a question as to how far Congress had the power to provide for the importation of articles and denied that Congress had that power. Of course, the gentleman is familiar—although I presume it escaped his attention for a moment—with the fact that the pure-food law absolutely forbids the importation into this country of any article of food from any country which forbids the importation of the same article into that country, on the same lines as this opium bill now before the House, but reversed.

Mr. SISSON. The opium bill takes the other end of that.

Mr. MANN. I say, reversed. That law has been sustained by the Supreme Court of the United States in every particular, and, I think, determines the question.

Mr. SISSON. I do not exactly agree with the statement that when you take the reverse of the proposition it necessarily follows that the reverse of the proposition is true.

Mr. MANN. That may be, but I had understood the gentleman to say that we did not have the power to prevent the importation of articles into this country.

Mr. SISSON. No; I did not say that.

Mr. MANN. I thought that the gentleman was misunderstood.

Mr. SISSON. No. I was taking the position that we did not have the same power over exportation that we did over importation, and that if this bill shall establish the precedent that Congress may not levy an export tax but that Congress may prevent the exportation of articles, you are doing by indirection what the Constitution says you can not do directly. In other words, Congress is doing a great deal more and going a great deal further when Congress prohibits the exportation of an article than when Congress simply levies an export tax on an article.

Mr. MANN. Then will the gentleman from Mississippi permit me to quote again from the pure-food law, which has been sustained?

Mr. SISSON. Certainly.

Mr. MANN. The law provides: "The shipment to any foreign country of any article of food or drug which is adulterated or misbranded within the meaning of this act is hereby prohibited"; and then there is a penalty provided for doing it.

Mr. SISSON. That is because they are misbranded. In other words, there is a great deal of difference between the regulation of commerce and a prohibition on commerce.

Mr. MANN. But here is a prohibition of the shipment abroad of misbranded or adulterated articles.

Mr. SISSON. That is true.

Mr. MANN. If the gentleman raises the question whether we could properly forbid the exportation of grain under ordinary circumstances, I would not discuss it with him, because I am uncertain. But opium stands on another ground.

Mr. SISSON. I will say to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] that I am absolutely sure that the law, which simply regulates and requires an article to be properly branded, is sound and valid, and I believe we could have gone further than that and could have provided to make it apply to clothing, for example, and forbid an article of clothing to be branded as all wool when it was part cotton. That provision to which the gentleman refers forbids the misbranding of articles.

Mr. MANN. It goes beyond misbranding. It forbids the exportation of certain kinds of articles, whether properly or improperly branded. It forbids their exportation. It forbids the exportation of a drug that has opium in it.

Mr. SISSON. I am frank to say that the pure-food law has gone to the very limit, if it has not exceeded the originally construed powers of the Constitution.

Mr. MANN. Most of the gentlemen on that side of the House thought it did exceed the limit when we were passing the bill, but fortunately there were enough on this side, along with some on that side, to pass the law, and the Supreme Court has upheld it.

Mr. SISSON. I am afraid, however, that the infection has gotten over on this side of the House, and that there are very few people now who believe that there is anything prohibited to Congress in the Constitution, or who refuse to admit that Congress may not do anything on earth that it wants to.

Mr. MANN. The wisest and best man is he who is willing to learn. Fortunately gentlemen on that side of the House, or at least some of them, are willing to learn. I am sure the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. SISSON] would be, and I know that the gentleman from New York [Mr. HARRISON] is.

Mr. SISSON. I will say to my friend from Illinois that "as long as the light holds out to burn" we may, perhaps, get some good lessons into the minds of our good Republican friends, and you may eventually acquire some respect for the Constitution.

Mr. HARRISON of New York. Mr. Chairman, how much time have I remaining?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman has 20 minutes remaining.

Mr. HARRISON of New York. I reserve the balance of my time, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman——

Mr. RODDENBERY. Mr. Chairman, before the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] proceeds, may I ask the gentleman from New York a question?

Mr. HARRISON of New York. With pleasure.

Mr. RODDENBERY. Of course, if the gentleman from Illinois prefers to proceed now, I can do that later. Section 4, line 15, provides that—

> Whenever on trial for violation of this section, the defendant is shown to have or have had possession of such opium, such possession shall be deemed sufficient evidence to authorize conviction, unless the defendant shall explain the possession to the satisfaction of the jury.

That language is identical with the language appearing in section 2; but immediately following the language in section 4 is a proviso beginning "Provided, however." What is the object of putting in the "Provided, however," clause in view of the provision just preceding?

Mr. HARRISON of New York. The provision in section 4, which, as the gentleman from Georgia correctly states, is the same provision to be found in the old law and in section 2 of this bill, refers to "any person subject to the jurisdiction of the United States who shall have or conceal," and so forth, "any opium upon any railroad train or vessel," and the proviso which limits the operation of this burden of proof is extended to the master of the vessel or the conductor of the railway car, so that he is permitted to show that he did not have knowledge that he was not privy to the crime.

Mr. RODDENBERY. The language "unless the defendant shall explain the possession to the satisfaction of the jury," as it exists in the line just above, would not that give him the right of proof and the right of judgment or acquittal as fully as the clause following "Provided, however," does?

Mr. HARRISON of New York. I do not know whether it would be a sufficient protection for him, since he might be made to suffer for the crime of another, because the language of the lines 12 and 13 requires the persons who have knowledge to make report to the master of the vessel or the conductor of the train, and I think he is entitled to this special exemption in view of that.

Mr. RODDENBERY. If the person having the knowledge of the presence of the opium on the vessel discloses that fact to the master of the vessel, then if the master of the vessel can explain his conduct to the satisfaction of the jury his rights will be preserved, will they not?

Mr. HARRISON of New York. Yes.

Mr. RODDENBERY. Now, if the person having knowledge of the presence of the opium on the vessel or the car does not communicate it to the master of the vessel or the person in charge of the car, would not the provision as to making a satisfactory explanation to the jury be covered without the proviso?

Mr. HARRISON of New York. That might be true if it were not for the further provisions of section 8, which is a reenactment of the existing navigation laws as to manifesting commodities on board vessels. The officers of the vessel are liable for having an article on board the vessel if it is not manifested.

Mr. RODDENBERY. Would not the gentleman's observation be true if it were not for this specific provision in section 4:

Whenever on trial for violation of this section the defendant is shown to have or to have had possession of such opium, such possession shall be deemed sufficient evidence to authorize conviction, unless the defendant shall explain the possession to the satisfaction of the jury.

Mr. HARRISON of New York. That is correct. The gentleman's contention is right.

Mr. RODDENBERY. Of course, everyone desires to see a defendant given every proper right, but you have left it to be adjudged by the jury on the facts, and I doubt if we should provide for him a cumulative defense. And it seems to me that the provision with reference to the defendant explaining the possession to the satisfaction of the jury leaves a wide discretion in the jury, and under it the jury will be the judge in every case, each case standing on its own merits, whether or not the defendant should be convicted.

This section provides to give the defendant that right, and in addition thereto specifically provides that if he shall satisfy the "jury that he had no knowledge, and that he used due diligence to prevent the presence of such article in or on such carrier," and so forth. What occurs to me is that it extends the special form and privilege of defense which, if placed in this section, should apply to every other section, and if it applies to this statute should be applicable to similar statutes generally.

Mr. HARRISON of New York. Mr. Chairman, I appreciate the force of the argument of the gentleman from Georgia; but when we are proceeding in a manner which probably rather horrifies the legal Members of this body, to destroy the ordinary presumption of innocence in a criminal proceeding, I think it is only due to the persons from whom their presumption of innocence is taken by the operation of this bill, that they be given an opportunity, even if it is a cumulative opportunity, to explain away that burden of guilt.

Mr. RODDENBERY. I do not want to consume the gentleman's time, or to extend a controversy, for I have no controversy with him; but I should like to pursue my inquiry a little further.

Mr. HARRISON of New York. With pleasure.

Mr. RODDENBERY. If it was not provided under the section as it now exists that the defendant could make this defense, I should quite agree with the gentleman. But under the section, without the additional provision, if the master of the vessel shows the use of due diligence to prevent the presence of such article, and so forth, the jury under the law, if they think the explanation satisfactory, may acquit without this proviso.

Mr. HARRISON of New York. I have already said to the gentleman from Georgia that it might not be necessary to make any special mention of the master of the vessel or the conductor of the railroad train, if it were not for the fact that the statute casts upon him the burden of knowing something which he may not be able to discover. He may become involved in the wrongdoing of another without any offense of his own.

Mr. RODDENBERY. If he sets up that defense and explains it to the satisfaction of the jury, would he not have a complete defense without this proviso?

Mr. HARRISON of New York. If the gentleman's argument is correct and my argument is wrong, the most that can be said of this proviso is that it is a redundancy, a pleonasm; and even if the gentleman is correct in his contention, there is nothing here that offends his sense of right or justice.

Mr. RODDENBERY. I do not know but that I will agree with the gentleman in that, with the additional statement that without the proviso it leaves the jury the widest latitude, and with the provision it restricts the jury, or rather instructs the jury.

Now I will ask this question: In similar statutes does the gentleman have a knowledge of any provision such as is contained, beginning in line 20, down through the page?

Mr. HARRISON of New York. Section 2, page 2, lines 18 to 23 is all existing law, being a part of the opium exclusion act of February 21, 1909. That is the precedent for which the gentleman was inquiring.

Mr. RODDENBERY. "Provided further," on page 3, line 20, and what follows it?

Mr. HARRISON of New York. No; I know of no precedent for that; it is an extension of the same principle.

Mr. RODDENBERY. Does this "provided, however" clause appear in the bill as it was introduced in the House in the first instance?

Mr. HARRISON of New York. It does.

Mr. RODDENBERY. I know the gentleman has looked into the matter, and I desire to call attention to it and reflect my own views. I am of opinion that that provision should be stricken from the bill; but unless it was manifestly apparent that other gentlemen had similar views, I would not take up the time to make a motion to that effect.

Mr. HARRISON of New York. Now, Mr. Chairman, I reserve the balance of my time.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman has nine minutes remaining.

Mr. GARDNER. Mr. Chairman, the minority members of the committee unanimously favor the enactment of this bill. We feel that the bill is constitutional. We considered that question very carefully and came to the same conclusion as did the majority.

There is only one matter on which I at all disagree with the gentleman from New York, and that is in respect to section 7 of the bill. Under section 7 of the bill one-half of the fine or one-half of the bail foreiture goes to the informer. I suggest to the gentleman from New York the question as to whether it would not be wise to limit that provision in some way so that no officer or employee of the United States should be rewarded as an informer. It seems to me it is a step backward to pay a Government inspector for information which results in a successful prosecution. I have read what the gentleman from New York says in his report, and I am aware of the slackness of some inspectors, but does the gentleman think that this is the proper way to encourage inspectors to do their duty?

Mr. HARRISON of New York. The gentleman from Massachusetts, of course, discussed this question in the committee and reserved to himself the right to oppose on the floor upon this point, which I understand he would have had anyway. The question, I believe, was not voted on in committee, although there were some gentlemen present who apparently agreed with the gentleman from Massachusetts. If the gentleman from Massachusetts will present an amendment when the time comes, I would be glad to have him express his opinion.

Mr. GARDNER. I will read the amendment which I contemplate. Will the gentleman please think it over?

Mr. HARRISON of New York. May I remark right there that the gentleman did not state very fully the reason for the proposition of giving half of the fee to the informer. Under the provisions of section 2 of the bill the opium when seized is destroyed, and there is no fund on hand from which informers could be paid, unless it is provided that they may be paid from the fine itself. I understand that the gentleman from Massachusetts contends that should not apply to Government officials, but it is only fair to the framers of the bill to state in what way it might apply to other informers.

Mr. GARDNER. I intended to state the case fully. When I reserved my right to raise the question on the floor of the House, I had not yet read the gentleman's report. The gentleman in his report says:

Under the February act opium prepared for smoking may not be sold after seizure to the highest bidder, but must be destroyed. Therefore, the Treasury Department has no fund from the sale of the seized opium with which to reward vigilant inspectors or informers, and this has led to some slackness on the part of the inspectors.

Now, it seems to me that is the wrong way to go about the matter, to pay your inspectors for doing their duty by encouraging them to become informers. Perhaps it may be necessary to encourage informers. However, I do not think we ought to encourage our inspectors to become informers. I shall suggest at the end of section 7 to add this proviso:

Provided, That no payment under section 7 shall be made to any officer or employee of the United States.

If that is satisfactory I will be glad to have the gentleman offer that amendment.

Mr. HARRISON of New York. Amendment is not in order at the present time.

Mr. GARDNER. I understand that, but I mean at the proper time. I reserve the remainder of my time.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

The committee informally rose; and the Speaker having resumed the Chair, a message from the Senate, by Mr. Tulley, one of its clerks, announced that the Vice President had appointed Mr. PAGE and Mr. LANE members of the joint select committee on the part of the Senate, as provided for in the act of February 16, 1889, entitled "An act to authorize and provide for the disposition of useless papers in the Executive departments," for the disposition of useless papers in the Treasury Department.

PROHIBITION OF THE IMPORTATION OF OPIUM.

The committee resumed its session.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I would like to inquire if the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. DONOVAN] now desires any time?

Mr. DONOVAN. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentleman for his courtesy, but I do not at this time. The distinguished gentleman whom I hoped to entertain intellectually has departed from the room.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, this is one of the real measures of reform, and I am again glad to congratulate the gentleman from New York [Mr. HARRISON] upon his introduction of the series of bills, which have been reported from the Committee on Ways and Means, designed to prevent the manufacture of smoking opium in the United States, designed to prevent the importation of smoking opium into the United States or the exportation from the United States, and designed to regulate the sale and manufacture of opium, cocaine, and so forth, in the United States. Habit-forming drugs are one of the worst evils in our country, and while I am not sure that the provisions of these bills even go far enough, they probably go as far as could profitably or properly be expected at this time. I had the honor to introduce the original bill preventing the importation of smoking opium, and while the bill which I introduced was not the one which was passed, still it was the occasion for obtaining a favorable report from the Committee on Ways and Means, which did not desire to have its jurisdiction interfered with and which preferred to report a bill rather than to have a motion which I had made to take it away from the committee come up; and the bill passed. Gentlemen now say in their report that it has not been fully effective. I presume that is true; but I congratulate myself upon the fact that I happened to be in a position at the time where I was asked to introduce the original bill, which in the first place was prepared by the State Department, as I presume these bills have been, in part at least. I think it is Dr. Wright, in the State Department, who has been doing work under the General Government for years in relation to the international traffic in opium.

That, however, Mr. Chairman, is not the only bill which I congratulate myself upon having the honor to have introduced. The prevention of the importation of smoking opium and the control of narcotic drugs is of great importance; but there is another measure to which I wish to direct the attention of the House for a moment, which I had the honor to present to the House, and that is the white-slave-traffic bill, a law now upon the statute books, supported, I am glad to say, by the distinguished gentleman now occupying the position of Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. SIMS], who was one of two Democrats on the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce who favored the bill, notwithstanding the constitutional objections which were made to it by the other Democratic members of that committee. Judge Russell, of Texas, a Member of the House at that time, and Mr. SIMS both stood favoring that bill. Judge Russell, of Texas, then a member of that committee, had the honor afterwards to write an opinion holding the bill to be constitutional, and he told me of a conversation which afterwards occurred, when he came back on the floor of the House while on a visit in the city of Washington. One of the other Democratic members of that committee, who had declared that the bill would be declared unconstitutional if enacted, had a conversation with Judge Russell, and the judge said to him, "Ah, but that bill has been held by the courts to be constitutional." The other gentleman said, "But by what courts? I have not heard of it." Judge Russell replied, "By my court; I have written the opinion"; and I am proud, Mr. Chairman, that he had the honor of doing it. The Supreme Court upheld Judge Russell.

But, Mr. Chairman, in order to make a law effective it must first be put upon the statute books, it must be constitutional, and it must be enforced by the administrative officers through the aid of the courts; and when we find that the chief law officer of the country and the Chief Magistrate of the country have permitted themselves to be used to prevent the enforcement of a great moral reform law like this we have a right to make inquiries and give consideration to the case. We are all familiar with the telegram sent to the President of the United States upon the 21st day of this month by the United States district attorney of the northern district of California, Mr. McNab, tendering his resignation for the reasons stated in his telegram.

The President on June 24, after he had waked up from his dream, through the activity of the people of the country without regard to partisan politics, accepted the resignation of Mr. McNab, and in the course of his telegram accepting the resignation he made these remarks:

I greatly regret that you should have acted so hastily and under so complete a misapprehension of the actual circumstances, but since you have chosen such a course and have given your resignation the form of an inexcusable intimation of injustice and wrongdoing on the part of your superior, I release you without hesitation and accept your resignation to take effect at once.

"Have given your resignation the form of an inexcusable intimation of injustice and wrongdoing on the part of your superior officer!" And the Attorney General, in writing a letter to the President, said:

Mr. McNab, as United States attorney, held a position of peculiar trust and confidence, demanding the utmost loyalty to the department. If, as such an officer should do, he had availed himself of the opportunity to send a dispatch recalling my attention to the peculiar conditions which he thought rendered the proposed action inadvisable, as I had always theretofore done—

That is poor English, by the way—

I should have given earnest consideration to his suggestions, and, with this before me, could have acted with the local conditions fresh in my mind. Instead of pursuing this manifestly proper course he waited until June 20, and then published the sensational telegrams wherein he imputed base motives to me. His conduct has, of course, made it impossible for him to continue in the prosecution of this case.

"Wherein he imputed base motives to me!" Let us see what were the facts in the case. On May 16 the Attorney General wired to Mr. McNab asking him to make a full report of these cases. That reply was made under date of May 21, and reached the Attorney General on May 27. On May 27 the Attorney General wired to Mr. McNab, approving the course which he had pursued and asking to proceed with the cases. On June 18 a former distinguished colleague of ours, the Secretary of Labor, telephoned to the Attorney General and asked to have this case postponed. What the date of the telegram from the Attorney General to Mr. McNab was is not given, but it could not have been before June 18 or after June 20. It must have been June 18 or June 19 that the Attorney General directed Mr. McNab to continue these cases. The Attorney General received the telephone message from Mr. Wilson on June 18. The President received the resignation of Mr. McNab on June 20, but meanwhile the Attorney General had directed Mr. McNab to postpone the cases, and then the Attorney General says:

Instead of pursuing this manifestly proper course, he waited until June 20.

"He waited until June 20!" That is a pretty hasty place up in the Attorney General's office to say he waited before he did what he did. Here the district attorney, receiving the telegram on June 19 from the Attorney General, replied to it with his resignation on June 20, and the Attorney General blames him because he waited so long to pursue his remedy!

But did Mr. McNab accuse the Department of Justice of wrongdoing or impute base motives to the Attorney General? He did not. What was the telegram of resignation which Mr. McNab sent? Remember that there were two cases pending in the district court of the northern district of California, one against a man by the name of Diggs and one against a man by the name of Caminetti for violation of the white-slave act under circumstances and conditions, if the facts charged are true, which would make men blush that they are men. Caminetti was a youthful boy of 27 years, with, I believe, several children, and it was desirable to have his father at the trial to protect him in his guileless innocence, having only seven lawyers to do so, and his father not being a lawyer, I presume. Well, they say his father is a lawyer, probably the same kind I am—has been admitted to the bar. His father had been appointed Commissioner General of Immigration, one of the duties of which office is to enforce both the Mann and the Bennett white-slave laws in reference to the deportation of aliens brought here for the purposes of prostitution, a fine man to place in that position, whose principal object is to leave his office in order to go to the side of his 27-year-old son under trial for a white-slave offense. Is he a proper man to be in charge of the decision of questions as to the deportation of aliens brought here for the purposes of prostitution? And the district attorney, McNab, charges the Department of Labor, the Bureau of Immigration, and the Department of Justice with refusing to deport some alien prostitutes.

And I demand that they shall make public the information which has been sent by Mr. McNab to either one of the departments on this subject, so that we and the public may determine whether there has been any other crooked work in reference to the deportation of these prostitutes. Mr. McNab received his order to continue these two cases. And, by the way, there were two cases. These men, both married, had run off with two young girls, less than 20 years of age, but each one was indicted separately. What reason was given or is given by anyone for the postponement of the trial of the Diggs case? Was Mr. Diggs with his seven attorneys also in the need of the influence and advice of father Caminetti? Why should the Diggs case be postponed? They were two separate cases. The district attorney had warned the Attorney General that every effort would be made to prostitute justice, to perjure witnesses, to buy away the witnesses, to thwart the ordinary administration of law, and then the district attorney sends a telegram to the President.

Mr. KAHN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. MANN. I yield.

Mr. KAHN. Has the gentleman seen the statement from the United States attorney at San Francisco, published in the papers this morning, that on three separate and distinct occasions he called the fact to the attention of the United States Attorney General that there was danger of perversion of justice by reason of the fact that his witnesses were being tampered with?

Mr. MANN. I thank the gentleman. I have the statements all here:

I have the honor to tender my resignation as United States attorney for the northern district of California, to take effect immediately.

There is nothing in that impugning base motives to anyone in the Department of Justice.

I am ordered by the Attorney General over my protest to postpone until autumn the trials of Maury Diggs and Drew Caminetti, indicted for a hideous crime which has ruined two girls and shocked the moral sense of the people of California, and this after I have advised the Department of Justice that attempts have been made to corrupt the Government witnesses, and friends of the defendants are publicly boasting that the wealth and political prominence of the defendants' relatives will procure my hand to be stayed through influence at Washington.

What is there in that to impute base motives to the Department of Justice or to accuse the Department of Justice of wrongdoing? Here is the statement that the district attorney had notified the Attorney General that the friends of these defendants were boasting that they would procure "his hand to be stayed." Is that a reflection upon the Department of Justice? That is a mere statement of a real fact.

Mr. KAHN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield again for a further question?

Mr. MANN. I yield.

Mr. KAHN. Is the gentleman aware of the fact that Mr. Diggs, the other defendant, is the nephew of a Democratic State senator of California, and the political influence referred to in the United States attorney's letter may probably have some bearing on that.

Mr. MANN. Of this fact I am absolutely sure, that the great mass of Democrats in public or private life neither condone an offense of this character nor the effort to postpone the speedy trial of offenders. [Applause.]

Then the district attorney says:

In these cases two girls were taken from cultured homes, bullied and frightened into going into a foreign State and were ruined and debauched by the defendants, who abandoned their wives and infants to commit the crime.

And then, after a reference to the Western Fuel directors case, which has no insinuation or reflection in it, the district attorney says:

Before I could send my resignation I received another telegram from the department ordering me to postpone the case against certain defendants of the Western Fuel Co. and not to try them unless ordered by the department.

No reflection or imputation of base motives there; no accusation of wrongdoing, at least.

In bitter humiliation of spirit I am compelled to acknowledge what I have heretofore indignantly refused to believe, namely, that the Department of Justice is yielding to influence which will cripple and destroy the usefulness of this office.

It must be upon this statement that the President says the district attorney accused the Attorney General of wrongdoing, and the Attorney General says the district attorney accused him of base motives.

I am compelled to acknowledge what I have heretofore indignantly refused to believe, namely, that the Department of Justice is yielding to influence which will cripple and destroy the usefulness of this office.

He makes no accusation of wrongdoing. He imputes no motives in the statement, but says that he now believes "the department is yielding to influence which will cripple and destroy the usefulness" of his office. Is that true? There is nothing else in the telegram of the district attorney, sending his resignation, making accusation of wrongdoing or imputing motives. The district attorney stated certain facts. He was ordered by the Attorney General to postpone the cases. That order, now they find, will destroy the usefulness of the office out there, and they run to cover to change the order. [Applause.] Frightened rabbits never got away quicker than the President and the Attorney General when this matter was brought up; but they might have excused themselves to the world if they had said, "The Attorney General acted under a misapprehension, a little carelessly, perhaps," and then withdrawn what they have done and commended the officer under him who dared to call the attention of the public to the facts. That would have been a manly course. We all, of course, excuse mistakes, and we all admire manliness; but we all hate hypocrisy, and this action now taken is pure hypocrisy. [Applause on the Republican side.]

What did the district attorney do that he is objectionable? He called the attention of the President, in the only way it would have received attention—through a resignation—to the fact that the Attorney General's office had been imposed upon. They now admit that it was imposed upon. They now vacate the proceedings which had been taken. They now revoke the order of postponement. They now admit that the cases demand speedy trial.

But unfairly, unjustly, and with pure hypocrisy they accuse the officer who called their attention to the circumstances and say that he is at fault. Manliness, such as I would have expected from the Christian, moral gentleman occupying the White House, would have required him to ask the district attorney to withdraw his resignation and try these cases, he being most familiar with them. They have now accepted the resignation of the district attorney and have dismissed the white-slave-act officer who worked up the case.

I suspect the elder Caminetti and possibly the junior Caminetti may be quite willing to have the case speedily tried, when the few men who were familiar with the case and who have worked it up are fired out of the service before anyone else has time to learn all the circumstances of the case.

But what was the excuse offered by the Attorney General for his order? The Attorney General admits that he received a report from Mr. McNab stating that there might be attempts to interfere with the due course of justice by improper influence. He admits that he has such records on his files. If he had admitted the truth complete he would have admitted that he had several letters, as I am informed, from Mr. McNab to the same effect and tenor. But he received a telephone message from another Cabinet officer.

Mr. Chairman, it is one of the peculiarities of service in the House of Representatives that Members here after a while take all public officials as somewhat in the nature of a joke, and never give too serious importance to the man and his office, with the possible exception, which I hope is generally true, that of the office of the President and the man occupying it, because we all bow respectfully before the office of President and the man who occupies the place, whoever he may be, though usually it is better for a man occupying the place not to give out too many newspaper statements or interviews if he does not desire to be criticized. But the new Cabinet officers up here seem to have an exaggerated importance in their own eyes and an exaggerated idea of the influence of each, and when a former Member of this House, a distinguished Member, who might telephone to 40 Members of this House and then go and see them if he wanted to—they would be treated upon terms of equality—he telephones to the Attorney General's office, and the Attorney General says that—

Without stopping to go through the files and so refresh my recollection concerning any particular circumstances of the case, I sent the following telegram to the district attorney ordering him to postpone the case.

What sort of a Department of Justice is it; what kind of an Attorney General is it who, having on file from the district attorney statements to the effect that people were endeavoring to thwart the administration of justice and to bribe or buy the witnesses of the Government, on a telephone message from so great a man as even a Cabinet officer, without investigation, without reference in his department, without stopping, as he says, to examine the files, orders the case postponed, which in all probability would have meant to have the case dismissed or ended? No doubt the Attorney General is a great lawyer and a great man. But if the Democratic administration intends to proceed upon the theory that when a Cabinet officer telephones the Attorney General, or when some wealthy defendant, as happened in the Western Fuel case, walks into the office of the Attorney General and asks to have a case postponed, it is done, there will not be many Democratic administrations in the next hundred years. [Applause on the Republican side.]

We demand the enforcement of these laws. We demand that the Attorney General, before he sends an order to drop or postpone a white-slave case or other case, shall stop to examine the files in his office. What kind of an excuse would that be if offered by a clerk in the law office of one of the gentlemen here? What kind of an excuse would it be for one of the gentlemen here, practicing law, to give to his client, "I dismissed your case. I did not stop to examine the files in the office to see whether you had a good case or what the circumstances were"?

The excuse offered is worse than the offense, and offered for the purpose of casting ignominy upon one official in the Department of Justice who has had bravery, who has had courage, who has known how to do things. [Applause on the Republican side.] This district attorney might have sent a letter to the Attorney General, as he suggests, reiterating what he had already said two or three times, and he would have been dismissed for refusing to obey the directions of the Attorney General. But Mr. McNab, rising superior to place, looking up to more lofty heights than drawing a salary, knew that the way to attract the attention of the country and to obtain consideration by the administration was to do what he did, flash his resignation over the wires to the President, calling attention to the facts; not imputing motives, not accusing the office of wrongdoing, but calling attention to the facts which he had already reported to the Department of Justice. And by so doing he has made the President and the Attorney General not only to beg the question but to eat their words. [Applause on the Republican side.] He deserves a tribute from the good people of this country, which I have no doubt he will at least receive in their hearts. [Applause.]

Mr. HARRISON of New York. Mr. Chairman, if no other gentleman desires to address the committee, I ask for the reading of the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 4. That any person subject to the jurisdiction of the United States who shall, either as principal or as accessory, receive or have in his possession, or conceal on board of or transport on any foreign or domestic vessel or other water craft or railroad car or other vehicle destined to or bound from the United States or any possession thereof, any smoking opium or opium prepared for smoking, or who, having knowledge of the presence in or on any such vessel, water craft, or vehicle of such article, shall not report the same to the principal officer thereof, shall be subject to the penalty provided in section 2 of this act. Whenever on trial for violation of this section the defendant is shown to have or to have had possession of such opium, such possession shall be deemed sufficient evidence to authorize conviction, unless the defendant shall explain the possession to the satisfaction of the jury: Provided, however, That any master of a vessel or other water craft, or person in charge of a railroad car or other vehicle, shall not be liable under this section if he shall satisfy the jury that he had no knowledge and used due diligence to prevent the presence of such article in or on such carrier, and any such article shall be forfeited and shall be destroyed.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I notice this section provides—

That any person subject to the jurisdiction of the United States—

And section 6 has the same provision. This section relates to the carrying of these drugs upon a foreign or domestic vessel, wherever it may be, as I take it, bound to or from the United States, and limits the control to a citizen of the United States. Now, section 6, using also the words—

Subject to the jurisdiction of the United States—

relates to the question of exportation. If there is a reason, as I can see there might be, for our legislating as to persons who are citizens of the United States, thought they may be in the China Sea, what reason is there for permitting a foreigner to export opium from the United States when we forbid a citizen of the United States to export opium?

Mr. HARRISON of New York. As I read the bill, that would not be the case, because if a foreigner were in this country or in any of our possessions he would then be subject to the jurisdiction of the United States

Mr. MANN. Well, not necessarily.

Mr. HARRISON of New York. Of course, the gentleman understands the use of that phrase. It avoids the question as to whether a Filipino or a native of Porto Rico has any right to citizenship.

Mr. MANN. Take section 5. You have not avoided that.

That no smoking opium or opium prepared for smoking shall be admitted into the United States for transportation to another country.

Mr. HARRISON of New York. Smoking opium would not be admitted into the Philippines under the opium-exclusion act.

Mr. MANN. That may all be, but supposing it is there. It is not admitted into the United States. The same reasoning is as true of one as of the other.

Mr. HARRISON of New York. This only relates to the question of transshipment.

Mr. MANN. I understand that you do not want to permit transshipment from the Philippines any more than from here. It is much more likely to be transshipped from the Philippines, near to China, than it is from the United States. I think that could be corrected by adding, after the words "United States," on page 4, line 4, the words "or any possession thereof."

Mr. HARRISON of New York. I think the gentleman's contention is correct, and if he will offer that amendment I will accept it.

Mr. GARDNER. I suggest in lieu of that that the words "from territory under its control or jurisdiction" be substituted. That covers more than "possession thereof."

Mr. MANN. In some places in the bill they have it one way and in some the other. Has the gentleman from Massachusetts a proposition concerning that?

Mr. GARDNER. I simply suggest it.

Mr. MANN. Now, may I ask one more question? At the bottom of page 3, in reference to transportation of these articles by carriers, it says—

Shall not be liable under this section if he shall satisfy the jury that he had no knowledge and used due diligence to prevent the presence of such articles in or on such carrier.

The word "carrier" there may be correctly used, although in all my experience on the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, where carriers were under constant discussion from the 1st of January until the 31st of December, I never heard the term "carrier" applied to the vehicle by which the article was carried.

Mr. HARRISON of New York. Does the gentleman from Illinois maintain that it is not a correct use of language?

Mr. MANN. I am afraid it is not a correct use of a legal term, and I wondered whether it would not be possible, at the risk of duplication, to insert the language "vessel, water craft, car, or other vehicle."

Mr. HARRISON of New York. I think that would be a reasonable amendment.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman from New York and I both know that a bill of this sort when it becomes a law is submitted to every legal critical test which the ingenuity of high-priced lawyers can devise. You are not going to stop the smuggling of opium, you are not going to stop the smoking of opium, you are not going to control opium by any legislation; all you can do, at best, is to go as far as you can. There will be people prosecuted constantly.

Mr. HARRISON of New York. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry. Is there another amendment pending?

Mr. MANN. I have moved to strike out the last word; that is all. Mr. Chairman, I move to amend, at the top of page 4, by striking out the word "carrier," in the first line, and inserting in place thereof the words "vessel, water craft, car, or other vehicle."

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend, page 4, by striking out the word "carrier," in the beginning of line 1, and inserting the words "vessel, water craft, car, or other vehicle."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois.

The amendment was considered and agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 5. That no smoking opium or opium prepared for smoking shall be admitted into the United States for transportation to another country, nor shall such opium be transferred or transshipped from one vessel to another vessel within any waters of the United States for immediate exportation or any other purpose.

Mr. GARDNER. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 4, line 4, insert, after the words "United States," the following: "or into any territory under the control or jurisdiction thereof."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word, to call attention of the gentleman to the fact that there is no penalty provided for section 5. Of course it is worthless without a penalty.

Mr. HARRISON of New York. It does not permit the admission of opium at all into the United States. There is a penalty under section 2 for the introduction of smoking opium into the United States.

Mr. MANN. Section 1 prohibits smoking opium being imported into the United States, and that is all this does.

Mr. HARRISON of New York. This has reference entirely to the shipping in bond, and if the customs officials are not allowed to receive it in bond that is the end of it.

Mr. MANN. I thought possibly it referred to that part of the bill which is set out in the report where they bring vessels within the 3-mile limit and take the opium from one vessel and put it upon another. The report says that that was a common practice. If it be a common practice, the opium is not imported into the United States except for transportation, and I suspect I may be wrong about that.

Mr. HARRISON of New York. I should suppose, Mr. Chairman, that the provisions of section 4 would provide a sufficient penalty. Persons who are attempting to do this transshipping would fall under the provisions of section 4, and be submitted to the penalties therein provided.

Mr. MANN. Of course, section 4 does not apply to Chinamen out on the Pacific coast who do not get into the United States. If they get the opium and go to Mexico, you can not punish them for anything that they have done.

Mr. HARRISON of New York. No law that we could pass would apply to them, and I would say to the gentleman from Illinois that there are very few of them out there who do not get into the United States.

Mr. MANN. Oh, yes; a law would apply to them. Of course, we would have to catch them before applying the law, but we can apply it within the 3-mile limit or anywhere within the United States.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the pro forma amendment will be withdrawn and the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 6. That hereafter it shall be unlawful for any person subject to the jurisdiction of the United States to export or cause to be exported from the United States, or from territory under its control or jurisdiction, or from countries in which the United States exercises extraterritorial jurisdiction, any opium or cocaine, or any salt, derivative, or preparation of opium or cocaine, to any country which prohibits their entry or to any country which regulates their entry: Provided, That opium or cocaine and salts, derivatives, or preparations thereof, except smoking opium or opium prepared for smoking, the exportation of which is hereby absolutely prohibited, may be exported to countries regulating their entry under regulations to be prescribed by the Secretary of State, the Secretary of the Treasury, and the Secretary of Commerce.

The Secretary of State shall request all foreign Governments to communicate through the diplomatic channels copies of laws and regulations promulgated in their respective countries which prohibit or regulate the importation of the aforesaid drugs, and when received advise the Secretary of the Treasury and the Secretary of Commerce thereof; whereupon the Secretary of State, the Secretary of the Treasury, and the Secretary of Commerce shall make and publish all proper regulations for carrying the provisions of this section into effect.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. May I ask why we should not prohibit absolutely the exportation of opium and cocaine from the United States to any other country anywhere in the world and then follow it with the provision that to the countries that have regulations for its admission we may export it?

Mr. HARRISON of New York. Mr. Chairman, that was the language of the original act as I believe it was drawn by the gentleman from Illinois, and he may contend that it is better form, but I think the same purpose is accomplished by the language here.

Mr. MANN. I am not so entirely certain that it is possible in a criminal proceeding—and I believe this is a criminal proceeding—to indict and convict a man for shipping opium to some country, the right to do so depending upon what the law in that country is to-day, which law may be changed to-morrow—not depending upon the law of this country, but depending upon the law of another country—without any knowledge perhaps on the part of the person who ships the opium. If you would make an absolute prohibition, that question can not arise, and then it could be followed with the provision permitting the exportation to those countries which do permit the importation of opium under regulation. I do not think we ought to send it to any country where it is not admitted under regulations. In that event you would have the whole question covered.

Mr. HARRISON of New York. I am inclined to think the gentleman from Illinois is incorrect in stating that this language would submit an exporter of the United States to a penalty under a change in a foreign law. It is not the foreign law which makes him a breaker of our law, but it is an infringement after the promulgation of that foreign law and of the domestic regulation which is here made by the three Cabinet officers selected by the bill.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman is mistaken. Here is a prohibition. That is the law that is violated. The rest is a permission to violate it under certain circumstances, and if you indict a man you must indict him on the ground that he is exporting the opium to another country which prohibits its entry or to a country which regulates its entry.

Mr. HARRISON of New York. Mr. Chairman, I am inclined to think the gentleman from Illinois is correct, and if he will propose an amendment to that effect, I will accept it.

Mr. MANN. I would suggest to prohibit the exportation to any other country, and then strike out the provision which prohibits their entry or to any country which regulates their entry.

Mr. HARRISON of New York. I think that would cover the case.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I move to amend by inserting, on page 4, line 15, before the word "country," the word "other," and by striking out lines 15, 16, and 17, down to and including the word "entry."

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend, page 4, line 15, by inserting, after the word "any," the word "other," and by striking out the remainder of the line after the word "country" and the lines 16 and 17 down to and including the word "entry," being the language "which prohibits their entry or to any country which regulates their entry."

Mr. GARDNER. Mr. Chairman, my attention was distracted for a moment and I did not hear the reasons which the gentleman from Illinois advanced in behalf of his amendment.

Mr. MANN. With the amendment I have offered it prohibits the exportation of opium to any other country. That is a prohibition. Then it permits the exportation to countries which permit its importation. Now, without that, if you take the language as it stands, you have to indict a man for the violation of a prohibited thing, and I doubt whether you could make it stick, so that a man could be indicted for shipping opium to a country which prohibits its entry to-day and perhaps does not prohibit it to-morrow, or does not prohibit it to-day and does to-morrow. My amendment prohibits the exportation, but whenever they make their regulations permitting the exportation, then you can export to those countries.

Mr. GARDNER. Well, Mr. Chairman, the gentleman's idea is that the language is redundant. The way the gentleman suggests amending it, then, makes the language in lines 19 and 20 redundant. "The importation of which is hereby absolutely prohibited" becomes redundant, applying to smoking opium.

Mr. MANN. Oh, I think not.

Mr. GARDNER. As this bill is drawn it prohibits the exportation of all kinds of opium except to countries which regulate?

Mr. MANN. Yes. Oh, it is possible it might be redundant, but still you have to put in the words "smoking opium."

Mr. GARDNER. I do not see any objection to making the change, but I felt a little hesitation. I remember that the question came up in the committee. We did not go very thoroughly into the question as to the reason for that apparently redundant language. Does the gentleman from New York [Mr. HARRISON] remember that that question was raised in the committee? Is it the opinion of the gentleman from New York that the point of the gentleman from Illinois is well taken?

Mr. HARRISON of New York. It satisfies me that the gentleman from Illinois is correct and that this cures what otherwise might be an evasion of the law.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the gentleman from Illinois.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 7. That any person who exports or causes to be exported any of the aforesaid drugs in violation of the preceding section shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $5,000 nor less than $100 or by imprisonment for any time not exceeding two years, or both. And one-half of any fine recovered from any person or persons convicted of an offense under any section of this act may be paid to the person or persons giving information leading to such recovery, and one-half of any bail forfeited and collected in any proceedings brought under this act may be paid to the person or persons giving the information which led to the institution of such proceedings, if so directed by the court exercising jurisdiction in the case.

Mr. GARDNER. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Add at the end of section 7 the following: "Provided, That no payment for any information shall be made to any officer or employee of the United States."

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. GARDNER. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word, for the purpose of asking a question of the gentleman from New York. It has just been called to my attention that under section 7 the minimum penalty for the exportation of drugs is made $100, whereas by section 2 the minimum penalty for the importation of drugs is made $50. I have been asked the reason for that apparent discrimination and am unable to explain it.

Mr. HARRISON of New York. Well, there is no explanation except they are different offenses, and it is possible we might provide different penalties for their infraction of the laws.

Mr. GARDNER. Then, it is presumably a greater offense to export narcotics than to import them?

Mr. HARRISON of New York. Well, measured by the minimum penalty, the gentleman is logical at least.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, there being no logic in the comparison suggested by the gentleman from Massachusetts, as admitted by the gentleman from New York, author of the bill, leads me to suggest that probably this difference was in the original draft of the bill that came from the State Department. One would suppose so distinguished a body as the under officers of the State Department, which publishes the laws and has them in their control, would learn in the course of time what is the policy of Congress concerning certain forms of legislation. When we passed the penal code, a few years ago, with the aid of a number of distinguished gentlemen, including the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. SHERLEY], we struck out of it all minimum penalties and there was no place in the penal code that provides a minimum penalty. There is no place for a minimum penalty at the best; provide a maximum penalty and leave the rest to the courts. And, were it not for my great affection for this bill, I should have moved at the outset to strike out the minimum penalty in the first section where it appears, because we usually have done that in every bill since the time the penal code was passed. There is no sense in it. The rest of the penal code does not have a minimum penalty.

Mr. HARRISON of New York. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] is perfectly correct in reference to the present policy of Congress on these matters, and, recognizing that, I struck out of the third bill the minimum penalty which it originally had contained when first introduced by the late Mr. Foster, of Vermont. It is only through inadvertence that a minimum penalty at all is carried in the section to which the gentleman is now addressing himself. But inasmuch as there is a minimum penalty under the old opium-exclusion act, which penalty we can not change in this legislation without the danger of making ex post facto laws, I think we had better carry a minimum penalty in here, only I believe it would be proper to make it the same amount as the minimum penalty in section 2 of the bill, and I therefore move to amend section 7 by striking out in line 12 the sum "$100" and inserting in place thereof the sum "$50."

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend, page 5, line 12, by striking out "$100" and inserting in lieu thereof "$50."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. FOWLER. Mr. Chairman, the amendment which is offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GARDNER] was a proviso amendment. That left in line 21 a period after the word "case." I suggest the punctuation ought to be changed so that the period would have a brother just above it, making it a colon.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is informed that the change has already been made.

Mr. FOWLER. All right.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 8. That whenever opium or cocaine or any preparations or derivatives thereof shall be found upon any vessel arriving at any port of the United States which is not shown upon the vessel's manifest, as is provided by sections 2806 and 2807 of the Revised Statutes, such vessel shall be liable for the penalty prescribed in section 2809 of the Revised Statutes and may be subject to seizure and forfeiture in default of the payment of such penalty.

Also the following committee amendment:

Amend, page 6, line 3, by inserting after the word "penalty" the words "and forfeiture."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the committee amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Also the following committee amendment:

Line 4, after the word "statutes," strike out the comma and the remainder of the section up to the period.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HARRISON of New York. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise and report the bill to the House with the recommendation that the amendments be agreed to and that the bill as amended do pass.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. SIMS, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill (H. R. 1966) to amend an act entitled "An act to prohibit the importation and use of opium for other than medicinal purposes," approved February 9, 1909, and directed him to report the same to the House with certain amendments, with the recommendation that the amendments be agreed to, and that the bill as amended do pass.

The SPEAKER. Is a separate vote demanded on any amendment? If not, the Chair will put them in gross.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. HARRISON of New York, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill as amended was passed was laid on the table.

HEIRS OF ANGELO ALBANO (H. DOC. NO. 105).

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following message from the President of the United States, which was read and, with the accompanying papers, was referred to the Committee on Foreign Affairs and ordered printed:

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

I transmit herewith a report from the Secretary of State in relation to the case of Angelo Albano, an Italian subject, who on September 20, 1910, was, while in custody on a charge of crime at Tampa, Fla., seized by an armed mob and killed, and I recommend that, as an act of grace and without reference to the question of the liability of the United States, Congress make suitable provision for the heirs of the Italian subject thus killed, the proceeds to be distributed by the Italian Government in such manner as it may deem proper.

WOODROW WILSON.

THE WHITE HOUSE, June 26, 1913.

REGISTRATION OF PERSONS DEALING IN OPIUM, ETC.

Mr. HARRISON of New York. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the present consideration of the bill H. R. 6282.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York [Mr. HARRISON] moves that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the present consideration of the bill H. R. 6282. The question is on agreeing to that motion.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill (H. R. 6282) to provide for the registration of, with collectors of internal revenue, and to impose a special tax upon, all persons who produce, import, manufacture, compound, deal in, dispense, sell, distribute, or give away opium or coca leaves, their salts, derivatives, or preparations, and for other purposes, with Mr. CULLOP in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is now in the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill H. R. 6282, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read the title of the bill, as follows:

A bill (H. R. 6282) to provide for the registration of, with collectors of internal revenue, and to impose a special tax upon, all persons who produce, import, manufacture, compound, deal in, dispense, sell, distribute, or give away opium or coca leaves, their salts, derivatives, or preparations, and for other purposes.

Mr. HARRISON of New York. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to dispense with the first reading of the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman that the first reading of the bill be dispensed with? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Mr. HARRISON of New York. Mr. Chairman, this is the third and last one of this series of bills attempting to control and regulate the traffic in narcotics, and in some particulars it is of more importance to the people of the United States than either of the two other bills which have just been passed by the House.

The bill H. R. 6282 is the outcome of a long series of conferences between members of the Committee on Ways and Means and officials of the State and Treasury Departments and representatives of the various trades which will be affected by the enforcement of the provisions of this bill.

The legislation, as I recollect it, was first proposed to the House by bills introduced, respectively, by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] and the gentleman from Vermont, Mr. Foster, now deceased. The first was a bill regulating interstate commerce in narcotics, and was therefore referred to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, and the bill introduced by the late Representative Foster, of Vermont, attempted to regulate these matters by the taxing power of the Government, and was therefore referred to the Committee on Ways and Means. Upon the decease of the gentleman from Vermont, who was one of the most useful and most admired and one of the finest Members of this House, I was asked by the representatives of the State Department, who had kept in touch with the legislation in all its phases, to introduce the same bill, and I did so in the last Congress.

From time to time I have introduced new bills, as the plans of those who were studying this matter were further developed; and the bill H. R. 6282, introduced on the 23d of June, 1913, and reported out the same day, or the next day, to the House with a favorable recommendation, upon a unanimous vote of the Committee on Ways and Means, is the last and, I hope, the final draft of the legislation which so many persons have painstakingly worked to perfect.

Mr. MANN rose.

Mr. HARRISON of New York. Does the gentleman wish to interrupt me?

Mr. MANN. I wanted to ask the gentleman about one provision of this bill. Perhaps it is unnecessary. The bill provides that the collector of internal revenue shall furnish blank forms for ordering all these drugs, and that he has to put upon each blank, as he sells them, the name of the purchaser, so that if a man has a drug store on one corner he must use the blank with his name on it when he buys any of these drugs. He can not loan his blank to the man who has a drug store on another corner, although the blank is identical and the same. Now, why is it not perfectly sufficient to sell these blanks so that wholesale or distributing houses will buy them and furnish them to their customers?

Mr. HARRISON of New York. Mr. Chairman, the only objection I can see to that would be that it would relax slightly the restrictions which we are placing upon the trade; and, in my opinion, the bill has already in its final form conceded all the reasonable requests of the different trade interests in so far as they do not prejudice the principles which we are trying to enact. I should very much regret to see the bill still further relaxed.

Mr. MANN. Here is a bill which is extreme, necessarily extreme, and which proposes that no man can buy opium unless he is registered, and no man can sell opium unless he is registered; and no man can buy opium unless he buys it on a blank which he purchases from the Government and sends to the person from whom he purchases, keeping a copy of his order, so that each one has a copy of the order. Now, that, to that extent, would be the most drastic legislation that ever was enacted in this country for the purchase and sale of any article. But to say, in addition to that, that he not only has to make his order on a blank printed by the Government and furnished to him, but he has also to pay a dollar and buy blank orders with his own name written or printed on them in the first place would really seem to me as though we were running almost to the point of absurdity.

Mr. HARRISON of New York. Mr. Chairman, curiously enough, the representatives of the trade interests were very anxious to have us substitute the duplicate-order system for the system which was carried in the original bill.

Mr. MANN. I am not criticizing the duplicate-order proposition.

Mr. HARRISON of New York. They thought that was much more lenient and much more practicable than the stamping and marking provision which we had incorporated from similar provisions of the pure-food act, of which the distinguished gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] was the author.

Mr. MANN. The pure-food act was drawn all the way through so as to inconvenience as little as possible the men who are doing business. Here, under this provision, if I am a druggist on the corner and I send down for a dollar's worth of blanks—how many I can get for a dollar I do not know, but I can not get less than a dollar's worth—I have my name on these blanks; and if I lose the blanks, as I certainly would if I were a druggist, then if I want to buy some opium I can not borrow another blank from another druggist, although track of it could be kept just as well in that way. What difference does it make? The name of the purchaser must be on the blank when he buys the drug. He has to keep a copy of that, and the wholesaler or the jobber has to keep a copy of it.

Mr. HARRISON of New York. I have already said to the gentleman—and I do not believe I can add anything to the strength of my statement—that it is only to tighten it all up.

Mr. MANN. The original bill that was drawn in reference to getting an internal-revenue tax upon the sale of opium was brought to me to introduce, I believe, several years ago, and I declined to introduce it. Of course, it imposed a considerable tax. I said to Dr. Wright and other gentlemen who were interested in it that there was no use figuring upon that, that they could never pass a law which put a $5 or $10 tax upon every retail druggist in the country if he sold opium, in addition to the other internal-revenue taxes which the druggist had to pay. I said it was not sensible, that it was not fair, and whether it was or not did not make any difference, that the retail druggists would have influence enough in this body to defeat it.

Mr. HARRISON of New York. Of course, we have not got that provision in this bill.

Mr. MANN. I understand that, but if you make this law onerous, so that the retail druggists can not work conveniently under it, you will find that they will repeal it.

Mr. HARRISON of New York. Mr. Chairman, in answer to the very point raised by the gentleman from Illinois, I will give the committee the names of the associations whose delegates and representatives actually took part in the framing of this law.

It is probably true that every law reforming drug and medical practice has proceeded originally from the drug trade or the doctors themselves; and representatives of the leading drug houses of America not only appeared before our committee advocating legislation but they actually took part in the framing of the bill. Representatives of Lehn & Finck and Schieffelin & Co., of New York; of Powers & Weightman, of Philadelphia; of Parke, Davis & Co., of Detroit; and Dr. Dohme, of Sharp & Dohme, of Baltimore, were among those who have cooperated with us, as well as delegates from the National Association of Manufacturers of Medicinal Products, the American Association of Pharmaceutical Chemists, the National Wholesale Druggists' Association, the American Pharmaceutical Association, and the National Association of Retail Druggists.

There is an executive committee of the National Drug Trade Conference. They have held two conventions in Washington within the last six months, and their representatives have been to see me a number of times, and have worked most earnestly to frame a bill which will be practical, which will not be too onerous upon the drug trade, and which still will accomplish the very worthy and laudable purpose of this legislation.

The bill as it stands in its final form is the outcome of a conference about a month ago in my office, at which the representatives of most of these associations were present, and when we finally agreed upon the bill, a statement was attached to it by Mr. John C. Wallace, of Pennsylvania, chairman of the executive committee of the National Drug Trade Conference, and countersigned by Mr. Charles M. Woodruff, the secretary of that same committee, stating that the bill had their thorough support and approval.

I say to the gentleman from Illinois that I agree entirely with the statement he has made. The original provisions for internal-revenue tax with the requirements for registration and stamping were impracticable, and were so objectionable to the druggists that they would have been strong enough and reasonable enough in their arguments to prevent their passage through Congress. We have eliminated all of those difficulties. We have reduced the bill in its last analysis to the simplest form that we could, and we have the hearty cooperation and active support of all the leading drug trades. These gentlemen have gone to their homes, and they have told me that they would do the best they could to help create sentiment favorable to the bill, just as it stands. I represented to them the dreadful fate which overtook Members of Congress whenever we tried to introduce a reform measure imposing unreasonable restrictions on the trades interested, and I depicted to them the avalanche of protests and letters that Members of Congress would receive if we did not get a bill to which all could agree to give their support. They told me that they would do their best to spare us in that department of our public duties, by going home and supporting the bill, because it was workable and was the only bill that we found that was workable.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I again congratulate the gentleman from New York on his successful handling of the matter. The fact that it has been a successful handling is shown and proven by the fact that we have not been overwhelmed with an avalanche of protests from retail druggists throughout the country. I called attention to what I did merely for the purpose of attracting the attention of the gentleman from New York; and if he is under a sort of agreement not to interfere with these portions of the bill I have no desire to interfere with them.

I want to call attention at this time to a provision in the bill which has just been passed in reference to having opium in possession on board vessels, water craft, railroad cars, or other vehicles. I just sent for a copy of the Revised Statutes in order to look up the definition of "vehicles." I find that the word "vehicles" includes every description of carriage, or other artificial contrivance, "used or capable of being used as a means of transportation on land." When that description was written in the Revised Statutes it was in conjunction with a description of a vessel, which included all kinds of water craft on sea; but we have now a new means of communication which is neither on water or on land, which it is perfectly feasible to use for the importation of opium in both Canada and Mexico.

This bill ought to include in this provision in reference to finding opium on vessels any form of air vessel. I hope that if it is not done here the gentleman will have it done in the Senate.

Mr. HARRISON of New York. Mr. Chairman, the point raised by the gentleman from Illinois was discussed during the progress of writing these bills; and I was not as wise as the gentleman from Illinois, because I did not make the research that he has just made, my contention being that the word "vehicle" would cover an airship, a balloon, or any other craft.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman was perfectly natural in that, but having a recollection in my mind, owing to my long service in respect to interstate transportation, that there was a definition of that word, I sent and obtained it. It does no include airships.

Mr. SISSON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HARRISON of New York. Certainly.

Mr. SISSON. I would like to ask the gentleman a question in reference to the administrative features of the bill, on page 4. I notice there a provision respecting physicians, dentists, and veterinary surgeons registered under this act. What machinery is necessary to require a physician to be registered under this act?

Mr. HARRISON of New York. The registration provision, which is one of the two principal features of the bill, is found in the first section of the bill.

Mr. SISSON. It speaks of the physician, dentist, and veterinary surgeon. Does it require the physician, dentist, and veterinary surgeon who may administer these drugs to be registered?

Mr. HARRISON of New York. It does.

Mr. SISSON. Then it requires in the same section, on lines 8, 9, 10, and on page 4, that the physician, dentist, or veterinary surgeon shall be in personal attendance upon such patient. Suppose a patient were sick or were addicted to the use of the drug, would it be necessary for the patient to have a doctor to come and visit him, and in addition to that have a prescription written, and then take the prescription to the druggist and have each prescription filled attached to a physician's bill?

Mr. HARRISON of New York. No; because the exemption of this proviso allows the physician to acquire the drug, and that is the only way in which it is lawful to acquire it, namely, by registration.

Mr. SISSON. That is true. Perhaps I did not make myself plain; but would the patient have to have a new visit from the doctor and a new prescription and be compelled to pay for it every time he went to him?

Mr. HARRISON of New York. I know of no better way to control it than that, and I will say to the gentleman from Mississippi that that probably would be found in almost all State laws.

Mr. SISSON. That is true. In most of the State laws there is provision for the refilling of a prescription without a new visit of the doctor. For this reason: You have an unfortunate person, an unfortunate woman, who may be addicted to the use of morphine or some such drug in some form, and the physician, in addition to the first fee he gets—this patient perhaps could not live without the use of it; I do not know that it would produce death—but the physician prescribes it, and under this bill in order that the party may get the drug which they will have it simply means the impoverishment of these people to a certain extent, and the physician and the druggist get the benefit of filling a prescription which is usually higher than the refilling of a prescription, and the patient would be compelled to pay for that visit.

Mr. HARRISON of New York. Mr. Chairman, I share the sympathy of the gentleman from Mississippi for the unfortunate class of persons to whom he has just made reference, but if I were able to restrict their access to the drug by the provisions of this bill, rendering it more difficult and more expensive for them to get the drug, I would be willing to do so.

Mr. SISSON. Well, I think that the bill ought to provide that where the physician gives one prescription and makes one visit then the patient may have an opportunity to have that refilled. Now, it might not affect very many people, but it would affect, I am sure, quite a number, and many of them are very unfortunate, and they appeal of course to our sympathies greatly, and I am unwilling to place an additional penalty to the already fearful condition they are in for the profit of the physicians and the druggists. In other words, suppose a physician had prescribed small quantities of the drug to one person, then there would be repeated visits and expense in only administering a certain small amount, and it would mean that these unfortunates who get the drug would have to pay enormous doctors' fees, which would be vastly more than the drug itself would cost.

Mr. HARRISON of New York. Mr. Chairman, one of the witnesses before the hearings in 1911 in reference to this legislation was Dr. Alexander Lambert, one of the most prominent physicians in New York, and he stated it as his opinion that over half of the cases acquired the habit from doctors' prescriptions, and I invite to the consideration of the gentleman from Mississippi the misfortune that would come in permitting an unrestricted refilling of old prescriptions by persons who in that way acquired the drug habit. There are two horns of this dilemma, and I think we have chosen the lesser.

Mr. SISSON. I realize that the purpose of this bill is to do that which perhaps the States have not already done; I realize that Congress is reaching out for power it was never dreamed Congress should exercise; I realize that this bill goes into the private business of every druggist; I realize, as the gentleman from Illinois says, that it is the most drastic bill Congress has ever passed in reference to the regulation of any trade; I realize fully that the necessity for the legislation is pressing perhaps upon the hearts and consciences of many people; I realize fully the other horn of the dilemma, that when those conditions prevail the Constitution never has within the last 50 years and never will stand in the way; I know that the Constitution will be brushed aside, and positive provisions of the laws will be absolutely ignored; but when we find in a bill of this kind that it may work a very great hardship upon unfortunate children and inmates of the homes, because in many cases they have to furnish the opium to the unfortunate mother or the unfortunate father of the unfortunate member of the family, that in addition it is proposed to impose upon them the right of the physician to charge a fee for the prescription which may not be more than enough to serve two or three days, and therefore you penalize the unfortunate to that extent, I do not believe that ought to be included in a bill of this sort. I think something ought to be left to the discretion of the physician. He would not give a prescription with authority for it to be refilled unless it was one of those cases where he thought the necessities of the case required it.

Therefore it seems to me that a provision in the bill authorizing physicians under certain conditions to refill the prescription might be a great relief to many poor families where they are unfortunate enough to have an inmate of this kind.

Mr. HARRISON of New York. Mr. Chairman, I do not think I can strengthen the argument we have already advanced. I think we have chosen the lesser of two evils, and the good to be accomplished by stopping the ready access to the drugs overbalances all the conditions just pointed out by the gentleman from Mississippi.

Mr. SISSON. So the gentleman will not be willing to agree to an amendment of that kind?

Mr. HARRISON of New York. Not just at this time.

Mr. SISSON. I will state to the gentleman that I feel rather keenly on this proposition. There is one other matter I want to ask him about, and that is in reference to the cost of administration under this bill. Did the committee go into that?

Mr. HARRISON of New York. The Commissioner of Internal Revenue under the last administration, Mr. Cabell, estimated the original bill which was then before him would cost from $125,000 to $150,000 a year to enforce, but that bill was one which also provided an internal-revenue tax and very vexatious stamping features, and was vastly more expensive than the administration of this bill. I am informed that the small fees charged for the stationery and order blanks ought to pay for the printing.

Mr. SISSON. It is, of course, dependent upon the amount of espionage which the Government desires to make on this trade. If they go at it with a vengeance it seems to me that there is practically no limit to the cost.

Mr. HARRISON of New York. We have no control over that. The gentleman's Committee on Appropriations would prevent any excessive or undue expenditure.

Mr. SISSON. Do you make any provision here for paying the expenses under this bill?

Mr. HARRISON of New York. Yes. We have a provision in section 11 of $150,000, but I think I may with confidence state to the gentleman from Mississippi that the bill will produce at least $200,000 a year in revenue.

Mr. SISSON. You think the bill, then, as far as this appropriation is concerned, will produce sufficient income to wipe out the expenses?

Mr. HARRISON of New York. That is my idea.

Mr. SISSON. Of course, I have not had any opportunity to investigate it, and have no information at all, but the gentleman from New York can at once see if the espionage is very great the expenses would very rapidly outgrow this appropriation here—I mean would outgrow the income from these small fees charged here. I would like, if the gentleman would do so, that he would accept an amendment so as to leave it within the discretion of a physician as to whether he would give a patient a prescription to be refilled.

Mr. HARRISON of New York. I would not be disposed to accept that amendment. Of course, it is not in order just now; so the gentleman from Mississippi and I will have time for further reflection while the bill is proceeding on its course.

Mr. COOPER. Will the gentleman permit one question?

Mr. HARRISON of New York. With pleasure.

Mr. COOPER. Can the gentleman tell me whether there is a provision in existing law or in the bill requiring that opium imported shall have the word "opium" upon the package outside?

Mr. HARRISON of New York. The opium-exclusion act of 1909 prohibited the importation of any opium, and then went on to say "except medicinal opium under regulations to be prescribed by the Secretary of the Treasury," and those regulations are specific as to the strength of the opium. It must not have less than 9 per cent of morphia. But I am unable with perfect confidence to state what the gentleman asks, although I think the container and the stamp are distinctive, so that people know what it is.

Mr. COOPER. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman will pardon me, the bill provides now, for example, as follows:

Provided, That any master of a vessel or any other water craft, or person in charge of a railroad car or other vehicle, shall not be liable under this section if he shall satisfy the jury that he had no knowledge and used due diligence to prevent the presence of such an article in or on such carrier—

And so forth.

It would be very difficult, indeed, to prove that the hands on a railroad train would know there was any opium in a package or box that did not contain the word "opium" on the outside. And I was of the opinion after reading it that there ought to be a specific requirement of the law that each package shall be so branded, and anyone failing to so brand the package shall, because of that fact alone, be amenable to punishment.

Mr. HARRISON of New York. That would be a very wise provision, in my opinion, as to imported opium in bulk, and I believe it is in the regulations of the department. But as to all these subdivisions and compounds of the drugs mentioned in this bill, the printing and marking of them, which we so much desired to have in the bill, were found after an exhaustive investigation to be utterly impracticable. It was stated, I think, that the house of Parke Davis & Co. alone make some 3,600 different preparations which would each have to have a different, distinctive mark under the provisions of the bill as it was when first introduced, and it certainly would have caused such vexation among the trade as practically to defeat the whole purpose of the contemplated reform.

Mr. COOPER. There might be some wisdom in not requiring the whole 3,600 to be specifically branded, but there would be great wisdom in requiring that opium and its ordinary derivatives, like morphine and other things of that sort, should be marked on the back, if imported, with the word "opium" or "morphia," because otherwise you could not prove that these people did not use due diligence in trying to ascertain what was in the package.

Mr. HARRISON of New York. We shift the burden upon the defendant to show that he did.

Mr. COOPER. Oh, he might say he asked the man who put it in the cars what it contained, and he replied that it was something of a harmless character. That is all you require of him. He asked the man who sends it, and that man lied to him, and that man is in China and the other man is over here.

Mr. HARRISON of New York. He has to do that to the satisfaction of the jury.

Mr. COOPER. Then, Mr. Chairman, there is another section in the bill about which I wish to inquire. Section 8 provides that—whenever opium or cocaine or any preparations or derivatives thereof shall be found upon any vessel arriving at any port of the United States which is not shown upon the vessel's manifest—

there shall be certain penalties inflicted. Now this opium can be brought in in a vessel that comes from a Canadian port into a United States port, and it can come in on a train of cars from Canada, and there is no provision about inflicting a punishment for the introduction of opium imported on a train of cars from Canada, making the train or the company liable as you make the owner of a vessel liable.

Mr. HARRISON of New York. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Wisconsin, I believe, is addressing himself to the previous bill which just passed the House. Those matters were under discussion during the consideration of that bill, and the point that the gentleman from Wisconsin now makes was made then, though perhaps not quite so clearly as he now makes it. I suppose this difference or distinction as to ships rested upon the fact that our navigation laws have always given the administration, the executive department, more control over vessels than the Government has ever had over railroad trains. I suppose the very nature of the boat makes that possible and advisable.

Mr. COOPER. Mr. Chairman, I want to say, in conclusion, that those provisions as they stand would, it seems to me, exactly suit any person who intends to smuggle opium into this country.

Mr. HARRISON of New York. The law as it stands at present seems to exactly suit a great many smugglers, and those are the people we are trying to get after.

Mr. Chairman, I think the questions asked by the gentlemen of the committee have brought out all the information that I intended to state to the committee, but I do not want to conclude my general remarks without making some reference to Dr. Hamilton Wright, of the State Department, to whom is due, more than anybody else, I think, whatever credit may come from these great reforms as to the control of narcotics. Dr. Wright was our commissioner on the International Opium Commission, and is one of our delegates at our international congress, and he has worked hard and efficiently to get these bills in the shape they are now in.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield to me for a question?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from New York yield to the gentleman from Illinois?

Mr. HARRISON of New York. With pleasure.

Mr. MANN. On page 4, under the head of "(C)" there is exempted from the provisions of the section opium which is exported or sold for export. Do I understand that a man who ships opium or sells it for export is not required to make any report?

Mr. HARRISON of New York. This section relates to the provision giving duplicate order blanks, and it is not reasonable to expect that the foreigner, for instance sending to the house of Schieffien & Co., of New York, for medicinal opium, should send that order upon one of our internal-revenue blanks. That is the reason for the exemption.

Mr. MANN. It struck me that possibly whenever anybody had opium in his possession you could trace it into his hands, and if you could not find it, all he would have to do would be to say that he had exported it; because you have no way of tracing what is exported.

Mr. HARRISON of New York. We originally had in the bill a tax upon an exporter of narcotics, and the committee struck out that proposed tax upon the exporter upon the ground that a license tax upon an exporter is a tax upon the exports themselves, which seems to be the weight of authority established by the case of Brown against Maryland, in 1837, and reaffirmed a few years ago in the United States Supreme Court in the case of Fairbank against The United States. In the latter case, an internal-revenue stamp upon a foreign bill of lading, under the Spanish War revenue act, was held to be a tax upon the goods exported, and therefore held to be unconstitutional. We devoted a good deal of time to the study of that, and very reluctantly I was compelled, in deference to the views of the committee, to reintroduce the bill with the word "exporter" left out, for fear it might be unconstitutional.

Mr. GARDNER rose.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from New York yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts?

Mr. HARRISON of New York. Certainly.

Mr. GARDNER. I thought the gentleman had concluded. I rise in my own right.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thought the gentleman from Massachusetts was rising to interrogate the gentleman from New York.

Mr. GARDNER. Mr. Chairman, the minority members of the committee unanimously approved this bill, as they did its two predecessors.

Since the bill was reported there have been one or two small matters arise which I now call to the attention of the gentleman from New York [Mr. HARRISON]. My attention has been called to the definition of the word "person," on page 2, where it says:

That the word "person" as used in this act shall be construed to mean and include a partnership, association, company, or corporation, as well as a natural person.

The question has been asked of me whether this act would not make it very difficult for hospitals to perform their ordinary functions in the dispensing and prescribing of drugs containing these narcotics, to which I replied that I thought hospitals would be excluded under the definition of the word "person"; that the word "person" would not include a hospital. It has been pointed out to me that hospitals are quite often corporations. Is that so?

Mr. HARRISON of New York. It is true that hospitals are often corporations, and it has been said that they are generally so; but I believe they are included in the language of this bill. I will state to the gentleman that it was intended they should be. We exempted them in the previous bills when we had under consideration the stamping and branding and internal-revenue provisions, which were so much more onerous; but we thought, when we had this simple form of ordering on internal-revenue blanks, that there is no hospital in the United States that can not afford to pay a tax of $1 a year. And when they dispense opiates to the patients in the hospital they always do it upon the prescription of a physician. If you open the door any wider than that to hospitals, some institutions might be organized as hospitals for the real purpose of being drug joints.

Mr. GARDNER. Suppose it is a municipal hospital. Would that be included under the word "person"?

Mr. HARRISON of New York. Yes; I think it would be.

Mr. GARDNER. Under which subdivision?

Mr. HARRISON of New York. Under "association," perhaps.

Mr. GARDNER. That question was asked me. I have no amendment to offer.

Mr. HARRISON of New York. I think most of the hospitals in New York City are corporations, anyway.

Mr. GARDNER. I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. MANN. Before the gentleman takes his seat, may I ask him a question in connection with his question in reference to hospitals, and so forth? On page 4, under "a," in section 2, it is provided that the requirement that a person shall give an order before he can get any of these drugs shall not apply—to the dispensing or distribution of any of the aforesaid drug to a patient by a * * * veterinary surgeon registered under this act in the course of his professional practice only: Provided, however, That such * * * veterinary surgeon shall be in personal attendance upon such patient.

In section 4 there is another provision in reference to the delivering of drugs, and so forth:

Provided, That nothing contained in this section shall apply to common carriers engaged in transporting the aforesaid drugs, or to any employee within the scope of his employment, or any person who shall have registered and paid the special tax as required by section 1 of this act, or to the written prescriptions of physicians, dentists, and veterinary surgeons who have registered under this act to those who are under the immediate personal care of such physicians, dentists, and veterinary surgeons.

Who is the patient? Who is under the care of the veterinary surgeon, and who gets the opiate, the cat or the owner, the horse or the man? Certainly the owner of the horse is not the patient. He is not the one who is under the immediate personal care, and you can not deliver the drug to the horse until you get ready to give it to him.

Mr. WILLIS. And then sometimes you can not.

Mr. MANN. And then sometimes it is difficult.

Mr. GARDNER. Mr. Chairman, is the gentleman asking me this question?

Mr. MANN. Yes.

Mr. GARDNER. If the gentleman will draft an amendment which meets the objection that he has raised, I would be very glad to submit it to the consideration of the gentleman from New York. I reserve the remainder of my time.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 2. That it shall be unlawful for any person to sell, barter, exchange, or give away any of the aforesaid drugs except in pursuance of a written order of the purchaser or person to whom such article is given, on a form to be issued in blank for that purpose by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue. Every person who shall accept any such order, and in pursuance thereof shall sell, barter, exchange, or give away any of the aforesaid drugs, shall preserve such order for a period of two years in such a way as to be readily accessible to inspection by any officer, agent, or employee of the Treasury Department duly authorized for that purpose, and the State, Territorial, District, and municipal officials named in section 5 of this act. Every person who shall give an order as herein provided to any other person for any of the aforesaid drugs shall, at or before the time of giving such order, make or cause to be made a duplicate thereof on a form to be issued in blank for that purpose by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, and in case of the acceptance of such order shall preserve such duplicate for said period of two years in such a way as to be readily accessible to inspection by the officers, agents, employees, and officials hereinbefore mentioned. Nothing contained in this section shall apply—

(a) To the dispensing or distribution of any of the aforesaid drugs to a patient by a physician, dentist, or veterinary surgeon registered under this act in the course of his professional practice only: Provided, however, That such physician, dentist, or veterinary surgeon shall be in personal attendance upon such patient.

(b) To the sale, dispensing, or distribution of any of the aforesaid drugs by a pharmacist to a consumer under and in pursuance of a written prescription issued by a physician, dentist, or veterinary surgeon registered under this act: Provided, however, That such prescription shall be dated and shall be signed by the physician, dentist, or veterinary surgeon who shall have issued the same: And provided further, That such pharmacist shall preserve such prescriptions for a period of two years in such a way as to be readily accessible to inspection by the officers, agents, employees, and officials hereinbefore mentioned.

(c) To the sale, exportation, shipment, or delivery of any of the aforesaid drugs by any person within the United States of America to any person in any foreign country.

The Commissioner of Internal Revenue, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, shall cause suitable forms to be prepared for the purposes above mentioned, and shall cause the same to be distributed to collectors of internal revenue for sale by them to those persons who shall have registered and paid the special tax as required by section 1 of this act in their districts, respectively; and no collector shall sell any of such forms to any persons other than a person who has registered and paid the special tax as required by section 1 of this act in his district. The price at which such forms shall be sold by said collectors shall be fixed by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, but shall not exceed the sum of $1 per hundred. Every collector shall keep an account of the number of such forms sold by him, the names of the purchasers, and the number of such forms sold to each of such purchasers. Whenever any collector shall sell any of such forms, he shall cause the name of the purchaser thereof to be plainly written or stamped thereon before delivering the same; and no person other than such purchaser shall use any of said forms bearing the name of such purchaser for the purpose of procuring any of the aforesaid drugs, or furnish any of the forms bearing the name of such purchaser to any person with intent thereby to procure the shipment or delivery of any of the aforesaid drugs. It shall be unlawful for any person to obtain by means of said order forms any of the aforesaid drugs for any purpose other than the use, sale, or distribution thereof by him in the conduct of a lawful business in said articles or in the legitimate practice of his profession.

Mr. SISSON. Mr. Chairman, I move to amend section 2, subsection (a), in line 9, by striking out the word "personal," being the last word in the line.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend, page 4, line 9, by striking out the word "personal."

Mr. SISSON. Mr. Chairman, my purpose in offering that amendment is simply this: If that section with the word "personal" in it should be construed to mean that the physician would have to make a visit to the patient before he could prescribe the drug, this sort of condition might arise: Suppose a man lives 8 or 10 miles in the country, or suppose he lives in the city, for that matter; the physician has put the patient upon a certain treatment, and if he has got to be in personal attendance on such patient at the time he writes the prescription it would necessitate his going and making another visit. He would have to be personally present and look at the patient, and in the country where physicians ride 8 or 10 or 12 or 15 miles, the physician having put the patient under certain treatment, charging—as I believe they do in my country—$2 a mile up until the visit is $10, and then a dollar and a half for each additional mile, if the patient be 10 miles away he would have to pay $15 or $16 in order that the physician might prescribe the very prescription that he knows he is going to give him before he goes out to see the patient the second time. I do not know that any physician had anything to do with this. I do not believe a reputable physician would be a party to this sort of thing, but it might be construed to mean that he would have to be personally present when he administered the drug. If he shall be in attendance upon the patient, if he is going to be construed to be his physician attendant upon the patient, and he has determined or diagnosed the case and has given a remedy which is a drug the essential element of which is opium, it would only be necessary then for him to write a prescription, which is an additional burden that I do not think ought to be placed upon the man getting the prescription filled; but if you put the two burdens on him and require the physician not only to write the prescription again, but to go and see the patient personally, then it might require and might be construed to mean that he would have to be in personal attendance; that he must be actually, physically present with the patient. We must not lose sight of the fact that at last under this bill it will depend upon the physician as to whether he is reputable and knows whether he is giving the drug for an honest purpose or not. You have to trust the physician. Then why not leave it so?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. SISSON. Certainly.

Mr. MANN. Does the gentleman think that the provision is really subject to the interpretation which he fears may be given to it?

Mr. SISSON. I think so.

Mr. MANN. That the physician must go in person to visit the patient at a particular hour or minute?

Mr. SISSON. I think so.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman thinks if I have a physician or dentist in town to whom I occasionally go or send that that person is not in personal attendance upon me as a patient?

Mr. SISSON. I think not.

Mr. MANN. I have great respect for the gentleman's opinion, but I am inclined to think that he is wrong. Look at this side of it. Without that language any man in a large city who wants to do it, who has ever been admitted as a horse doctor or equally disreputable of some other kind, can advertise "opium cure," or something of that sort; not only can do it but do do it now, and issue a doctor's prescription to anyone throughout the Union. Now, that is not a fanciful proposition; that has been done; is being done now in a large degree, meeting the ordinary provision that you could only furnish these drugs upon a physician's prescription, and it is furnished upon his prescription. Now, if you strike out the word "personal," it means, in my opinion, that you ruin the bill as far as that is concerned. Nobody here desires to have it fixed so that every time you give a prescription to a man you know what is the matter with, you have to go and make a new personal examination of him.

Mr. SISSON. Now, Mr. Chairman, I want to state that I believe that the words "shall be in attendance upon such patient" means that he must be physically present. I am perfectly willing that the bill——

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. SISSON. I ask unanimous consent that I may proceed for five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Mississippi? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. SISSON. I will state to the gentleman who has charge of the bill that I have absolutely no objection to the bill clearly showing and clearly stating that it must be a physician in attendance; that he must be a reputable doctor; that he must be a doctor who is waiting on the patient or his family physician, so that there can not be any subterfuge or any dodging of the issue; that the physician shall be a reputable physician, licensed in the community and not doing this business merely for the profit it would be to him; but I am unwilling that this language should remain so that it would be susceptible of this construction that it is necessary that a man shall be personally or officially present at the time when the prescription is issued. And I will not vote for it, and I state to my friend that whatever objections I may have to this bill I would like to have a provision in here that a reputable physician may issue a refill prescription. I realize that after reflection——

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SISSON. In a moment. I realize, after reflection, that there are many physicians throughout the country who might take advantage of this and might give these refill prescriptions where reputable physicians would not do it and actually avoid the provisions of this bill, and therefore I shall not insist upon it, but I will insist upon this amendment unless they will shape the bill so that it clearly indicates that a reputable physician may be in attendance upon the patient without having to go personally and visit him.

Mr. MANN. Would this satisfy the gentleman from Mississippi to change that language so it would read "or personally attend upon such patient"?

Mr. SISSON. Well, now, does the gentleman believe that would mean that if he had made one visit and given a prescription he would not be forced to make a second visit for the giving of another prescription?

Mr. MANN. Oh, I do not think myself it would force him to make a new visit to the patient if he was giving his personal attention, was his family physician, or something of that sort, but without some word in there requiring personal attention why there is no use in a bill in this respect at all, because, as I say, the present practice will be continued. Quack, bogus, physicians having a degree advertise the sale of prescriptions containing opium as a cure for the opium habit, and that is the usual way they get their lists.

Mr. SISSON. I will say to the gentleman in charge of the bill that I am in sympathy with the object and purpose of it, but the language in the bill should be so framed that when a physician is in attendance upon a person who is sick, and it is necessary for him to administer opium in any form, and he believes it is necessary to do it, it will not require him to make another additional visit unless he sees it is proper to do so, from a physician's standpoint and not because he is compelled to do it by this proposed law; because I am unwilling that the people of my district who send for physicians who live long distances shall be penalized in this way, because they would be compelled, if my construction of this is a correct one, to pay 10 times what the prescription would be worth in order to get it.

Mr. TEMPLE. I would like to call attention to the fact that this does not apply to the prescriptions at all. That is covered in (b). Subsection (a) applies to the dispensing of the drug directly from the physician to the patient, and I think it is right he should be in personal attendance at that time. It is in the next section that the writing of the prescription is provided for.

Mr. SISSON. You will have to construe the two together. The first applies to physicians, the second applies to drugs; one to the regulation of the doctors and the other to the regulation of druggists.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. SISSON] has again expired.

Mr. TEMPLE. Mr. Chairman, in my own time, then, I will continue.

Mr. GARDNER. As a member of the committee, Mr. Chairman, I take the floor.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts has the prior right as a member of the committee.

Mr. GARDNER. Mr. Chairman, I rise to oppose the amendment offered by the gentleman from Mississippi, although I see perfectly well his point. I see what a hardship might arise. Perhaps a physician in the country pays one visit to a sick man, knows perfectly well what is the matter with him, gives him four or five pills which contain opium, and perhaps three days later, when the pills are exhausted, the patient telephones to his physician. If the patient says, "I am no better; I am just as I was when you saw me; send me five more of those pills," then, in the opinion of the gentleman from Mississippi, this section would prevent the physician from acceding to the request. I admit it can not be done under this act, unless the court construes that that is a personal attendance. On the other hand——

Mr. SISSON. Will the gentleman permit just one interruption? Does not the gentleman believe this language, reasonably construed, means the physician must personally observe his patient prior to the time he issues the prescription?

Mr. GARDNER. And reasonably construed, he must from time to time view that patient, so as to convince himself that the patient is in the same condition.

Mr. SISSON. If the physician is a reputable man, and you have got to trust him at last, his failing to make the visit, if he knows that that trouble continues, would be just as good if you had a disreputable physician to go and actually make the visit.

Mr. GARDNER. Unfortunately not all physicians are reputable men. A large number of men in all walks of life are dishonest. If we strike out the word "personal" we impale ourselves on a very much worse horn of the dilemma than by putting it in. But I admit that if the courts take an extreme view of the meaning of the word "personal" a very great hardship will arise in country districts until the law is modified. If the worst comes to the worst, if a doctor perceives that his patient from time to time over a long period is likely to need these medicines, he can dispense enough beforehand. The very fact that he has not dispensed a sufficient number of pills in the first instance shows that the disease is taking a different course from what he anticipated, and makes it exceedingly probable that before very long he ought to make another visit to his patient.

Mr. SISSON. Then, you would compel the physician, in order to be sure, to have his patient buy a great deal more of the drug than was necessary?

Mr. GARDNER. No; but you presuppose that the physician, not foreseeing the length of the patient's illness, dispenses an insufficient amount of a drug.

Obviously, if he can foretell the length of a patient's illness before his next necessary visit, he can dispense a sufficient amount of the drug. But the very fact that he dispenses an insufficient amount shows that at all events the patient will very scon need another visit.

Now, I admit that often when sick I have been given some kind of medicine which gave out before my recovery. If the courts hold that a physician with whom I consult over the telephone is not in personal attendance on me, a hardship would arise.

Mr. SISSON. What would the gentleman say of a case where they did not have telephones?

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Massachusetts has expired.

Mr. SISSON. Mr. Chairman, I ask that the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GARDNER] may be allowed to proceed for five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. SISSON] asks that the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GARDNER] proceed for five minutes more. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. SISSON. What about those communities that do not have telephones? You will find a great many rural communities where they do not have long-distance telephones.

Mr. GARDNER. I admit that if the courts give that construction to this word "personal" there will be hardships, and patients will be subjected to a certain expense; but——

Mr. SISSON. Why not make the remedy now? I do not believe anybody in the Chamber——

Mr. GARDNER. I can not state the danger as well as the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] stated it, but——

Mr. SISSON. There is not anybody in this Chamber, I believe, who wants a patient to be compelled to pay two doctor's bills or be compelled to pay for two or three or four or five visits when one would be all that is necessary.

Mr. GARDNER. That is true; and there is nobody in this Chamber who desires to make it possible for a mail-order physician to distribute drugs all over the United States. Rather than permit a mail-order physician to distribute drugs all over the United States, to put an extreme case, I prefer that some patients should be forced to pay for two or three or even five more doctor's visits than may be necessary.

Mr. SISSON. In other words, a sick woman who is suffering, and who has had no sort of bad habits with reference to the use of drugs, who finds it necessary that she must have an opiate, must be penalized? Would the gentleman from Massachusetts penalize her?

My district is a rural one, and I myself was raised quite a distance from a town or a city. Frequently we have communities where there is only one physician within a radius of several miles, and the physician may have a large number of calls. It is almost impossible for those people to get the rapid and quick attention that people in the cities may get. Therefore in the administration of this law we ought not to lose sight of the condition that exists in a great many sections of this country. This law will apply not only in those sections where you have close telephone connections, but it will also apply all over the country.

Mr. GARDNER. If we could do good without some admixture of evil, we should be usurping the functions of the Deity.

Mr. SISSON. That is true; but when we do know that certain evils will arise from the bill, and that certain evils are bound to arise from the bill, why not cure the thing now?

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Chairman, I realize the position that the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. SISSON] is in. He is trying to correct what he believes a defect in the bill that might cause considerable dissatisfaction and trouble to people who are located a considerable distance from a physician, or cause an extra expense that ought not to be imposed upon them. But it has occurred to me that this provision in the bill has reference more particularly to a physician who is in attendance. I mean by that that he is the family physician. It does not necessarily mean that he must go and see this particular patient each time in order that he can prescribe for him or her.

Mr. SISSON. I will say to the gentleman from Illinois that if I thought it meant that I would have no objection to it.

Mr. FOSTER. There is no question, in my judgment, that it does mean that. We talk about some one being a man's "personal physician." It does not mean necessarily that every time a physician is in attendance he has to go and visit the patient in order to make such a prescription. I do not think it requires that.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, will my colleague yield?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Illinois yield to his colleague?

Mr. FOSTER. Certainly.

Mr. MANN. My colleague suggested a while ago to change the form of language from "personal attendance upon the patient" so that it will read "the physician shall personally attend on the patient."

The gentleman from Mississippi seems to think that the words "in attendance" mean personally there at the time.

Mr. SISSON. The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GARDNER], a member of the committee, agrees with me that it means the physician has got to be there.

Mr. GARDNER. No; I said if the court took such an unreasonable view.

Mr. SISSON. I beg the gentleman's pardon. I did not think he himself had taken such an unreasonable view.

Mr. MANN. If you say "personally attend upon the patient," I think that would cover it. A man in New York City prescribing for a man in San Francisco, or some other place far distant, would not be personally attending upon the patient. But it does not mean that the physician has to be at the bedside of the patient holding the patient's hand, whether the patient be a man or a woman, when he writes the prescription.

Mr. SISSON. I think the language here, however, would be construed that every time he wrote a prescription he would have to personally visit and personally make an observation of the patient.

Mr. FOSTER. I do not believe the language of this bill means that. I will say to the gentleman frankly that if I thought so I would not vote for it, because I think it would be a hardship on a patient who was employing a physician and who had for a long time employed that physician. In such a case the physician knows the peculiarities of that patient. As the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. SISSON] said a while ago, there are those unfortunate people who possibly require some of this drug. Possibly they can not be cured, and unfortunately they are in that situation. Now, the physician of that family knows that particular case, as all physicians do in reference to cases of that kind. I do not believe it is the intention of this bill—if I thought it was I would not be for it—that every time that patient needs morphine or opium the physician shall be compelled to drive to that patient's home and see that patient in order to prescribe it. But what I do mean is that if a man comes into a physician's office and says, "Some member of my family needs an opiate," I do not believe the physician is justified in prescribing opium without personal attendance and knowing the conditions as to that patient. But in this case I believe it simply means that when a physician is called upon to prescribe he shall have that personal knowledge of the patient, and that this provision of the law simply means that where there is a physician of a family he does not have to go each time he prescribes and visit the patient before doing so. It might mean a patient who was not under his regular supervision, a patient who was a member of another family, that possibly he knew well, but of whom he was not the regular physician. I think that is all it means. For that reason I am perfectly willing to let the matter stand as it is.

Mr. SISSON. If I thought that was all it meant I would have no objection to it, but it seems to me that if it says he is in attendance upon the patient that is all that is necessary. It ought not to mean his personal attendance. He ought not to have to be at the bedside of the patient every time he writes a prescription.

Mr. FOSTER. The great difficulty is that spoken of by my colleague a while ago, that if you say "in attendance" these people will advertise cures for the opium habit in order to get these patients there, and then will prescribe opium for them.

Mr. SISSON. Such a physician would not be in personal attendance on the patient.

Mr. FOSTER. I believe it is all right now.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Mississippi.

The question being taken, the Chairman announced that the noes appeared to have it.

Mr. SISSON. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that no quorum is present.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will count.

Mr. SISSON. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from New York [Mr. HARRISON] is anxious to have this bill passed, but I feel very keenly on this matter. I do not want this imposition upon the people of my district and the other districts that may be affected by it. I am willing to withdraw this point of order with the understanding that my amendment be agreed to, if we can get unanimous consent, and if the gentleman from New York will ask it. Then, if the Senate shall believe that I am wrong about the matter, I have no objection to its being cured in conference, because I do not expect to put myself in the attitude of being an obstructionist over a mere technicality. But I do believe that this language means just that much to the country.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Mississippi withdraw his point of no quorum?

Mr. SISSON. I will do it if I can get unanimous consent that the amendment be agreed to.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, the gentleman's amendment, which he is now seeking to have inserted or agreed to, is to strike out the word "personally," so that a prescription by a physician would not have to be issued by the physician personally attending upon the patient. I do not consent by unanimous consent to an amendment of that sort, because in my opinion, with that provision stricken out, we may as well throw the bill in the wastebasket. Why not take the language which I suggested, which covers both points?

Mr. SISSON. What is the language suggested by the gentleman?

Mr. MANN. It is the following:

Provided, That such physician, dentist, or veterinary surgeon shall personally attend on such patient.

Mr. SISSON. If it is perfectly clear that he would not have to make a second visit when it was not necessary, solely for the purpose of making a prescription, I have no objection to the language if it means that.

Mr. MANN. Of course, I long since have gotten beyond the point where I would undertake to say what either a petit judge or a petit jury would do, but a physician who is personally attending upon another does not mean that every time he writes a prescription he must be at his bedside.

Mr. SISSON. There is a distinction between that language and the language contained in the bill.

Mr. MANN. I can see that the language in the bill "in personal attendance" might be construed to mean that the physician had to be there in person when he wrote his prescription, but the other language could not be so construed.

Mr. SISSON. Mr. Chairman, if the chairman of the committee will accept that amendment I will be very glad, if we can get unanimous consent to accept the suggestion of the gentleman from Illinois, to withdraw the point of order of no quorum.

Mr. HARRISON of New York. Mr. Chairman, under all the circumstances I shall not only accept the amendment but express to the gentleman from Illinois my gratitude for having evolved it from his fertile brain.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk informs the Chair that he already has the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Illinois. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 4, line 9, after the word "surgeon," strike out the words "shall be in personal attendance upon such patient" and insert in lieu thereof "shall personally attend upon such patient," so that the line will read: "Physician, dentist, or veterinary surgeon shall personally attend upon such patient.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. COOPER. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. Will the gentleman from New York permit a question?

Mr. HARRISON of New York. Certainly.

Mr. COOPER. Does not the gentleman from New York think that paragraph B should be amended in two particulars—that after the provision that the prescription shall be dated there should be added the words "on the day on which it is signed"? A corrupt physician might antedate a prescription for a year.

Mr. HARRISON of New York. Mr. Chairman, I think that is a reasonable amendment, and if the gentleman will offer it I will accept it.

Mr. COOPER. Then there is another amendment which should follow that. There is a provision that such pharmacist shall preserve such prescriptions for a period of two years. When shall that period of two years begin? After the date of the prescription or from the date on which it is presented?

Mr. MANN. He could not preserve the prescriptions until after he received them.

Mr. COOPER. But suppose the prescription to be antedated.

Mr. MANN. The bill provides that the pharmacist shall preserve it for two years. Those two years must begin with the day he gets it.

Mr. COOPER. Suppose it were not properly dated.

Mr. MANN. That would not make any difference.

Mr. COOPER. The pharmacist could say that he got it on that date, and then the statute of limitations only run for one year, where it would run for two years if it were correctly dated.

Mr. FOWLER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield to me for a moment——

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend by inserting, after the word "dated," in line 16, page 4, the words "as of the day on which signed."

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. COOPER. Now, I still think there should be after the word "years," in line 19, on page 4, an amendment by inserting the words "from the day on which such prescription is filled."

Mr. HARRISON of New York. Mr. Chairman, of course the gentleman from Wisconsin knows that most of the States which have antinarcotic laws have some provision for the retention by the druggists of the physicians' prescriptions; but, of course, that is not an answer to his suggestion. If he thinks there is an uncertainty and an amendment is offered really for the purpose of making more certain what the committee is trying to do, I will be very glad, for my part, to accept it.

Mr. FOWLER. Will the gentleman yield to me for a moment?

Mr. COOPER. Mr. Chairman, has this last amendment been reported?

The CHAIRMAN. It has not. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 4, line 19, after the word "years," insert the words "from the day on which such prescription is filled."

Mr. COOPER. And the date of such day shall be preserved or shall be recorded by such pharmacist——

Mr. HARRISON of New York. I think, Mr. Chairman, that is invading the province of the States, and to some extent they regulate these matters themselves, and I think it is safe to leave to the State laws matters of that sort.

Mr. COOPER. Well, if there is such a provision, all right. I am only endeavoring to perfect it, so there can be no evasion. Let the Clerk report the amendment without the last clause, requiring it to be recorded.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 4, line 19, after the word "years," insert the following: "From the day on which such prescription is filled."

Mr. FOWLER. Mr. Chairman, I think that could all be cured very easily if the pharmacist was required to stamp on the prescription the date on which he receives it, and I am inclined to think that is what ought to be done; and that being the case, there would be no question about the time when the two years began to run, because he is required to place on the prescription the date upon which he received it; then, certainly, the time would begin to run from the date of the reception of the prescription.

Mr. HARRISON of New York. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FOWLER. Yes.

Mr. HARRISON of New York. Suppose that the pharmacist intended to evade the law in some respect. Would he then not incorrectly date it? After all, you are only offering to perfect what amounts to a question of evidence, anyway, and I do not believe that would bring about the result the gentleman intends.

Mr. FOWLER. That is true if he would place a false date thereon, the same as the one writing the prescription may place a false date thereon; but if that be true, the amendment offered here would not cure that defect in any wise whatever. Absolutely, if the pharmacist was corrupt, as suggested by the gentleman from New York who has charge of this bill, then it could be false as to the date when he received it and false as to the date that was on the prescription coming from the hand of the one who wrote the prescription; but if he is required to stamp on the prescription the date he receives it, his honor is at stake and he is compelled to put the date thereon correctly or falsify his honor, and I think, Mr. Chairman, that it would cure the defect.

Mr. COOPER. In reply to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. FOWLER], I wish to suggest that it is not an uncommon circumstance for a person to take a prescription to a pharmacist and request the return of the prescription after it has been filled.

Mr. FOSTER. A reputable pharmacist does not give him the original prescription but gives him a copy of it always.

Mr. COOPER. He gets something, and there is not anything here to provide for the return of the copy. Then we would have to leave it, as I understand the gentleman from New York desires it to be left, "from the day on which the prescription is filled."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Wisconsin.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 6. That the provisions of this act shall not be construed to apply to the sale, distribution, giving away, or dispensing of preparations and remedies which do not contain more than 2 grains of opium, or more than one-fourth of a grain of morphine, or more than one-twelfth of a grain of heroin, or more than 1 grain of codeine, or any salt or derivative of any of them in 1 fluid ounce; or, if a solid or semi-solid preparation, in 1 avoirdupois ounce; or to liniments, ointments, or other preparations which are prepared for external use only: Provided, That such remedies and preparations are sold, distributed, given away, or dispensed as medicines and not for the purpose of evading the intentions and provisions of this act. The provisions of this act shall not apply to decocainized coca leaves or preparations made therefrom, or to other preparations of coca leaves which do not contain cocaine.

Mr. GARDNER. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 9, line 2, after the word "only," insert the words: "Except liniments, ointments, and other preparations which contain cocaine or any of its salts, or alpha or beta, eutaine, or any of their salts, or any synthetic substitute for them."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the adoption of the amendment offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. GARDNER. Mr. Chairman, on line 24, page 8, I move to strike out the semicolon and insert a comma.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 8, line 24, strike out the semicolon after the word "ounce" and insert in lieu thereof a comma.

Mr. HARRISON of New York. I would like the gentleman from Massachusetts to explain the effect which that will have on the provisions of the act.

Mr. GARDNER. Probably it will have no effect whatever. The sentence in this section, "or, if a solid or semisolid preparation, in 1 avoirdupois ounce" refers to the whole preceding clause. It is all one connected clause and should not be disjoined by a semicolon. The meaning of the clause is that persons who so desire shall be permitted to sell certain preparations if they contain only a small amount of opium or morphine or heroin or codeine per fluid ounce. If these preparations are solid or semisolid, then the amount shall be reckoned per ounce avoirdupois instead of per fluid ounce. It is a preferential punctuation to carry out the purpose of the act.

Mr. HARRISON of New York. I would not devote any attention to the matter except sometimes it so happens that a punctuation of this sort changes the law, and I want to be sure. Of course, the gentleman from Massachusetts does not want to widen the scope of these exemptions.

Mr. GARDNER. Now, the Massachusetts act, which the gentleman has in his hand, has a semicolon where I propose to insert a comma. On the other hand, the Massachusetts act has no comma after the word "or." I think the punctuation wrong in both cases. My attention was called to this detail by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN], who is not on the floor at this moment. I am not so familiar with statutory interpretation as he is. He expressed an opinion that the punctuation ought to be changed, although he doubted whether it would make any difference in the interpretation. He asked me what the meaning of the section was. I told him that the intention was to exempt from the duplicate-order requirement preparations containing a moderate amount of morphine, codeine, heroin, or opium, the amount of narcotic to be calculated by the fluid ounce in the case of liquids and by the avoirdupois ounce in the case of solids and semisolids. Whereupon the gentleman from Illinois said that in that case the punctuation ought to be a comma instead of a semicolon. I quite agree with him.

Mr. HARRISON of New York. Well, Mr. Chairman, the combined authority of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] and the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GARDNER] satisfies me.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the adoption of the amendment offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. COOPER. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I would like to ask the gentleman from New York a question. On what medical authority was it that the committee authorized the exemption from the provisions of this act of articles containing not more than 2 grains of opium to 1 fluid ounce, for example?

Mr. HARRISON of New York. Mr. Chairman, this was one of the controversial features of the law, and I am glad to say that the bill is more drastic in this respect than even some of the model State laws, like the law of the State of Massachusetts. It is customary in these antinarcotic laws to exempt from the provisions of the act preparations which contain so small an amount of a narcotic as to make it impossible for them to become habit-forming drugs. If we did not do this, we would limit, if not entirely eliminate, the additional use of narcotics in the channel in which it is perhaps legitimate.

Mr. COOPER. A fluid ounce is a very small quantity of fluid, and I would like to ask my distinguished friend from Illinois [Mr. FOSTER] whether the habit of using narcotics would be developed from the drinking, as a regular thing, of 2 grains of morphine in a fluid ounce?

Mr. FOSTER. I think if you take a harmless preparation from which he could take as much as two grains of opium in a fluid ounce you would produce a habit in the patient for the drug. But the gentleman from Wisconsin loses sight of this fact, that this bill provides against the putting up of any preparation which might in itself be put up for the purpose of supplying these patients or people who want to get morphine.

Now, then, if you are compounding remedies, the chances are nine hundred and ninety-nine out of one thousand—or one out of a million, I might say, of your putting up a medicinal preparation where the patient will be taking an ounce at a dose. You can readily see what a quantity he would have to have if he were taking it with any degree of rapidity.

Mr. COOPER. Suppose it was an ounce of water?

Mr. FOSTER. Yes; suppose it was an ounce of water. But this provides that that can not be done. Here is what the bill says:

Provided, That such remedies and preparations are sold, distributed, given away, or dispensed as medicines and not for the purpose of evading the intentions and provisions of this act.

Mr. COOPER. Oh, does the gentleman think that that amounts to anything against men who want to sell a habit-forming drug?

Mr. FOSTER. I supposed that it did amount to something.

Mr. COOPER. How much will that control a man who thinks more of money than he thinks of anything else in the sale of drugs?

Mr. FOSTER. I will agree with the gentleman that probably it will be very hard to stop the infraction of this law entirely.

Mr. COOPER. What I want to get at is this: Could a man get up something composed of water and opium, in the proportion of 1 ounce of water to 2 grains of opium, and sell it by the pint under this law and name it anything he pleased?

Mr. FOSTER. If it is a medicinal preparation, he could.

Mr. COOPER. He may label it a sure cure for bronchitis.

Mr. FOSTER. Oh, we have a law now—a law on the statute book—which I think prevents the labeling in that way of remedies of that kind.

Mr. COOPER. Suppose he calls it any name he pleases. We had a remedy here—gotten up in Chicago a few years ago—and they showed by chemical analysis that it was 98 or 99 per cent water, with a little bit of something in it to color it and something to give it an odor more or less fetid. They sold it for a dollar a bottle, and the people who prepared it made about $125,000 in a year and a half, and on being exposed they went out of business. I want to know whether, under the provisions of this bill, which says it shall not apply to 2 grains of opium in 1 fluid ounce——

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Wisconsin has expired.

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Wisconsin may have five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. The trouble about that is that all of this discussion is out of order. There is nothing pending.

Mr. COOPER. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. COOPER] moves to strike out the last word.

Mr. HARRISON of New York. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman from Wisconsin yield to me?

Mr. COOPER. Just in one moment, and then I will yield with pleasure to the gentleman. This bill, as I understand, is to prevent the sale and use of habit-forming drugs. I wish to know whether by exempting the use, the habitual use, and the sale of 2 grains of opium in a fluid ounce—it may be an ounce of water—you are not exempting the very thing you do not want to exempt?

Mr. FOSTER. If you are doing it with water, that would be so; but this bill provides expressly that that shall not be done.

Mr. COOPER. Where does it say that?

Mr. FOSTER. It says, "Such remedies as are sold for the purpose of evading the law.".

Mr. COOPER. Why can not that be called a remedy?

Mr. FOSTER. It will be for the purpose of evading the law.

Mr. MANN. If the gentleman from Wisconsin will permit, Mr. Chairman, I may say that we amended the pure food and drug act last August, not covering this matter but in a way that would cover it, by putting in this provision—that the drugs misbranded would be subject to a penalty if the package or label shall bear any statement or design or device regarding the curative or therapeutic effect of such article or any of the ingredients or substances contained therein that is fraudulent—so that anyone who puts out a preparation and calls it a medicinal preparation falsely, and fraudulently stating its effects, will find that his article is misbranded and subject to the provisions of the pure food and drug act.

Mr. COOPER. Suppose a man should go to a druggist, and the druggist had a pint of water with opium in it in the proportion which I have mentioned, and he should say to the druggist, "I am troubled with insomnia," and the druggist should hand to him this pint of water with the opium in it. Would that be handed to him as a medicine under the language on page 9—that such remedies and preparations are sold, distributed, given away, or dispensed as medicines?

Mr. FOSTER. In the first place, the druggist has no right to prescribe, and he could be prosecuted for prescribing.

Mr. COOPER. He does not prescribe. The man goes to the druggist for it.

Mr. FOSTER. He says, "I am troubled with insomnia. I want you to prescribe something for it."

Mr. COOPER. Not at all. He goes there and asks for Insomnine. The druggist has it there, put up in pint bottles. The druggist does not prescribe. The man just goes and asks for it. This law will expressly permit the manufacture and sale of habit-forming drugs, because in response to my first question the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. FOSTER], who is a distinguished physician, says that the sale of 2 grains of opium in a fluid ounce of water might permit the sale of a habit-forming drug.

Mr. FOSTER. Certainly; if you take it as a dose.

Mr. COOPER. The gentleman from Illinois says, "Certainly, if you take it as a dose." What is to prevent a man from taking an ounce of that water in a dose, if he has been accustomed to that amount of opium?

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Wisconsin has expired.

Mr. MANN. I think the point raised by the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. COOPER] is a very proper point to raise. Soothing sirup, and various other proprietary medicines which contain opium, probably ought to be abolished; but this bill, which will be a very effective remedial agent, will very likely be passed without objection. Unfortunately I am forced to believe that if we should attempt in this way to attack all the proprietary medicines which contain opium, the bill would have a rocky road to travel, and would be consigned to oblivion. That may not be a very good excuse, but, after all, it is practical.

The pure-food law requires that on all medicines which contain opium or any of these habit-forming drugs the label on the package shall state the amount of the habit-forming drug which it contains. I apprehend that the babies of the country would be just as well off, if not better off, if all soothing sirups which were used to quiet and put them to sleep were abolished; but I am sure it would not be done. Let us attack that evil at some other time and in some other way, and we will do good with this bill, anyhow.

Mr. GARDNER. I move to strike out the last two words.

Mr. Chairman, it is a mistake to suppose that this provision in the bill permits druggists to sell anything which they can not sell now. It simply exempts them from the necessity of making a duplicate record of sales of preparations and patent medicines which contain only a certain restricted proportion of narcotics. If this were a question of forbidding the sale, without prescription, of opium, and if it was proposed to exempt from the law all proprietary medicines which contain less than 2 per cent of opium, I am inclined to believe that such an exemption would be excessive unless justified from the point of view of being that half loaf which most sensible people prefer to no bread. As has been pointed out, we are struggling with the practical question of getting through a law providing for the registration of persons who sell these drugs, and requiring the keeping of duplicate orders of sales. As a matter of policy, to insure the passage of this bill in this Congress, I believe that the proposed exemption is permissible. If this exemption is refused, interminable delay is in store for the bill.

Now, not that it bears a great deal on the question, but only to illustrate the fact that you can not in matters of legislation do all that you wish to do as quickly as you would like, I call attention to the fact that in matters of pure food and drug legislation the Massachusetts statutes have been copied and quoted a great deal. Yet in time we shall go still further in that direction. We are now operating in Massachusetts under chapter 271 of the act of 1910, so far as the regulation and sale of morphia and other narcotic drugs are concerned. So far as cocaine is concerned, there is a later statute.

This Massachusetts statute of 1910 does not deal with the registration of druggists or of purchasers of narcotics, nor does it deal with the registration of sales of drugs, but it deals with the sales themselves. Under this Massachusetts law preparations which contain as high as 2½ grains of opium per ounce may be sold without a physician's prescription. I hope to see that amount reduced to 2 grains, which is the maximum specified in this bill. Next, I hope that it will be reduced to 1 grain, and finally to an even less amount. So far as we have been able to go as yet, proceeding from step to step, as we must, 2½ grains per ounce of opium content has been made the Massachusetts maximum. I refer, of course, to sales without a physician's prescription. For these reasons I believe that we shall be wise to pass the bill with the exemptions as provided.

Mr. RODDENBERY. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. Beginning at the bottom of page 8 it says "or to liniments, ointments, or other preparations which are prepared for external use only." Is it intended that percentage of narcotic applies to that also?

Mr. HARRISON of New York. I will say to the gentleman from Georgia that the exemption is from the provisions of the bill and not as to the amount of the narcotic used at all. The purpose of the bill is, as it is in similar State laws, to provide that ointments and liniments from which it would be impossible to form a habit for opiates are to be excluded from the provisions of this law. Otherwise every druggist who sells a porous plaster would be obliged to come under the provisions of this act. And, if I may be permitted by the gentleman from Georgia, to use a personal illustration, I will say that during the course of this debate in which I have been denouncing the use of narcotics, I have been compelled to wear on the back of my neck a porous plaster which I have no doubt has opium in it, but I can assure the gentleman it is impossible to get an appetite for the drug in that manner.

Mr. RODDENBERY. The statement of the gentleman is that it is not intended to apply to ointments, liniments, and so forth, which are capable of internal use. But does the language used limit it to such preparations as are incapable of internal use; in other words, liniments, ointments, and other preparations which are purely for external use only?

Mr. HARRISON of New York. This is a copy verbatim of the model statute laws on the question which have been found to have had that effect there. We further limited it by an amendment presented by the gentleman from Massachusetts excluding cocaine entirely, because a discussion arose in the committee as to whether cocaine snuffed up the nose was a preparation for external or internal use.

Mr. RODDENBERY. Does not the adoption of the amendment of the gentleman which was an exception increase the uncertainty?

Mr. HARRISON of New York. I have an idea that, if they are prepared for external use, they are incapable of being used as habit-forming drugs.

Mr. GARDNER. Will the gentleman permit me to answer that?

Mr. RODDENBERY. Certainly.

Mr. GARDNER. As far as I can ascertain by asking a number of physicians, the situation is this: Unless, perhaps, some preparation of cocaine, no liniment, ointment, or other preparation made bona fide for external application, even if used excessively, can be dangerous. That is to say, no habit can result from the surface use of narcotics. In the case of cocaine, however, the situation is different, as I understand it. Cocaine may be combined with alcohol and menthol, for instance, with the intention of making a liniment for external use. Yet the purchaser of that liniment, instead of applying it externally, may spray it over the mucous membrane in his nostrils if he is a victim of the cocaine habit. Most doctors would classify such spraying as an internal use of the drug, but the courts might think otherwise. Hence my amendment requiring a record of every sale of any preparation containing cocaine, even if the preparation is designed bona fide for external use.

The case is different, however, with morphine, codeine, heroin, and opium. I am told that no preparation of these narcotics, if intended for external use, could possibly be used internally. Any preparation which could be used internally would on its face be a fraud if alleged to be for external use.

Mr. RODDENBERY. Does not the gentleman think that between the words "are" and "prepared," at the top of the page, the words "bona fide" would be helpful?

Mr. GARDNER. Anything of that sort would be satisfactory to me, as far as I am concerned.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Georgia has expired.

Mr. RODDENBERY. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 8, line 21, strike out "two" and insert "one"; line 21, strike out "one-fourth" and insert "one-eighth"; line 22, strike out "one-twelfth" and insert "one twenty-fourth"; line 23, strike out "one" and insert "one-half."

Mr. RODDENBERY. Mr. Chairman, the object of this amendment is to reduce by one-half the amounts of opium and other narcotics, so that where preparations contain more than the amount covered by the amendment manufacturers will be compelled to register and otherwise comply with the statute. It is evident from the statement of the gentleman from Illinois, Dr. FOSTER, and the gentleman from Massachusetts, Mr. GARDNER, who are thoroughly familiar with the subject, that preparations containing the amounts of opium and other narcotics as now provided are capable of hurtful use. While gentlemen here clearly explained that this bill is not a direct legislative restriction to be enforced by the Government and does not interfere with appropriate State legislation, nevertheless the allowing of preparations to be exempt from the provisions of the bill containing so high a proportion of opium will constitute an indirect way by which Congress will encourage these habit-forming drug manufacturers to so fix up their modified preparations with the noninhibited or nontaxable percentage and place them on the market. It is done now, but we give them a guide, possibly, by which they may safely proceed and profitably operate. I fear we will multiply to a great extent a number of these deleterious agencies in the form of ointments and liniments, under which come teething powders and soothing sirups, which, as the gentleman from Illinois intimated, should be prohibited, and I have no hesitancy in going further and saying it should be entirely prohibited. But if we reduce the percentage of opium, and so forth, and require the registry and records on a basis of this lower percentage, we do not change the purpose and the scope of the act, but we do bring it down to accomplish more nearly the result that the Congress has in mind. This amendment will undoubtedly discourage and stand in the way, not of the honest, square manufacturer, who compounds for medicinal and proper uses, but that type of manufacturer who puts his habit-forming goods off as ointments and liniments, to be purchased, used, and consumed by the unfortunate dope fiends of every kind, in the absence, under the law, of being able to get something that more nearly fills the bill. I recognize the objection made by the gentleman from Massachusetts and others that this amendment might present some difficulties in the way of the easy passage of the bill. That is true, but I do not regard them of sufficient consequence to prevent the House from adopting this amendment if it so desires.

Mr. HARRISON of New York. Mr. Chairman, if after listening to the debate which was so ably conducted by the two gentlemen—the gentleman from Illinois and the gentleman from Massachusetts—the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. RODDENBERY] has made up his mind to offer and press this amendment, realizing as I do that there is no man who is more competent and who knows better how to use the rules than he does——

Mr. RODDENBERY. Mr. Chairman, I desire to advise the gentleman to act entirely freely with reference to this amendment. If the committee are not in accord with the amendment, I shall raise no parliamentary obstruction.

Mr. HARRISON of New York. I think that is a very fair proposition, and the spirit of it I will accept. I have no sympathy with these proprietary or patent medicine people. I would like to exclude the use of narcotics entirely from every one of these patent medicines if I thought we could do it, and if I vote against the amendment of the gentleman from Georgia it is simply upon the ground, that is so well stated by the gentleman from Illinois, that we want to get all we can out of this legislation, and he is proposing more I believe than we can get. These exemptions in our bill are all considerably less than those in the model State laws, and with that I am content.

Mr. COOPER. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. Will the gentleman from New York [Mr. HARRISON] answer a question?

Mr. HARRISON of New York. Yes.

Mr. COOPER. Section 6 provides that the provisions of this act shall not be construed to apply to the sale of any of the preparations mentioned in the section. Does that mean that one can sell these drugs who is not registered?

Mr. HARRISON of New York. Yes.

Mr. COOPER. So that a man can sell two grains of opium, which is a dose of opium, and an ounce of water to anybody who comes to his store and asks for it, whether he may be a grocer or any sort of a business man, and he even may not have a license at all?

Mr. RODDENBERY. He can sell an ounce preparation of peppermint and water and opium to a drug fiend who goes into any drug store so far as the national——

Mr. FOSTER. The gentleman from Georgia is wrong.

Mr. RODDENBERY. I understand so far as this bill is concerned——

Mr. FOSTER. The gentleman has not read the whole of it.

Mr. RODDENBERY. Yes; I have read the entire bill.

Mr. COOPER. The point to which I directed the attention of the gentleman from New York is that one can sell 2 grains of opium in an ounce of water, which is a dose of opium, and he need not be registered.

Mr. HARRISON of New York. Under the provisions of this act he is pretty apt to get tangled up with the pure-food law or with the qualifications provided in the latter part of this section.

Mr. COOPER. We are enacting a statute which to the various State legislatures means that so far as the Congress of the United States is concerned it is content that a nonregistered, unlicensed pharmacist may sell grocers, as they do frequently, a dose of opium at any time or to anybody who asks for it, and what effect will that have upon the State legislatures if somebody in a State legislature will rise and protest that the bill then presented opens opportunity for the use of habit-forming drugs and it is said, "Oh, no; the Congress of the United States has exempted us grocers and business men."

Mr. HARRISON of New York. The gentleman will find upon examination that our bill in Congress has a more drastic and severe provision than State laws on this subject.

Mr. COOPER. Well, but this permits the sale of 2 grains of opium, and that is a dose, in an ounce, and it permits it to be sold to anybody upon his request and as a proprietary medicine, and the man who sells it is exempted from the provisions of this act, which requires registration and license.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, the practical effect of this exemption I think is in one way stated by the gentleman from Wisconsin, but not fully stated in another way. The practical effect of this exemption is to permit retail druggists to sell a proprietary medicine without requiring the purchaser to make out a written order a copy of which is required to be retained for two years, one by the purchaser and one by the seller. In other words, without these exemptions if any one goes into a drug store and buys any proprietary medicine with these drugs in the medicine you have to make out a regular order, which order has to be preserved both by the purchaser and the seller, the order being in duplicate.

Now, gentlemen know very well that this act prescribes a good many onerous conditions upon the retail druggists of the country as it stands, conditions which I am happy to believe at present they are quite willing to accept. I am very confident if everyone who went into a drug store to buy one of these proprietary medicines—very numerous in numbers, and I wish they were less—had to make out a written order, the act would be so unpopular that it would soon be repealed.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the adoption of the amendment offered by the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. RODDENBERY].

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk concluded the reading of the bill.

Mr. HARRISON of New York. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise and report the bill as amended to the House with a favorable recommendation.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. CULLOP, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill (H. R. 6282) to provide for the registration of, with collectors of internal revenue, and to impose a special tax upon all persons who produce, import, manufacture, compound, deal in, dispense, sell, distribute, or give away opium or coca leaves, their salts, derivatives, or preparations, and for other purposes, and had directed him to report the same to the House with certain amendments, with the recommendation that the amendments be agreed to and that the bill as amended do pass.

The SPEAKER. Is a separate vote demanded on the amendments? If not, the Chair will put them in gross.

The question is on agreeing to the amendments.

The question was taken, and the amendments were agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the engrossment and the third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read a third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. HARRISON of New York, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

THE CURRENCY BILL.

Mr. GLASS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the resolution which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Virginia asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of a resolution which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

House resolution 190.

Resolved, That 25,000 copies of the currency bill, H. R. 6454, be printed for the use of the House, of which 5,000 copies shall be delivered to the Committee on Banking and Currency, and the balance distributed through the folding room.

Mr. CULLOP. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would like to ask the gentleman from Virginia a question. By this resolution are these to be distributed through the folding room or the document room?

Mr. GLASS. Through the folding room.

Mr. CULLOP. So that each Member will have a pro rata share for his own use?

Mr. GLASS. Yes.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GLASS. I will.

Mr. MANN. This bill was introduced to-day?

Mr. GLASS. Yes.

Mr. MANN. Did the gentleman make inquiry to see what 25,000 copies would cost?

Mr. GLASS. No; I did not.

Mr. MANN. I assume it would come within $500. Of course, the House can not make an order that would extend over the cost of $500.

Mr. GLASS. I was told by the person in charge of the folding room that that was the limit that could be asked for. I assume that he had that figure in mind.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

Mr. GLASS. Mr. Speaker, I also ask unanimous consent for the consideration of another resolution which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

House resolution 191.

Resolved, That the Committee on Banking and Currency of the House of Representatives be, and is hereby, authorized to sit during the sessions of the House and during the recesses of the Sixty-third Congress, and to employ such expert and other assistance as may be required in the transaction of its business, the expenditure for this purpose not to exceed the sum of $5,000.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Reserving the right to object, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GLASS. Yes.

Mr. MANN. Is the purpose of this resolution to permit the Committee on Banking and Currency to make full investigation of the banking and currency measure which may be reported?

Mr. GLASS. The purpose of it is to confine any investigation to the banking and currency measure to be reported.

Mr. MANN. This resolution as now presented is not for the purpose of reopening the investigation that was being carried on in the last Congress?

Mr. GLASS. Not at all.

Mr. MANN. I take it that the committee needs considerable help, probably expert help and otherwise?

Mr. GLASS. That is true.

Mr. MANN. I noticed the other day that the distinguished Chief Magistrate of the country, when he did us the honor to appear in the Hall of the House and deliver his message to the joint assembly of the House and Senate, stated that the Committees on Banking and Currency of the two Houses had been at work on a banking and currency bill. I got the impression from what he said that not only the distinguished gentleman from Virginia [Mr. GLASS], in whom we all have confidence and whom we all honor, had been called upon by the Chief Magistrate, but that the balance of the House Committee on Banking and Currency had also been in consultation with the President. I did not know but that the Committee on Banking and Currency had been at work for some time and had made all this investigation. But with the understanding, from the information furnished to me, that the information conveyed by the President was erroneous, and that the Committee on Banking and Currency has not had any meeting and has made no investigation, I shall not object to the resolution.

Mr. GLASS. I will say to the gentleman that I assume that the President meant to say that the members of the Banking and Currency Committee of the other House and the chairman of the Committee on Banking and Currency of this House had given some consideration to the matters referred to, but not full consideration by any manner of means.

Mr. MANN. I do not know what the President meant. The President has an unusual command of clear English. I know of no one who can state that which he knows more clearly than the President. The President's statement to the House and to the Congress was that the Committees on Banking and Currency of both Houses had been at work preparing the bill. Sometimes those who can use English most readily are least careful about their facts. In this case the President was not careful about his facts.

Mr. GLASS. I may say, Mr. Speaker, that the President was not so far wrong about his facts in that regard. The House Committee on Banking and Currency of the Sixty-second Congress had very exhaustive hearings upon this proposition, and we considered this proposition, and the bill introduced here today had as its basis largely the hearings held then.

Mr. MANN. Well, that was not the statement of the President. The President's statement to the House and to the country was in effect that the Committees on Banking and Currency of the two Houses had prepared a bill. Now, I have the highest regard for the distinguished gentleman from Virginia [Mr. GLASS], but I recall the fact that the Committee on Banking and Currency of the House consists of majority and minority Members, and that it is erroneous for the President or any one else to say that the House Committee on Banking and Currency has been considering matters simply because our distinguished colleague from Virginia has been using his gray matter on the subject.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANN. Certainly.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Is it not customary, when speaking of a committee preparing a bill, to do so when, as a matter of fact, the minority has not been overworked in that regard? [Laughter.]

Mr. MANN. It is not the custom so to speak. On the contrary——

Mr. FITZGERALD. I will call the attention of the gentleman to the fact that the Payne tariff bill was prepared——

Mr. MANN. By the majority members of the committee, and whenever reference was made to it in that Congress or reference is made in this Congress to the Underwood bill it has been stated that the majority members of the committee prepared the bill.

Mr. FITZGERALD. No; I think the gentleman is in error to this extent: When authority was given to disburse an amount of money placed at the disposal of the majority members of the committee, in order that there might be no misunderstanding it was distinctly stated that it should be expended by the majority members, and that had been the custom.

Mr. MANN. Oh, the money that was placed at disposal was placed at the disposal of a single individual. There was not a committee at all at that time.

Here is the language of the President:

The committees of the Congress to which legislation of this character is referred have devoted careful and dispassionate study to the means of accomplishing these objects. They have honored me by consulting me. They are ready to suggest action.

But they have not had a meeting.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Does the gentleman think that anybody has misled the President into believing that it was prepared by the committee?

Mr. MANN. Oh, I think the President is too careless with his facts and too free with his English.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, I have examined the House resolution. It is a simple House resolution, authorizing the employment of experts, to cost not to exceed $5,000. Of course, it can not appropriate the money, because that would require a joint resolution. The money could not be paid out of the contingent fund because there is no resolution to that effect.

Mr. MANN. If the gentleman will permit, as I understood this resolution it was offered in order to provide authority to the committee to engage experts, but it would require a subsequent resolution from the Committee on Accounts to pay the money out of the contingent fund.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I think that is true. Was that the intention?

Mr. GLASS. It was.

Mr. LLOYD. Mr. Speaker, this resolution in its present shape does not authorize the payment of any money.

Mr. MANN. No. It was not intended to. That was my understanding.

The SPEAKER. If it is not intended to fix it so that you can pay for it, of what good is it?

Mr. MANN. Why, it authorizes the employment at once and gives an opportunity to the Committee on Accounts to prepare a resolution, which, I take it, the House would direct them to do, to provide for the payment out of the contingent fund.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, I am not certain that the gentleman would be justified in employing persons, under authority to employ, unless provision had been made for their payment. Nobody in an executive department would be able to employ a person authorized by law for certain services unless the appropriation were actually made. While I have not looked into this situation, it might be very doubtful whether the gentleman could employ anybody.

Mr. MANN. If the gentleman will permit, that may be the case; but in the last Congress, after the House had given authority to this committee to engage in an investigation, with a limit of cost of $25,000, the first thing the committee did was to employ one man at a cost of $15,000; and it ran up bills of over $50,000 without any authority, in direct contradiction to the action of the House, and we provided for it out of the contingent fund; and the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD] brought in a bill to add to the amount in the contingent fund so that it could be provided for.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Yes; but I voted against authorizing the payment of certain bills that were illegally incurred.

Mr. MANN. That may be; but there were enough gentlemen on that side who voted to pay them, so they were paid. All of us on this side voted against it.

Mr. LLOYD. The purpose I had in rising was to call attention to the fact that this does not authorize the payment of money, either out of the Treasury of the United States or out of the contingent fund, and I do not wish the Committee on Accounts to be placed in the position in which it was placed last year, to which the gentleman from Illinois has referred. If there is to be an authorization here for the payment of money out of the contingent fund, I hope the resolution will so provide, and that no expenditure will be made beyond the amount that is authorized in the resolution.

Mr. GLASS. Mr. Speaker, the House may be very well assured of the fact that there will be no expense beyond the amount authorized by the resolution.

Mr. LLOYD. But this resolution authorizes no payment by anybody. If this resolution passes, there can not be one dollar paid out of the contingent fund on account of it.

Mr. GLASS. I should like to have the resolution modified so as to authorize it. The matter is entirely new to the chairman of the Committee on Banking and Currency. The resolution was submitted to the majority leader and to the minority leader, with the expectation that they would know what I wanted and would aid me in accomplishing it.

Mr. FITZGERALD. This does not give you any money. You might employ people and never get the money to pay them.

The SPEAKER. It takes a joint resolution to pay it in any way except out of the contingent fund.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I think this is a mistake. It ought to provide for the payment.

Mr. MANN. Very well. Here is a contingency. If this resolution provided for the payment of money out of the contingent fund, it would have to go to the Committee on Accounts under the rule. Now, in view of the emergency——

Mr. FITZGERALD. It could be done by unanimous consent.

Mr. MANN. In view of the emergency the resolution authorizes the committee practically to engage some experts. I take it that the committee are going to work with a view to getting an early report. It seems to me that we might pass the resolution and leave it to the Committee on Accounts to provide for the payment out of the contingent fund.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. Now, if the gentleman wants to offer an amendment, this is the time to do it.

Mr. CULLOP. Mr. Speaker, it seems to me that the proper way would be to use language in the resolution so that it would authorize the employment; then the Committee on Accounts or the Appropriation Committee can take care of the manner in which it is to be paid. That authorization might be made so as not to exceed a certain sum which the committee might incur. That seems to me to be the proper way in which this matter should be disposed of.

THE COMMERCE COURT.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I would like a moment to propound an inquiry to some gentlemen on the other side of the House with reference to the caucus action yesterday concerning the Commerce Court. The appropriations for the Commerce Court will expire on the 30th of June, 1913. After that date there is no other court in which any person can appear concerning an order made by the Interstate Commerce Commission. They are all required to go to the Commerce Court. The Commerce Court judges will continue, I apprehend, to receive their salaries, but other officials of the Commerce Court will be without pay, and after the 1st of July, under the law, are forbidden to give their services free.

Has the Democratic caucus on this 23th day of the month, with to-morrow, Saturday, and Sunday coming, with the two bodies of Congress in session, made any provision for taking care of the Commerce Court business of the country, affecting all the shippers of all the railroads in the country, or is it expected to wait until next August or next September before any action is to be taken?

Of course, as long as you do the business of the House in a secret Democratic caucus, the only way that we have of obtaining information is by begging for it on the floor of the House, and I beg for it now.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Why does not the gentleman join the Democratic Party?

Mr. MANN. It would break up the Democratic Party.

COMMITTEE ON BANKING AND CURRENCY.

Mr. GLASS. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following amendment to the resolution which is pending.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the original resolution and then read the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on Banking and Currency of the House of Representatives be, and is hereby, authorized to sit during the sessions of the House and during the recesses of the Sixty-third Congress and to employ such expert and other assistance as may be required in the transaction of its business, the expenditure for this purpose not to exceed the sum of $5,000.

Add to the end of the resolution the following:

And to be paid out of the contingent fund of the House on the order of the Banking and Currency Committee, and evidenced by the indorsement of the chairman thereof and approved by the Committee on Accounts and evidenced by the indorsement of its chairman.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question now is on the resolution as amended.

The resolution as amended was agreed to.

TENTS FOR CONFEDERATE REUNION AT BRUNSWICK, GA.

Mr. FOWLER. Mr. Speaker, to-day when the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. HOWARD] asked unanimous consent for the present consideration of the resolution to supply one of the Confederate posts down in Georgia with tents and other things I offered an objection. Mr. Speaker, I can not afford to go on record offering an objection to any favor which may be conferred on the soldiers of this country, and I therefore withdraw my objection thereto and ask for the present consideration of that resolution.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois withdraws his objection made to the resolution offered by the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. HOWARD] and asks for its present consideration.

JOINT COMMITTEE ON PRINTING.

Mr. LLOYD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to discharge the Committee on Accounts from the consideration of the following concurrent resolution, and ask for its immediate consideration.

The Clerk read as follows:

Senate concurrent resolution 2.

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That the Joint Committee on Printing be, and hereby is, authorized to employ a stenographer, compensation at the rate of $75 per month, to be paid one-half out of the contingent fund of the Senate and one-half out of the contingent fund of the House, until otherwise provided for.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the point of order against the resolution.

Mr. MANN. It is a request for unanimous consent.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Missouri asks unanimous consent to discharge the Committee on Accounts from further consideration of the resolution and consider the same at this time.

Mr. LLOYD. Mr. Speaker, in order to explain the necessity for this resolution I ask that the following letter from Senator FLETCHER, who is chairman of that joint committee, be read by the Clerk.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the Clerk will read the letter.

The Clerk read as follows:

SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES,
JOINT COMMITTEE ON PRINTING,
June 3, 1913.

Hon. JAMES T. LLOYD,
Chairman Committee on Accounts,
House of Representatives.

DEAR MR. LLOYD: I desire to call your attention to the inclosed resolution (S. Con. Res. 2) providing for a stenographer, at $75 per month, for the Joint Committee on Printing. This resolution was introduced by me on behalf of the joint committee, and I most earnestly recommend its favorable consideration by your committee. The resolution was reported favorably by the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate and agreed to by the Senate on June 2, 1913 (CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, p. 2089).

The Joint Committee on Printing, as provided for by law (28 Stat. L., 601), consists of three Members of the Senate and three Members of the House. Its organization and duties are separate and distinct from those of the Committee on Printing of either House. The joint committee is, in fact, a board of directors for the Government Printing Office. Its principal duties, as prescribed by statute, are:

1. To fix upon standards of papers for the public printing and binding.
2. To receive bids and award contracts for the purchase of paper. (Under these contracts about $1,250,000 worth of paper is bought annually.)
3. To authorize open-market purchases of paper.
4. To hear and decide appeals relating to paper.
5. To authorize purchases of machinery and equipment in excess of $1,000 in any one instance.
6. To authorize contracts for illustrations in excess of $1,200.

7. To supervise award of contracts for materials and supplies.
8. To authorize contracts for storage room for the Printing Office.
9. To control the arrangement and style of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD and the indexing of the same.
10. To supervise the compilation of the Congressional Directory, memorial addresses, abridgment of messages and documents, and various other publications which Congress from time to time orders printed under the direction of the Joint Committee on Printing.
11. To supervise the publications of the Patent Office.
12. To supervise illustrations for the Agricultural Yearbook.
13. To issue orders for reprints within $200 limit of cost.
14. To select bindings for extra copies and for congressional and library sets of public documents.
15. To regulate editions in which congressional documents shall be printed.
16. To determine charges against the congressional allotment for printing in certain cases.
17. To regulate the sale of stereotype plates.
18. To remedy any neglect or delay in the public printing and binding.

For a number of years up to last August the clerk of the joint committee was assisted in his work by an assistant secretary and a stenographer in the employ of the Printing Investigation Commission. Since the discontinuance of that commission the joint committee has had only one clerk to do its work. It is impossible to keep the work of the committee up to date without the assistance of a stenographer who should be capable of performing certain other clerical duties. The joint committee of necessity has its own office in the Capitol and is required to keep extensive records and files. The clerks of the Senate and House Committees on Printing have their own duties to perform and are not available for the work of the joint committee, which keeps its clerk busy in Washington throughout the entire year.

If you have any hesitation or doubt about the matter, I would thank you for an opportunity to submit additional argument. Thanking you for an early consideration of the resolution I beg to remain,

Very respectfully, yours.

DUNCAN U. FLETCHER, Chairman.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, I desire to inquire of the gentleman from Missouri if he knows just what help the Joint Committee on Printing has?

Mr. LLOYD. They have one clerk.

Mr. MANN. And what help the Senate and House Committees on Printing have?

Mr. LLOYD. Prior to the present time they have had a clerk, an assistant clerk, and a stenographer.

Mr. FITZGERALD. And Congress, in the investigation of conditions, eliminated these employees?

Mr. LLOYD. Eliminated the assistant clerk and the stenographer.

Mr. FITZGERALD. And now it is proposed to restore the stenographer and the clerk—to restore both?

Mr. LLOYD. Not both.

Mr. FITZGERALD. To restore one. Mr. Speaker, this matter is one which was very carefully investigated by the Committee on Appropriations in connection with the legislative bill.

A situation was disclosed which resulted in these positions being eliminated. I do not propose to discuss what the situation was, but the same men constituting a commission on printing, a Joint Committee on Printing, and two separate Committees of the House and Senate on Printing—the same individuals doing work that was so related that it had to be practically done by one organization—under the guise of these four different organizations, three, at least——

Mr. MANN. Two committee of the House and of the Senate—one Committee on Printing and a joint commission.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Under each one of these different guises obtained clerical assistance, claimed to be rendered necessary. Regardless of the merits of this proposition, which I do not care to discuss at this time, I have never known of an attempt being made to fasten a charge upon the contingent fund of the House by resolution requiring the concurrent action of the Senate, and I am not willing that we should initiate such a thing at this time, even if we can do so.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Yes.

Mr. MANN. Does the gentleman recall any instance where the House out of its contingent fund has paid an employee named by a distinguished Member of the Senate, or vice versa?

Mr. FITZGERALD. No.

Mr. MANN. Of course there can only be one stenographer. He will be named by either the House Committee on Printing or the Senate Committee on Printing, and in either case they are calling upon the contingent fund of the other body to pay the salary.

Mr. LLOYD. This joint committee, as I understand it, is a committee composed of members of both Houses, three from each. I do not know, of course, whether this stenographer which is claimed to be necessary will be selected by the House members or by the Senate members.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, in view of what transpired in the past, after careful investigation of the committee of the two Houses, we were unwilling to continue the employees that had been provided by Congress for this joint committee.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, is the gentleman from Missouri able to say to the House now what employees the House Committee on Printing has and what employees the Senate Committee on Printing has?

Mr. LLOYD. The House Committee on Printing has that which they are authorized to have under the concurrent law.

Mr. MANN. What are they?

Mr. LLOYD. Just at this moment I can not answer; I know they have at least a clerk.

Mr. MANN. A clerk and a janitor, and the Senate committee has a clerk, an assistant clerk, and a janitor. Now, what duties does the House Committee on Printing have apart from the duties of the Joint Committee on Printing?

Mr. LLOYD. Mr. Speaker, as I understand the matter, the House Committee on Printing is a distinct organization of the House. There is a Senate committee that is a distinct organization of the Senate, and then there is a joint committee, which is composed of the committee of the House and the committee of the Senate, and that makes the joint committee. Now, whether they do business separately or not I am not in a position to say; I do not know.

Mr. MANN. Well, the House Committee on Printing and the Senate Committee on Printing combined constitute the Joint Committee on Printing.

Mr. LLOYD. That is right.

Mr. MANN. The House Committee on Printing reports on resolutions concerning the printing of documents occasionally, and has some work in that connection. The Senate committee does the same thing. Those are all the individual duties that they have to perform. The rules only provide for the standing Joint Committee on Printing, to consist of three members. The only provision under the rules for the House committee at all is the joint committee. Now, as a matter of fact, three members on the part of the House joint committee act separately on resolutions relating to printing that are reported to the House, and it is idle to say that the employees of the House Committee on Printing, the House joint committee, and the Senate joint committee are not supposed to do the work of the joint committee. That is what they are there for.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. FITZGERALD. I object.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York objects.

LOANING CERTAIN TENTS FOR THE USE OF THE CONFEDERATE VETERANS' REUNION, BRUNSWICK, GA.

The SPEAKER. The Chair lays before the House House joint resolution 98, which the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. WALKER] introduced, which the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. HOWARD] called up, and to which the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. FOWLER] objected; and he having withdrawn his objection, it is called up on motion of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. FOWLER], who asks unanimous consent for its immediate consideration. The Clerk will report the joint resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

House joint resolution (H. J. Res. 98) authorizing the Secretary of War to loan certain tents for the use of the Confederate Veterans' Reunion, to be held at Brunswick, Ga., in July, 1913.

Resolved, etc., That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized to loan, at his discretion, to the executive committee of the Confederate Veterans' Reunion, to be held at Brunswick, Ga., in the month of July, 1913, such tents, with necessary poles, ridges, and pins, as may be required at said reunion: Provided, That no expense shall be caused the United States Government by the delivery and return of said property, the same to be delivered to said committee designated at such time prior to the holding of said reunion as may be agreed upon by the Secretary of War and J. G. Weatherly, general chairman of said executive committee: And provided further, That the Secretary of War shall, before delivering such property, take from said J. G. Weatherly a good and sufficient bond for the safe return of said property in good order and condition, and the whole without expense to the United States.

The Clerk read the following committee amendment:

Page 1, line 7, after the word "pins," insert the words "and also such cots and blankets."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of this resolution?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would like to ask any member of the Committee on Military Affairs here whether the inclusion of the words "cots and blankets" is a new proposition, or whether it has been customary in the past to provide them along with the tents? I should dislike to see Congress go any further in reference to the loan of tents.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Georgia [Mr. HUGHES] is a member of the Committee on Military Affairs. He has just come in the Hall and probably knows.

Mr. HUGHES of Georgia. I am not now a member of that committee, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I shall not object, but I say if this is an innovation with reference to the loan of blankets, I think the next time the matter comes up on a request for unanimous consent objection will be made to it.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. CALLAWAY. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, a number of these resolutions have passed through since I have been a Member of the House without this amendment. If the gentleman from Illinois will offer the resolution without that amendment in reference to cots and blankets, I shall not object. I do object to the cots and blankets business, because I think it is an innovation.

Mr. HARDWICK. What is the objection to it? There is nothing wrong in it.

Mr. CALLAWAY. Oh, I think there is——

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas serves notice on the gentleman from Illinois that unless he leaves the amendment out he will object.

Mr. MANN. I suggest to the gentleman from Texas that my colleague from Illinois calls this matter up as a matter of courtesy, without having charge of the resolution in the way of being reported, and he can not make any agreement very well in reference to it. The committee amendment could be voted down or adopted. I do not see how anybody could make any agreement about this.

The SPEAKER. The amendment would have to be voted down to comply with the demand of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. CALLAWAY]. Of course, it would be necessary to have the unanimous consent first. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment.

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the resolution.

The resolution was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

GETTYSBURG REUNION.

Mr. WILLIS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the resolution introduced by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. FOWLER], relative to the payment of the expenses of certain soldiers to the celebration at Gettysburg on July 4, 1913.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. WILLIS] asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of a resolution which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Joint resolution appropriating $4,000 to defray traveling expenses of soldiers of the Civil War, now residing in the District of Columbia, from Washington, D. C., to Gettysburg, Pa., and return.

Resolved, etc., That to defray the traveling expenses of all honorably discharged soldiers of the Civil War and of all soldiers of the Confederate armies who rendered honorable service therein, now residing in the District of Columbia, from Washington, D. C., to Gettysburg, Pa., and return, to enable such soldiers to attend the celebration of the fiftieth anniversary of the Battle of Gettysburg, to be held at Gettysburg July 1, 2, 3, and 4, 1913, there is appropriated, one-half out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated and one-half out of the revenues of the District of Columbia, the sum of $4,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary.

That such appropriation shall be expended by a commission consisting of the Secretary of War; Col. Thomas S. Hopkins, past commander of the Grand Army of the Republic, Department of the Potomac; and Capt. D. B. Mull, ex-commander of the United Confederate Veterans, of a post in Georgia, residents of the District of Columbia.

That said commission is authorized to adopt such rules for the determination of the persons entitled to transportation hereunder as they may deem proper.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. CALLAWAY. I object.

Mr. FOWLER. Mr. Speaker, I trust the gentleman will withhold his objection for a couple of minutes.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. FOWLER] requests the gentleman from Texas to withhold his objection for a couple of minutes.

Mr. CALLAWAY. I can not do that.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. FOWLER. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 5 o'clock and 45 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until Friday, June 27, 1913, at 12 o'clock noon.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, submitting a schedule of useless papers in the Treasury Department (H. Doc. No. 104), was taken from the Speaker's table, referred to the Committee on Disposition of Useless Executive Papers, and ordered to be printed.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII, bills and resolutions were severally reported from committees, delivered to the clerk, and referred to the several calendars therein named, as follows:

Mr. PADGETT, from the Committee on Naval Affairs, to which was referred the bill (S. 2272) providing for an increase in the number of midshipmen at the United States Naval Academy after June 30, 1913, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 25), which said bill and report were referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. HOWARD, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to which was referred the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 98) authorizing the Secretary of War to loan certain tents for the use of the Confederate Veterans' Reunion, to be held at Brunswick, Ga., in July, 1913, reported the same with an amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 26), which said joint resolution and report were ordered to be printed.

Mr. CLARK of Florida, from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 6383) to amend section 19 of an act entitled "An act to increase the limit of cost of certain public buildings; to authorize the enlargement, extension, remodeling, or improvement of certain public buildings; to authorize the erection and completion of public buildings; to authorize the purchase of sites for public buildings, and for other purposes," approved March 4, 1913, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 27), which said bill and report were referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. CLAYTON, from the Committee on the Judiciary, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 32) to provide for the appointment of an additional district judge in and for the eastern district of Pennsylvania, reported the same with the amendments of the Senate, accompanied by a report (No. 29), which said bill and report were referred to the Union Calendar.

He also, from the same committee, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 6141) providing for mediation, conciliation, and arbitration in controversies between certain employers and their employees, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 30), which said bill and report were referred to the House Calendar.

PUBLIC BILLS, RESOLUTIONS, AND MEMORIALS.

Under clause 3 of Rule XXII, bills, resolutions, and memorials were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. SPARKMAN: A bill (H. R. 6433) to relocate the headquarters of the customs district of Florida; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

SENATE.

FRIDAY, June 27, 1913.

The Senate met at 2 o'clock p. m.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. Forrest J. Prettyman, D. D.

The Secretary proceeded to read the Journal of yesterday's proceedings when, on request of Mr. STONE and by unanimous consent, the further reading was dispensed with and the Journal was approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by J. C. South, its Chief Clerk, announced that the House had passed the following bills and joint resolutions, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

H. R. 1966. An act to amend an act entitled "An act to prohibit the importation and use of opium for other than medicinal purposes," approved February 9, 1909;

H. R. 6282. An act to provide for the registration of, with collectors of internal revenue, and to impose a special tax upon all persons who produce, import, manufacture, compound, deal in, dispense, sell, distribute, or give away opium or coca leaves, their salts, derivatives, or preparations, and for other purposes;

H. J. Res. 103. Joint resolution appropriating $4,000 to defray traveling expenses of soldiers of the Civil War, now residing in the District of Columbia, from Washington, D. C., to Gettysburg, Pa., and return; and

H. J. Res. 98. Joint resolution authorizing the Secretary of War to loan certain tents for the use of the Confederate Veterans' Reunion, to be held at Brunswick, Ga., in July, 1913.

PETITIONS.

Mr. PERKINS presented a petition of the Chamber of Commerce of San Francisco, Cal., praying for the establishment on the Pacific coast of an agency of the Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce, Department of Commerce, which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I present a joint resolution of the Legislature of Wisconsin, which I ask may be printed in the RECORD, and referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

There being no objection, the joint resolution was referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Joint resolution memorializing Congress to amend section 5219 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, relating to the taxation by the several States of shares of stock in national banking associations.

Whereas under the provisions of the national banking act the several States are permitted to include all the shares in any national banking association in the valuation of the personal property of the owner or holder of such shares in assessing taxes imposed by the authority of the State within which the association is located; and

Whereas it is the policy of this State to substitute for the system of direct personal property taxation upon intangible property a system of income taxation; and

Whereas it is but just and right that all corporations engaged in banking should be assessed in the same manner and at the same rate as domestic corporations whose income is derived from intangible property and moneyed capital: Therefore be it

Resolved by the assembly (the senate concurring), That we respectfully memorialize the Congress of the United States so to amend the national banking act as to permit those States in which a system of income taxation shall have been substituted in whole or in part for direct personal-property taxation upon intangible property to assess and tax the income of national banking associations in the same manner and at the same rate as shall be provided in respect to the income of domestic corporations derived from intangible property or moneyed capital: Be it further

Resolved, That a copy of the foregoing be immediately transmitted by the secretary of state to the President of the United States, the President of the Senate of the United States, the Speaker of the House of Representatives, and to each of the Senators and Representatives of this State.

MERLIN HULL,
Speaker of the Assembly.
H. C. MARTIN,
President of the Senate.
C. E. SHAEFER,
Chief Clerk of the Assembly.
F. M. WYLIE,
Chief Clerk of the Senate.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Bills were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. STERLING:

A bill (S. 2651) providing for the purchase and disposal of certain lands containing kaolin, kaolinite, fuller's earth, and other minerals within portions of Indian reservations heretofore opened to settlement and entry; to the Committee on Public Lands.

By Mr. BRISTOW:

A bill (S. 2652) granting a pension to Mary A. Pierce; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. CLAPP:

A bill (S. 2653) for the relief of the Medawakanton and Wahpakoota Bands of Sioux Indians, otherwise known as the Santee Sioux Indians; to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

A bill (S. 2654) granting an increase of pension to Louisa Graham; and

A bill (S. 2655) granting an increase of pension to Louise Compton; to the Committee on Pensions.

INDIAN APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. STONE. Mr. President, I present the conference report on House bill 1917, the Indian appropriation bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read the report.

Mr. GALLINGER. The report has already been read in full. I ask unanimous consent that it be not read again.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The reading will be dispensed with, if there be no objection.

Mr. STONE. Mr. President, I was going to ask that the reading of the report be dispensed with, for the reason that it was printed this morning in the RECORD of the House proceedings, and for the further reason that a printed copy of the report has been laid on the desk of each Member of the Senate. However, I wish to make a very brief statement, that it may appear in the RECORD. On yesterday I presented this report, and found after the reading of it had been commenced that through the error of a stenographer who had written it up one of the amendments had been omitted, and I asked to withdraw it that the correction might be made. I again presented it, and on being interrogated by the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. FALL] I stated that another error in the report had been discovered, and I withdrew it the second time. That was my mistake. The item about which the Senator from New Mexico inquired, as a matter of fact, was already incorporated.

I desire, in justice to the clerks of the Senate committee, to say that the mistake at that time was my own entirely. I will take this occasion to say that I think those officials are among the most efficient in the service of the Senate.

Now, Mr. President, if there is nothing more to be said, I move that the report of the conference committee be agreed to.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, before the vote is taken on agreeing to the conference report, I wish simply to say that yesterday I interrogated the Senator from Missouri [Mr. STONE] as to whether or not any new matter had been inserted in the conference report. The Senator gave assurances that so far as he knew no new matter had been incorporated in the report. I have examined it with a good deal of care, Mr. President, and I find that while there are one or two inconsequential matters that might be questioned the report is not subject to any criticism on that point.

There is one other matter, Mr. President, I want to call attention to. When the bill was under consideration in the Senate a paragraph was in the House bill reading as follows.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. On what page?

For the suppression of the traffic in intoxicating liquors and peyote among Indians, $100,000.

The Senate committee recommended that the words "and peyote" be stricken out. I took occasion to inquire what peyote was, believing that very few Senators had any more knowledge on the subject than I had. The Senator from New Mexico [Mr. FALL] gave what he thought was a correct definition of the term, saying, in substance, that it was a medicinal plant that the Indians use for purposes of exhilaration if not intoxication. The explanation was satisfactory to me, but in the morning mail I received a letter from Frank W. Clancy, an old friend of mine, who was a Delegate from the Territory of New Mexico some years ago and who is now the attorney general of the State of New Mexico. Mr. Clancy, having noticed the inquiry I made, in this letter illuminates the subject, and I am going to ask consent to have it read for two purposes. First, for the purpose of informing all Senators as to precisely what this herb is; and, second, for the purpose of testing the well-known abilities of our accomplished reading clerk to correctly pronounce a good many words he will find in the letter. I ask unanimous consent that it be read.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the Secretary will read the letter.

The Secretary read as follows:

STATE OF NEW MEXICO.
OFFICE OF THE ATTORNEY GENERAL,
Santa Fe, June 23, 1913.

Hon. J. H. GALLINGER,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR.: In recent dispatches I have noticed that on the floor of the Senate you asked for information as to what "peyote" is, and while the answer given is correct as far as it goes, it was not sufficient to give you a full idea of the character and uses of this plant. It is, of course, not a matter of great practical importance, but sometimes a man may take greater interest in such things than in those of more serious import and I can imagine that your professional experience might prompt you to a desire to have knowledge of such dangerous vegetable growths.

The word is not Spanish and I do not believe that it can be found in any standard Spanish dictionary. I have examined at least three without finding it. The only place where I have found anything about it is in the Diccionario de Aztequismos, a very remarkable work by Cecilio A. Robelo, of Cuernavaca. He gives it in two ways, "peyote" and "piote," the original word being "peyotl." He defines it as being a medicinal plant which has various and pleasing (or perplexing) uses, and says that some medical men consider it a substitute for cocaine.

In a note as to this word he says that Father Sahagún, speaking of certain herbs which are intoxicating, says, "There is another herb like prickly pears which is called peiotl, is white, and grows toward the northern portions; those who eat or drink it see visions terrifying or laughable; this drunkenness lasts two or three days and then stops; and it is a common food of the Chichimecas, as it nourishes them and gives courage to fight and takes away fear, thirst, and hunger; and they say it guards them against all danger." The author further says that Dr. Hernandez alone enumerates two kinds of peyote, that of Xochimilco and that of Zacatecas; but at the present time it has been found in many parts of the Republic. In their physiological effects they are quite different. Pharmacy has extracted from the peyote of Zacatecas (Anhalonium lewinii) as many as four alkaloids. The Indians of Tepic use it as a strengthening medicine. They rub themselves with the ground root along the joints (or articulations), and thus they are able to travel great distances without fatigue. It is also stated that the technical Latin names for this plant, evidently of several varieties of it, are Anhalonium fissuratum, Anhalonium williamsi,

Senecio callophyllus, Senecio cardiophyllus, Senecio petasitis, Senecio hartwegii, and Cotyledon cæspitosa.

The effects of peyote are so serious that the Spanish authorities prohibited its use, as will appear by reference to one of the old Spanish archives which are now in the Library of Congress, which contains the record in eight folios of a prosecution against an Indian of Taos for having drunk the herb called peyote. The record of this proceeding covers 9 or 10 days, from February 3, 1720, to February 12, 1720, and is numbered 306 in an index which was made by Prof. Bandelier, but the arrangement and numbering in the Library of Congress are different. If you have any curiosity about it you can readily obtain a copy or translation, or both, from the Library. It is many years since I saw this document and I do not recall any of the details, but remember only that it was clearly a criminal offense for the Indians to make use of peyote.

Yours, very truly, FRANK W. CLANCY.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I wish to express my gratification at the charming and satisfactory manner in which the reading clerk read that document.

I wish further to say, Mr. President, that had I received that letter before we agreed to strike out the words "and peyote" in the Indian appropriation bill I think I should have made a strenuous effort to have retained them. Manifestly it is a dangerous drug. It seems that it makes Indians "see visions," and we all know what people are liable to do when they see visions. But as the matter has progressed to the point of having a conference report submitted, and it is impossible to make any amendment to the bill, I will content myself by expressing gratification that it has been my privilege to give so much instruction to the Senate as to what peyote really is.

Mr. STONE. I should think, Mr. President, that anything so mysterious as that described in that letter ought to appear in some bill somewhere.

Mr. FALL. Mr. President, in view of the fact that my explanation of the ordinary use of peyote brought forth this learned paper from a gentleman for whom I have the very highest respect as a legal authority, I will say that if I had known that peyote had so many different names I might possibly have been more impressed with the subject myself.

Peyote, as it is called in our southwestern country, is a prickly pear. It is the bud of the prickly pear. I have never heard that it had any cocaine nor was it so claimed by the surgeons or physicians in the Indian Department who have investigated the matter, but it undoubtedly has some intoxicating effect. It is used in religious observances.

Mr. STONE. I renew my motion, Mr. President, that the conference report be agreed to.

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President, I do not rise for the purpose of delaying action on the bill more than a single moment. I know that the chairman of the committee has been most patient in his work; I simply wish to express my disapproval of the language as it is expressed in the report in changing section No. 26——

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. On what page?

Mr. GRONNA. It is on page 89 of the bill.

Mr. STONE. Will the Senator advise me again to what amendment he refers,

Mr. GRONNA. I refer to section 26, the new section added by the Senate committee.

While I do not intend to delay the adoption of the report, I simply want to express my disapproval of the change of that amendment.

Mr. STERLING. Mr. President, I do not rise to oppose at all, or to obstruct in any way, the adoption of the report, but in view of my connection with an amendment introduced, which was adopted by the Senate and which was stricken out in the conference, I wish to call attention to some statements that have been made in the RECORD. I refer to the amendment providing for the payment of the claim of the heirs of John W. West.

I find, on referring to the RECORD of the 20th, during the course of some remarks by Congressman BURKE, of South Dakota, this colloquy:

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?
Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Yes.
Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Is the gentleman aware that the John W. West claim, which has been defeated several times in this House, has been put on this bill?
Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. I understand that it is one of the amendments.

The Indian appropriation bill was then under discussion in the other House, and inquiry was being made as to certain amendments which had been adopted by the Senate. This is the colloquy with reference to this particular amendment.

Mr. President, the statement implied in the question and in the answer is altogether misleading, and, in order that no person may be misled in the future in the other House or in the Senate in case this amendment should ever again be introduced, I wish briefly to call attention to an abstract of the record in regard to this claim. Instead of this amendment as it appears here having been defeated several times in the other House, as might be inferred from this colloquy, this, in a few words, is the history of the claim in the other House and in the Senate: The bill has been many times before Congress. It was before Congress at every session from the Forty-eighth to the Fifty-fourth Congress, both inclusive. During the Fiftieth Congress the senior Senator from Minnesota [Mr. NELSON], then a Member of the House, introduced the bill and it was favorably reported by the committee, but no action was taken by the other House, no vote being reached.

In the Fifty-fourth Congress H. R. 4515 was reported from the committee unanimously and favorably by Mr. Little, of Arkansas.

As to the other bills introduced during these several Congresses, they were referred to committees, and there were no reports upon them. No other bills covering this matter were introduced until the Sixty-first Congress, and then there was the only adverse report ever made on this bill.

Why was that adverse report made? The bill was not considered on its merits at the time. The report shows that the evidence submitted at that time was incomplete and fragmentary. While there was then a subcommittee appointed to consider the bill, the subcommittee never made a report on the bill; at least, it never made any written report. If there was a report made, it was simply an oral report to the full committee.

A bill was introduced in the Sixty-second Congress, referred to a subcommittee, and received a unanimous report at the hands of that subcommittee and was favorably reported to the House. Another bill was introduced and favorably reported by a subcommittee in January, 1913, but the bill never reached a vote in the other House. It was then agreed that the matter should be referred to the Court of Claims. The agreement made at that time was a compromise agreement reached in the House committee, the bill having passed the Senate in the shape of an amendment to an appropriation bill.

It was not, however, referred to the Court of Claims. It came before the Senate in this Congress first in a bill introduced by myself; secondly, in an amendment to an appropriation bill submitted by the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. MCCUMBER], and then as an amendment finally proposed by myself to an appropriation bill.

What, then, has been its course in the Senate? It passed first in the Sixty-first Congress, once as a bill and again as an amendment to an appropriation bill. It passed the Senate twice in the Sixty-second Congress, and passed once again in the Senate in the Sixty-third Congress.

So it has been reported favorably not less than four times by a House committee and has passed the Senate five times.

I think this makes a complete answer to the statement that this bill has been several times defeated.

Now, Mr. President, I simply want to submit in connection with what I have said a short extract from the report of the House subcommittee that last passed upon this bill, that report having been made in January, 1913, and will ask to have it printed in connection with what I have said.

The VICE PRESIDENT. If there is no objection, that will be done.

The extract referred to is as follows:

This judgment or award, final and conclusive under the treaty and binding upon all parties, has never been paid. The doctrine of res adjudicata clearly applies to this award, whether considered from a judicial, executive, or legislative point of view. That doctrine amounts simply to this, that a cause of action once finally determined between the parties on the merits by a competent tribunal can not afterwards be litigated by a new proceeding either before the same or any other tribunal (100 Mass., 409); it is a general principle that a decision by a court of competent jurisdiction of matters put in issue by the pleadings is binding and conclusive upon all other courts of concurrent power and between the parties and their privies (168 U. S., 48); and it is a principle of public policy as well as a matter of private right (34 N. J. Eq., 535).

The rate of interest fixed in the bill, namely, 5 per cent per annum, is the same rate allowed the Cherokee Nation on its claims against the United States Government, arising in part out of the same treaty, by the Supreme Court of the United States in Cherokee Nation v. United States (202 U. S., 101), wherein the court allowed interest from the date the Government took the property of the Cherokee Nation.

The United States was a party to the treaty. It guaranteed fulfillment of the treaty provisions. The commission was appointed pursuant to the terms of the treaty. The award was regularly made. By the terms of the treaty it was a finality. The Government of the United States can not now shirk its responsibility, particularly as two Secretaries of the Interior—the officer of this Government whose duty it is to supervise such matters, and men whose legal ability and fairness all men must concede—examined into the award with care and approved it in all respects. The Government of the United States is in honor bound to see that this award is paid.

There has been no negligence on the part of the claimants in prosecuting their claim. They are not in fault. The delay in the payment of the award has been due to the failure of the House of Representatives to concur in legislation directing its payment, which has frequently come before it for action. On account of the long delay, for which Congress alone is responsible, your committee urges action at this session in order that the beneficiaries—Cherokee Indians—who have already waited for justice at our hands for many years, may no longer be subjected to the injustice which they have so long endured.

A. W. RUCKER.
H. T. HELGESEN.
THOMAS F. KONOP.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the report of the committee of conference.

The report was agreed to, as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 1917) making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Bureau of Indian Affairs, for fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes, and for other purposes, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1914, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendments numbered 5, 8, 13, 14, 16, 17, 19, 20, 22, 23, 24, 26, 30, 31, 38, 40, 41, 45, 46, and 50.

That the House recede from its disagreements to the amendments of the Senate numbered 1, 2, 3, 4, 6, 7, 9, 12, 15, 18, 27, 32, 34, 37, 39, 42, 43, 44, 47, 48, 49, 52, and 54, and agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 36: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 36, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed to be stricken out by the amendment of the Senate insert the following: "That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized in his discretion to extend each of the deferred payments on the town lots of the north addition to the city of Lawton, Okla., one year from the date on which they become due under existing law: Provided, That no additional extension shall be granted: And provided further, That no title shall issue to any such purchaser until all deferred payments, interest, and taxes have been made as provided in the act of March 27, 1908 (35 Stat., p. 49), and the act of February 18, 1909 (35 Stat., p. 637)"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 51: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 51, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the proposed amendment of the Senate, insert the following: "A commission consisting of two members of the Senate Committee on Indian Affairs, to be appointed by the chairman of said committee, and two Members of the House of Representatives, to be appointed by the Speaker, is hereby created for the purpose of investigating the necessity and feasibility of establishing, equipping, and maintaining a tuberculosis sanitarium in New Mexico for the treatment of tuberculous Indians, and to also investigate the necessity and feasibility of procuring impounded waters for the Yakima Indian Reservation or the construction of an irrigation system upon said reservation, to impound the waters of the Yakima River, Washington, for the reclamation of the lands on said reservation and for the use and benefit of the Indians of said reservation. That said commission shall have full power to make the investigations herein provided for, and shall have authority to subpœna and compel the attendance of witnesses, administer oaths, take testimony, incur expenses, employ clerical help, and do and perform all acts necessary to make a thorough and complete investigation of the subjects herein mentioned, and that said commission shall report to Congress on or before January 1, 1914: Provided, That one-half of all necessary expenses incident to and in connection with the making of the investigation herein provided for, including traveling expenses of the members of the commission, shall be paid from the contingent fund of the House of Representatives and one-half from the contingent fund of the Senate on vouchers therefor signed by the chairman of the said commission, who shall be designated by the members of the said commission." And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 53: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 53, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In line 3 of the proposed amendment insert the word "actually" after the word "land" and strike out "$400," in line 7 of the amendment, and insert "$250" in lieu thereof, so as to read as follows:

"That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized to purchase for the Skagit Tribe of Indians in the State of Washington the tract of land actually used by them as a tribal burial ground, and there is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $250, or so much thereof as may be necessary, to carry out this provision."

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 55: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 55, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the amendment proposed insert the following:

"SEC. 26. On or before the 1st day of July, 1914, the Secretary of the Interior shall cause a system of bookkeeping to be installed in the Bureau of Indian Affairs, which will afford a ready analysis of expenditures by appropriations and allotments and by units of the service, showing for each class of work or activity carried on the expenditures for the operation of the service, for repairs and preservation of property, for new and additional property, salaries and wages of employees, and for other expenditures. Provision shall be made by the Secretary of the Interior for further analysis of each of the foregoing classes of expenditures if, in his judgment, he shall deem it advisable.

"Annually, after July 1, 1914, a detailed statement of expenditures, as hereinbefore described, shall be incorporated in the Annual Report of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs and transmitted by the Secretary of the Interior to Congress on or before the first Monday in December.

"Before any appropriation for the Indian service is obligated or expended, the Secretary of the Interior shall make allotments thereof in conformity with the intent and purpose of this act, and such allotments shall not be altered or modified except with his approval.

"After July 1, 1914, the estimates for appropriations for the Indian service submitted by the Secretary of the Interior shall be accompanied by a detailed statement, classified in the manner prescribed in the first paragraph of this section, showing the purposes for which the appropriations are required."

And the Senate agree to the same.

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED.

The following bills were severally read twice by their titles and referred to the Committee on Finance:

H. R. 1966. An act to amend an act entitled "An act to prohibit the importation and use of opium for other than medicinal purposes," approved February 9, 1909; and

H. R. 6282. An act to provide for the registration of, with collectors of internal revenue, and to impose a special tax upon all persons who produce, import, manufacture, compound, deal in, dispense, sell, distribute, or give away opium or coca leaves, their salts, derivatives, or preparations, and for other purposes.

EXPENSES OF DISTRICT VETERANS TO GETTYSBURG, PA.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair lays before the Senate a joint resolution received this day from the House of Representatives, which the Secretary will read.

The joint resolution (H. J. Res. 103) appropriating $4,000 to defray traveling expenses of soldiers of the Civil War now residing in the District of Columbia, from Washington, D. C., to Gettysburg, Pa., and return, was read twice by its title.

Mr. KERN. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the joint resolution just laid before the Senate.

Mr. FALL. Mr. President, I do not know that I have any objection to that joint resolution, but on yesterday I gave notice that I would call up Senate joint resolution No. 43 at the close of morning business, not, however, to interfere with the consideration of the conference report on the Indian appropriation bill.

Mr. KERN. This is a joint resolution to appropriate $4,000 to pay the expenses of certain veterans to the Gettysburg celebration.

Mr. FALL. I have no objection whatever to that.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I simply want to say to the Senator that I think the proper procedure would be to have the joint resolution referred to the committee and let the committee speedily report it to the Senate. Joint resolutions and bills coming from the other House are always referred to a committee. If the Senator from Indiana has no objection, I think that would be the proper course to pursue as to this joint resolution. I think it can be reported back from the committee in a very few minutes as I know of no objection whatever to it.

Mr. KERN. To what committee should the joint resolution be referred?

Mr. SMOOT. To the Committee on Appropriations, I think.

Mr. KERN. The chairman of that committee is not now present.

Mr. BRISTOW. I should like to inquire of the Senator from Indiana if this joint resolution provides for paying the expenses of the veterans in the District of Columbia to Gettysburg and return?

Mr. KERN. I understand that is the purpose of the joint resolution.

Mr. BRISTOW. Why should the expenses of the veterans in the District of Columbia be paid any more than those of veterans living in the States?

Mr. VARDAMAN. The States have made similar provision as to their veterans.

Mr. KERN. The States have done so.

Mr. BRISTOW. If the States have paid such expenses, then, of course, I think the District should do so; but if the National Government pays the expenses of veterans from the District, it seems that all veterans in the States ought to be treated in exactly the same way.

Mr. KERN. I am quite sure that the Indiana Legislature has made an appropriation for the payment of the expenses of the veterans living in that State.

Mr. GALLINGER. Most of the States have done so.

Mr. KERN. Most of the States have done so. The Southern States have also made appropriations for this purpose.

Mr. NORRIS. The joint resolution provides that one half the expenses shall be paid out of the District funds and the other half out of the Government funds.

Mr. BRISTOW. It is the same as though it came from a State treasury.

Mr. NORRIS. The same as if it came from a State.

Mr. VARDAMAN. If the Senator from Indiana will pardon the suggestion, I will say, in reply to the question of the Senator from Kansas [Mr. BRISTOW], that almost all of the States of the Republic have paid the expenses of the veterans attending the Gettysburg reunion. Mississippi is paying the expenses of her representatives there, and almost all the States in the Republic, so far as I know, are paying such expenses. I think the District of Columbia should pay the expenses of the veterans from this District.

Mr. BRISTOW. I have not the slightest objection to that. All I wanted was for the veterans in the States to have exactly the same treatment as the veterans in the District will receive.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the joint resolution?

Mr. SMOOT. I am not going to object to the present consideration of the joint resolution, but I want it distinctly understood that this is not to be considered as a precedent established by the Senate.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 103) appropriating $4,000 to defray the traveling expenses of soldiers of the Civil War now residing in the District of Columbia from Washington to Gettysburg, Pa., and return.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read the joint resolution.

The Secretary read the joint resolution, as follows:

Resolved, etc., That to defray the traveling expenses of all honorably discharged soldiers of the Civil War, and of all soldiers of the Confederate Armies who rendered honorable service therein now residing in the District of Columbia, from Washington, D. C., to Gettysburg, Pa., and return, to enable such soldiers to attend the celebration of the fiftieth anniversary of the Battle of Gettysburg, to be held at Gettysburg, July 1, 2, 3, and 4, 1913, there is appropriated, one-half out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated and one-half out of the revenues of the District of Columbia, the sum of $4,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary.
